FLESHERTON.

Mr. Wm. Hewgill, Jr., of Collingwood Township, gave us a call yesterday.

The Agricultural Editor will furnish spicy reports of the doings of Artemesia Council in future in these columns. Subscribe now; no ratepayer should be without The Advance.

We regret to learn of the illness of our genial young mail driver, Master Wm. Whelan. He has been unable to attend to his various duties for some time. We hope soon to see him around again.

Our good friend, Mr. Woodburn—of Glenfield Villa, Eugenia—sold a four month old pig to Mr. Munshaw this week, which weighed one hundred and forty-five pounds. 'Rah for Artemesia again!

Correction.

In publishing the names of the officers of Eugenia L.O L. last week, the name of Mr. Henry Meldrum appeared as W. M. instead of Henry Williams, and the number of members was placed at 35 instead of 38. One of our compositors accidentally made these mistakes in putting the manuscript into type.

Holland Municipal Election.

Mr. John Cameron was defeated in the contest for the Reeveship in this Township, and Dr. Oldham, of Chatsworth elected. Mr. Cameron was one of the most popular municipal men in the County and filled the position of Warden a few years ago. His defeat, therefore, by a young man like Dr. Oldenham, would seem to shew that the latter is a very popular and rising public man.

A New Feature.

As the Agricultural Editor purposes attending each meeting of Artemesia Township Council during the year 1887, full reports of the proceedings and deliberations of that body will be published in The Advance. This makes a new and interesting feature in our paper, and every ratepayer in the Township should subscribe now and get the full benefit.

A Political Division Court Clerk.

If the worthy Fifth Division Court Clerk were a politician, we know people who would raise a most tremendous howl. What then should be said about the Chatsworth Division Court Clerk, John McDonald, Esq., who recently stumped Centre Grey in the interest of Mr. Brown? Mr. McDonald was very anxious about two things, viz., that Neil McColman should keep in the field, and (2) that the said McColman should take a sufficient number of Tory votes from Capt. Rorke to let Mr. Brown sail in with flying colors at the head of the polls. He was disappointed in both cases, but that did not prevent him crowing long and loudly in the Owen Sound Advertiser about the Reform majority in Chatsworth and the Township of Holland generally. Wonder if John will crow as much over the defeat of Mr. John Cameron in the recent municipal election in Holland? Guess not.

At the Great Northern.

Mr. James T. Wilson's horse, "Young Climax," was awarded 1st prize in 3 year old Roadster class, and 2nd in Roadster, at the Great Northern Exhibition held in Collingwood last fall. Through an oversight this fact was not published before.

Obituary.

Mr. George C. Hind' nephew of Miss T. Hind of this village, died at Detroit on the 23rd inst. He was well known in this place, as he was reared on the old homestead near the village, and, after leaving school, spent three years in the employ of Mr. R. J. Sproule, as clerk in his store. He was married and lived in Detroit. He leaves a young wife and two children, who have the warm sympathy of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

A Station Yarn.

Wm. Walker and family have left Flesherton Station. This is the gentleman who was imported to the Station about the time of the School arbitration in the Town Hall here, and whose family helped to swell the number of school children in the surburban retreat. William, however, knew a thing of two, and the other day it became known that he was about to leave the depot for good. But William could not depart without leaving some remarkable "footprints in the sands of time." Accordingly the C.P.R. baggage man whispered something in William's ears and soon the whole neighborhood knew the purport of Jimmy's whisper. Of course William added considerably to Jimmy's yarn, so that by the time it reached our sanctum it was that outrageously incorrect we could not forbear a gentle snicker—although, be it remembered, the yarn was deliberately calculated to injure us. The whole yarn originated from a statement by the C.P.R. baggageman, that we had told him one story and the station agent another, about some freight on a Gordon press shipped to us last winter; while, at the same time, we could most solemnly and reverently take our affidavit, that we have no recollection whatever, of having so forgotten the position of our worthy friend, the station agent, as to speak to this insolent baggageman about matters which concerned simply the agent and ourself. And even if we had, the whole yarn is scarcely worthy the attention of a gossipy old grandmother, let alone the presumptuous and cocky baggageman, who has, on more than one occasion, exceeded his duties. William and Jimmy are fit companions truly, and ought forthwith to resolve themselves into a "Chestnut Combination" and make a tour of the Dominion.

The Auditors' Report.

Mr. Meldrum is quite correct in what he says about the Auditors' Reports for 1886. The copy furnished was made in double cash columns, but through some inadvertence the first two pages were run off on the press in single cash column; when, in order to have the whole pamphlet uniform, we continued the single columns throughout. This, it seems, has caused some confusion, and provoked a critical analysis of the pamphlet at the hands of Mr. A. Elliott on Nomination day. As Mr. Meldrum truly observes, "a little thought and a short exercise in simple addition is all that is necessary to satisfy any one that the report, even as printed, is quite correct." But the average critic is usually very slow to acknowledge himself in error, although his criticisms may have been the means of causing widespread misinterpretation.

AN AGREEABLE SURPRISE.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION TO MISS HOPKINS.

A young lady from Oakville has been engaged as Teacher in the junior department of the Flesherton Public Schools, and entered upon her duties last Monday. Through some misunderstanding with the Trustees, Miss Hopkins—the late efficient and popular Teacher of that department—was not re-engaged. Last evening there was quite a gathering at the residence of Mr. Geo. Keefer here, when a suitable present, accompanied by an address, was presented to Miss Hopkins on behalf of members of the Methodist church, Sabbath School, and the various Temperance organizations in the town—with all of which the talented young lady was prominently identified. The following is the address, which was read by A. R. Fawcett, of The Advance, the presentation being by Mrs. Gjerdrum:—

To Miss S. J. Hopkins:—Dear Madame,—On behalf of members of the various Temperance organizations in Flesherton, viz., Women's Christian Temperance Union, Royal Templars of Temperance, and Sons of Temperance, allow us to present you with this Watch as a slight token of the high esteem and respect in which you are held by us, individually and collectively. During your residence amongst us, we have learned to esteem and respect you for those estimable qualities of mind and heart which are only to be found in true womanhood. Your zealous, earnest, and persevering efforts in connection with the cause of Temperance have been recognized and appreciated at their true value; while your labors in those greater spheres of usefulness, the Church and the Sabbath School, have been, and are, deserving of the highest encomiums of all true disciples of the greatest of all Teachers—Jesus Christ.

We trust and believe, that in all your future life the slightest shadow or the darkest cloud will not deter you from following the noble, womanly line of action you have thus far so successfully pursued. Wishing you a bright, prosperous and happy new year, and assuring you of our best wishes for your future welfare.

Miss Hopkins made a brief but very happy reply, in which she thanked those who had thus remembered her most heartily and assured them that she would always have warm and pleasant recollections of her many friends in Flesherton.

Mr. Wm. Irwin, Principal of our Public Schools, while expressing his regret at the departure of Miss Hopkins from Flesherton, extended a cordial welcome to her successor, Miss Ganton. Mr. C. J. Sproule, spoke in a similar strain, after which the new teacher, Miss Ganton, was introduced to those present by Miss Hopkins.

Church Bells at Christmas.

"Wake me to-night, my mother, dear,
That I may hear
The Christmas bells, so soft and clear,
To high and low glad tidings tell,
How God the Father loved us well,
How God the Eternal Son
Came to undo what we had done;
How God the Paraclete,
Who in the chaste womb formed the Babe so sweet,
In power and glory came the birth to aid and greet.

"Wake me, that I the twelvemonth long
May bear the song
About with me in the world's throng;
That treasured joys of Christmas-tide
May with mine hour of gloom abide.
The Christmas Carol ring
Deep in my heart, when I would sing.
Each of the twelve good days
Its earnest yield of duteous love and praise,
Insuring happy months and hallowing common ways.

"Wake me again, my mother, dear,
That I may hear
The peal of the departing year.
O'i, well I love the step of time
Should move to that familiar chime;
Fair fall the tones that steep
The Old Year in the dews of sleep,
The New guide softly in,
With hopes to sweet, sad memories akin!
Long may that soothing cadence, ear, heart, conscience win!"

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

The row was this. Among the Boers assembled for the "nachtmaal" festival was a well-known giant named Van Zyl. This man's strength was a matter of public notoriety all over the country, and many were the feats which were told of him. Among others it was said that he could bear the weight of the after part of an African buck-waggon on his shoulders, with a load of three thousand pounds of corn upon it, while the wheels were greased. He stood about six foot seven high, weighed eighteen stone and a half, and had a double row of teeth. On the evening in question this remarkable specimen of humanity was sitting on his waggon-box with a pipe, of which the size was proportionate to his own, clinched firmly between his double row of teeth. About ten paces from him stood a young Englishman, also of large size, though he looked quite small beside the giant who was contemplating the phenomenon on the waggon-box, and wondering how much he measured round the chest. That young Englishman had just got off a newly-arrived waggon, and his name was Jeremy Jones.

To these advance a cringing Hottentot boy of small size. The Hottentot is evidently the servant or slave of the giant, and a man standing by Jeremy, who understands Dutch, informs him that he is telling his master that an ox has strayed. Slowly the giant rouses himself, and descending from the waggon-box seizes the trembling Tottie with one hand, and, taking a rim of buffalo-hide, lashes himself to the waggon-wheel.

"Now," remarked Jeremy's acquaintance, "you will see how a Boer deals with a nigger."

"You don't mean to say that great brute is going to beat that poor little devil?"

Just then a small fat woman put her head out of a tent pitched by the waggon, and inquired what the matter was. She was the giant's wife. On being informed of the straying of the ox, her wrath knew no bounds.

"Slaat em! slaat de swartsel!" (Thrash him! thrash the black creature), she cried out in a shrill voice, running to the waggon, and with her own fair hands drawing out a huge "sjambock," that is, a strip of prepared hippopotamus-hide, used to drive the after-oxen with, and giving it to her spouse, "Cut the liver out of the black devil!" she went on, "but mind you don't hit his head, or he won't be able to go to work afterward. Never mind about making the blood come; I have got lots of salt to rub in."

Her harangue, and the sight of the Hottentot tied to the wheel, had by this time attracted quite a crowd of Boers and Englishmen who were idling about the market-square.

"Softly, Vrouw, softly, I will thrash enough to satisfy even you, and we all know that must be very hard where a black creature is in question."

A roar of laughter from the Dutch people round greeted this sally of wit, and the giant, taking the sjambock with a good-humored smile, for he was, like most giants, easy-tempered by nature, lifted it, whirled his great arm, as thick as the leg of an average man, round his head, and brought it down on the back of the miserable Hottentot. The poor wretch yelled with pain, and no wonder, for the greasy old shirt he wore was divided clean in two, together with the skin beneath it, and the blood was pouring from the gash.

"Aliamachter! dat is een neker shaat!" (Almighty! that was a nice one), said the old woman, at which the crowd laughed again.

But there was one man who did not laugh, and that man was Jeremy. On the contrary, his clear eyes flashed, and his brown cheek burned with indignation. Nor did he stop at that. Stepping forward he placed himself between the giant and the howling Hottentot, and said to the former in the most nervous English, "You are a coward!"

The Boer stared at him and smiled, and then asked what the "English fellow" was saying. Somebody translated Jeremy's remark, whereupon the Boer, who was not a bad-natured fellow, smiled again, and remarked that Jeremy must be madder than the majority of "accursed Englishmen." Then he turned to continue thrashing the Hottentot, but o! the mad Englishman was still there. This put him out.

"Footsack, carl; ik is Van Zyl!" (Get out, fellow, I am Van Zyl!) This was interpreted to Jeremy by the bystanders.

"All right, and tell him that I am Jones, a name he may have heard before," was the reply.

"What does this brain-sick fellow want?" shouted the giant.

Jeremy explained that he wanted him to stop his brutality.

"And what will the little man do if I refuse?"

"I shall try to make you," was the answer.

This remark was received with a shout of laughter from the crowd which had now collected, in which the giant joined very heartily when it was interpreted to him.

Giving Jeremy a shove to one side, he again lifted the great sjambock, for the purpose of bringing it down on the Hottentot. Another second and Jeremy had snatched the whip from his hand, and sent it flying fifty yards away. Then realizing that his antagonist was really in earnest, the great Dutchman solemnly set himself to crush him. Doubling a fist which was the size of a Welsh leg of mutton, he struck with all his strength straight at the Englishman's head. Had the blow caught Jeremy, it would in all probability have killed him; but he was a practised boxer, and without moving his body, he swung his head to one side. The Boer's fist passed him harmlessly, and striking the panel of the waggon, went clean through it. Next instant several of the giant's double row of teeth were rolling loose in his mouth. Jeremy had returned the stroke by a right-hander, into which he put all his power, and which would have knocked any other man backward.

A great shout from the assembled Englishmen followed this blow, and a counter-shout from the crowd of Dutchmen, who pointed triumphantly to the hole in the stout yellow-wood panel made by their champion's fist, and asked who the madman was who dared to stand against him.

The Boer turned and spat out some of his superfluous teeth, and at the same instant a young Englishman came and caught hold of Jeremy by the arm.

"For heaven's sake, my dear fellow, be careful! That man will kill you; he is the strongest man in the Transvaal. You are a fellow to be proud of, though."

"He may try," said Jeremy, laconically, stripping off his coat and waistcoat. "Will you hold these for me?"

"Hold them!" answered the young fellow, who was a good sort; "ay, that I will, and I would give half I have to see you lick him. Dodge him; don't let him strike you or he will kill you. I saw him stun an ox once with a blow of his fist."

Jeremy smiled.

"Stop," he said. "Ask that coward if I best him, if he will let off that miserable beggar?" and he pointed to the trembling Hottentot.

The question was put and the great man answered "Yah, yah!" ironically, and then expressed his intention of knocking Jeremy into small pieces in the course of the next two minutes.

Then they faced one another. The giant was a trifle over six foot seven high; Jeremy was a trifle under six foot two and a half, and looked short beside him. But one or two critical observers, looking at the latter now that he was stripped for the encounter, shrewdly guessed that the Dutchman would have his work cut out. Jeremy did not, it is true, scale more than fourteen stone six, but his proportions were perfect. The great deep chest, the brawny arms, not very large, but a mass of muscle, the short strong neck, the quick eye and massive leg, all bespoke the strength of a young Hercules. It was evident too that though he was so young, and not yet come to his full power, he was in the most perfect training. The Boer, on the other hand, was enormous, but his flesh was somewhat soft. Still, knowing his feats, the Englishmen present sighed for their champion, feeling that he had no chance.

For a moment they stood facing each other, then Jeremy made a feint, and, getting in, planted a heavy blow with his left hand on his adversary's chest. But he was to pay for it, for next second the Dutchman got in his right hand, and Jeremy was lifted clean off his feet, and sent flying backward among the crowd.

The Boers cheered, the giant smiled and the Englishmen looked sad. They knew how it would be.

But Jeremy picked himself up little the worse. The stroke had struck the muscles of his chest, and had not hurt him greatly. As he advanced the gradually-increasing crowd of Englishmen cheered him warmly, and he swore in his heart that he would justify those cheers or die for it.

It was at this juncture that Ernest and Mr. Alston came up.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the former, "it is Jeremy."

Mr. Alston took in the situation at a glance.

"Don't let him see you, you will put him off," he said. "Get behind me."

Ernest obeyed, overwhelmed. Mr. Alston shook his head. He recognized that Jeremy had a poor chance, but he did not say so to Ernest.

Meanwhile Jeremy came up and faced the Dutchman. Encouraged by his late success, presently his adversary struck a tremendous blow at him. Jeremy dodged, and next instant succeeded in landing such a fearful right and left full on the giant's face that the latter went reeling backward.

A yell of frantic excitement arose from the English portion of the crowd. This was indeed a David.

The Dutchman soon recovered, and in his turn, rendered more cautious, kept out of Jeremy's reach, trying to strike him down from a distance. For a round or two no important blow was struck, till at last a brilliant idea took possession of the young fellow who had charge of Jeremy's coat.

"Hit him about the body," he whispered; "he's soft."

Jeremy took the advice, and next round succeeded in getting in two or three blows straight from the shoulder, and every one of them bruised the huge body sadly, and made it rather short of wind.

Next round he repeated the same tactics, receiving himself a stroke on the shoulder that for a moment rendered his left arm helpless. Before another second was over however, he had his revenge, and the blood was pouring from his adversary's lips.

And now did the popular excitement on both sides grow intense, for to the interest attaching to the encounter was added that of national feeling, which was then at a high state of tension. Englishmen, Dutchmen, and a mob of Kafirs yelled and shouted, and each of the former two felt that the honor of his people was on the issue. And yet it was an unequal fight.

"I believe that your friend will be a match for Van Zyl," said Mr. Alston, coolly, but the flash of his eye belied his coolness; "and I tell you what, he's a devilish fine fellow too."

At that moment, however, an untoward thing happened. The giant struck out his strongest, and Jeremy could not succeed in entirely warding off the blow, though he broke its force. Crashing through his guard, it struck him on the forehead, and for a moment he dropped senseless. His second rushed up and dashed some water over him, and in another instant he was on his legs again; but for the rest of that round he contented himself with dodging his adversary's attack, at which the Dutchmen cheered, thinking that his iron strength was broken.

But presently, when for the sixth time Jeremy came up with the same quiet look of determination in his eyes, and, except that the gaping of the nostrils and the twitching of the lip showed a certain measure of distress, looking but little the worse, they turned with anxiety to examine the condition of the giant. It was not very promising. He was perspiring profusely, and his enormous chest was rising and falling irregularly. Wherever Jeremy's strokes had fallen, too, a great blue bruise had risen. It was evident that his condition was the worst of the two, but still the Boers had little doubt of the issue. It could not be that the man who had once for a bet quelled the struggles of a wild ox, holding it for the space of five minutes by the horn, could be worsted by an English lad. So they called on him to stop playing with the boy and crush him.

Thus encouraged, the giant came on, striking out with fearful force but wildly, for he could not box. For thirty seconds or more Jeremy contented himself with avoiding the blows; then, seeing an opportunity, he planted a heavy one on his adversary's chest. This staggered him and threw him off his guard, and, taking the offensive, Jeremy dodged in right under the huge fists, and hit upward with all his power. "Thud, thud!" The sound of the blows could be heard fifty yards off. Nor were they without their effect. The giant staggered, and, amidst fearful shouts and groans, fell like an oxe struck with a pole-axe. But it was not over yet. In another moment he was on his legs again, and, spitting out blood and teeth, came reeling straight at Jeremy, a fearful and alarming spectacle. As he came, Jeremy again hit him in the face, but it did not stop him, and in another second the huge arms had closed round him and held him like a vice.

"Not fair! no holding!" shouted the Englishmen, but the Boer held on. Indeed, he did more. Putting all his vast strength into the effort, he strained and tugged, meaning to lift Jeremy up and dash him on the ground. But lo! amid frantic shouts from the crowd, Jeremy stood firm, moving not an inch. Whereupon the Boers called out, saying that he was not a mortal, but a man possessed with a devil. Again the Dutchman gripped him, and this time succeeded in lifting him a few feet from the ground.

"By George, he will throw him next time," said Mr. Alston to Ernest, who was shaking like a leaf with the excitement; "look! he is turning white; the grip is choking him."

And, indeed, Jeremy was in evil case, for his senses were fast being crushed out of him in that fearful embrace, and he was thinking with bitter sorrow that he must fail after all, for an Englishman does not like to be beat even when he has fought his best. Just then it was, when things were beginning to swim around him, that a voice he loved, and which he had been listening for this many months, rang in his ears; whether it was fancy or whether he really heard it he knew not.

"Remember 'Marsh Joe,' Jeremy and lift him. Don't be beat. For God's sake, lift him!"

Now there was a trick, which I will not tell you, my reader, but which a famous Eastern counties wrestler, known as Marsh Joe, had taught to Jeremy. So well had he taught him, indeed, that at the age of 17, Jeremy had hoisted his teacher with his own trick.

Just at the moment that Jeremy heard the voice, the giant shifted his hold a little, preparatory to making a fresh effort, and thus enabled his antagonist to fill his lungs with air. Ernest saw the broad white chest heave with relief (for by this time most of the upper clothing of the combatants had been wrenched away), and the darkening eye grow bright again, and he knew that Jeremy had heard him, and that he would conquer or die where he was.

And then, lo and behold! Just as the Boer, leisurely enough—feeling that he was master of the situation—prepared himself for the final struggle, suddenly the Englishman advanced his right leg a few inches, and with the rapidity of lightning entirely shifted his grip; and then he gathered himself for the effort. What mighty reserve of strength he drew on, who can say? but Ernest's voice had excited it, and it came at his call; and he did a thing that few living men could have done, and the fame whereof will go down in South Africa from generation to generation. For the lithe arms tightened and gripped till they sunk in almost level with the flesh of his mighty foe, and then slowly he began to gather purchase swaying backward and forward.

"Make an end of him! Make an end of him!" shouted the Boers; but behold! their champion's eyes are starting from his blackened face; he cannot stir.

To and fro sways Jeremy, and now the giant's feet are lifted from the ground. And then one mighty effort—O gallant Jeremy! up, still up above the gasping of the wonder-stricken crowd, up to his shoulder—by Heaven, over it!

Crash! Van Zyl fell, to be carried away by six strong men, a cripple for life.

CHAPTER XXV.

ERNEST'S LOVE-LETTER.

Cheer after cheer arose from the Englishmen around, and angry curses from the Dutchmen, as Jeremy turned to look at the senseless carcass of the giant. But, even as he turned, exhausted Nature gave out, and he fell fainting into Ernest's arms.

Then did selected individuals of his fellow-countrymen come forward and bear him reverently to a restaurant called the "European," where the proprietor—himself an old Eton fellow—met him, and washed and clothed and restored him, and vowed with tears in his eyes that he, Jeremy, should live at his expense for as long as he liked—ay, even if he chose to drink nothing meaner than champagne all day long; for thus it is that Englishmen greet one who ministers to that deepest rooted of all their feelings—national pride. And then, when at length he had been brought-to, and refreshed with a tumbler-full of dry Monopole, and wonderingly shaken Ernest by the hand, the enthusiasm of the crowd outside burst its bounds, and poured into the restaurant, and, seizing Jeremy and the chair whereon he sat, they bore him in triumph round the market-square to the tune of "God Save the Queen," a proceeding that would have ended in provoking a riot had not an aide-de-camp from His Excellency the Special Commissioner, who sent a message begging that they would desist, succeeded in persuading them to return to the restaurant. And here they all dined, and forced Jeremy to drink a great deal more dry Monopole than was good for him, with the result that for the first and last time in his life he was persuaded into making an after-dinner speech. As far as it was reported it ran something like this:

"Dear friends (cheers) and Englishmen" (renewed cheers) pause—"all making great fuss about nothing (cheers, and shouts of 'No, no!'). Fight the Dutchman again to-morrow—very big, but soft as putty—anybody fight him (frantic cheering). Glad I wasn't thrashed, as you all seem so pleased. Don't know why you are pleased; 'spose you didn't like the Dutchman. 'Fraid he hurt himself over my shoulder. Wonder what he did it for? Sit down, now. Dear friends, dear old Ernest, been looking for you for long while," and he turned his glassy eye on to Ernest, who cheered frantically, under the impression that Jeremy had just said something very much to the point. "Sit down, now ('No, no; go on'). Can't go on, quite pumped—very thirsty, too ('Give him some more champagne; open a fresh case'). Wish Eva and Doll were here, don't you, (loud cheers)? Gemman (cheers), no, not gemman, friends (louder cheers)—no, not gemman, friends—English brothers (yet louder cheers), I give you a toast. Eva and Doll, you all know 'em and love 'em, or if you don't you would, you see; if you did, you know." Frantic outburst of cheering, during which Jeremy tries to resume his seat, but gracefully drops on to the floor, and begins singing "Auld Lang Syne" under the table, whereupon the whole company rises, and, with the exception of Ernest and a jovial member of the Special Commissioner's staff, who get upon the table to lead the chorus, join hands and sing that beautiful old song with all the solemnity of intoxication, after which they drink more champagne and jointly and severally swear eternal friendship, especially Ernest and the member of His Excellency's staff, who shake hands and bless each other, till the warmth of their emotions proves too much for them, and they weep in chorus there upon the table.

For the rest, Ernest had some vague recollections of helping to drive his newly-found friend home in a wheelbarrow that would persist in upsetting in every sluice or ditch, especially if it had running water in it; and that was about all he did remember.

In the morning he woke up, or rather first became conscious of pain in his head, in a little double-bedded room attached to the hotel. On the pillow of the bed opposite to him lay Jeremy's battered face.

For awhile Ernest could make nothing of all this. Why was Jeremy there? Where were they? Everything turned round and seemed phantasmagorial; the only real, substantial thing was that awful pain in the head. But presently things began to come back to him, and the sight of Jeremy's bruised face recalled the fight, and the fight recalled the dinner, and the dinner brought back a vague recollection of Jeremy's speech and of something he had said about Eva. What could it have been? Ah, Eva! Perhaps Jeremy knew something about her; perhaps he had brought the letter that had been so long in coming. Oh, how his heart went out toward her! But how came Jeremy there in bed before him; how came he to be in South Africa at all?

At that moment his reflections were interrupted by the entry of Mazooku, bearing the coffee which it is the national habit in South Africa to drink early in the morning.

The martial-looking Zulu, who seemed curiously out of place carrying cups of coffee, seeing that his master was awake, saluted him with the customary "Koos," lifting one of the cups of coffee to give emphasis to the word, and nearly upsetting it in the effort.

"Mazooku," said Ernest, severely, "how did we get here?"

The substance of the retainer's explanation was as follows: When the moon was getting low, vanishing, indeed, behind the "horned house" yonder (the Dutch Church with pinnacles on it), it occurred to him, waiting on the verandah, that his master must be weary; and as most had departed from the "dance" in the "tin house" (restaurant), evidently made happy by the "twala" (drink), he entered into the tin house to look for him, and found him overcome by sleep under the table, lying next to the "Lion-who-threw-oxen-over-his-shoulder" (i.e. Jeremy), so overcome by sleep, indeed, that it was quite impossible to conduct him to the waggon. This being so, he (Mazooku) considered what was his duty under the circumstances, and came to the accurate conclusion that the best thing to do was to put them into the white man's bed, since he knew that his master did not love the floor to lie on. Accordingly, having discovered that this was a room of beds, he and another Zulu entered, but were perplexed to find the beds already occupied by two white men, who had lain down to rest with their clothes on. But, under all these circumstances, he and the other Zulu, considering that their first thought should be toward their own master, had taken the liberty of lifting up the two white men, who were slumbering profoundly after the "dance," by the head and by the heels, and putting them out in the sweet cool air of the night. Having thus "made a place," they then conveyed first Ernest, and having removed his clothes, put him into one bed, and next, in consideration of his undoubted greatness, they ventured to take the "Lion-who, etc.," himself and put him in the other. He was a very great man, the "Lion," and his art of throwing greater men over his shoulder could only be attributed to witchcraft. He, himself (Mazooku), had tried it on that morning with a Basutu, with whom he had a slight difference of opinion, but the result had not been all that could be desired, inasmuch as the Basutu had kicked him in the stomach, and forced him to drop him.

Ernest laughed as heartily as his headache would allow at this story, and in doing so woke up Jeremy, who at once clasped his hands to his head and looked round, whereupon Mazooku, having saluted the awakened "Lion" with much fervor, and spilled a considerable quantity of hot coffee over him in doing so, took his departure abashed, and at length the two friends were left alone. Thereupon, rising from their respective pallets, they took a step in all the glory of their undress uniform into the middle of the little room, and, after the manner of Englishmen shook hands and called each other "old fellow." They then went back to bed and began to converse.

"I say, old fellow, what on earth brought you out here?"

"Well, you see, I came out to look you up. You did not write any letters, and they began to get anxious about you at home, so I packed up my duds and started. Your uncle stands unlimited tin, so I am travelling like a prince in a waggon of my own. I heard of you down in Maritzburg, and guessed that I had best make for Pretoria, and here I am and there you are, and I am terribly glad to see you again, old chap. By Jove, what a head I have! But, I say, why didn't you write? Doll half broke her heart about it, and so did your uncle, only he would not say so."

"I did write. I wrote from Sikukini's country, but I suppose the letter did not fetch," answered Ernest, feeling very guilty. "The fact is, old fellow, I had not the heart to write much, I have been so confoundedly down on my luck ever since that duel business."

A Lonely Christmas.

(Detroit Free Press.)

There was a pair of stockings to hang up at our house last Christmas, a pair of stockings with a hole worn in one little foot and the heel worn thin in the other. This year there are none to hang up.

Last year we haunted toy stores and confectioners for the newest and nicest things for our boy. This year we passed the gay windows with bowed heads and aching hearts. I see tears in my wife's eye as we pass some happy mother with a blue or white mittened little hand held tightly in her own, while the merry little lad by her side looks laughingly up in her face.

I cannot keep my own lips from trembling, or my tear-dimmed eyes from gazing wistfully at that dear little fellow with the blue eyes and golden curls, perched high on his father's shoulder so that he can look over the heads of the crowd standing in front of the gay toy store. I held my own boy so last year. He walked these same gay streets with his little hand held in his mother's.

He rode home on my lap in the horse cars that day before Christmas. He climbed up and put his arms around my neck to whisper to me a wonderful "seekit." This secret whisper always was:

"I lub you, papa."

And after we had coaxed him into his night clothes that night, and after we had heard his little prayers with the final "God bless papa and mamma," we put him to bed and filled the two little blue stockings so full and piled high the chair on which they hung. We could hardly sleep for thinking of what he would do and say when the Christmas morning came.

This year we rode home alone in the car. We sat silently in our little parlor. My wife tried to read a new copy of her favorite magazine, but I could see that her eyes were closed behind its pages.

I said I would go out on the porch and smoke. But my cigar was not lighted in the whole hour I remained without.

They were having a Christmas tree for my neighbor's little boy in the house across the street. I could see the tree with the pretty boy dancing around it.

I knew and felt that he was safe in the arms of One who carries the young lambs in His bosom, that greater love than mine was around him, a love that could forever shield him from all trials and sorrows; but I could not help crying out:

"My baby, my boy, I want you myself."

The curtain of our parlor was up a few inches, and I could see my wife on her knees, and what did she have in her hands, kissing them again and again, with sobs and tears? The little stockings we hung up last Christmas eve.

Perhaps we will, as the neighbors say, "outgrow it" by and bye, or "get used to it;" but this is the first Christmas we have had to live through since the baby died.

My wife carries this little verse in her pocket-book:

We shall roam on the banks of the River of Peace,
And dwell on its crystal tide,
And one of the joys of our Heaven will be
The little boy that died.

A Key to His Habits.

Mr. Winks—I wish, Mrs. Winks, you would read this article on the duties of wives.

Mrs. Winks—I haven't time now. What does it say?

"Well, it says, for one thing, that it is the duty of a wife to cultivate assimilation, and, so far as possible, have the same tastes as her husband."

"I never thought of that."

"I suppose not."

"No, but if you'll bring a bottle of whiskey home with you, I'll try."

It is stated that the Russian reserves have been called out. Marked movements of troops have been noticed in Bessarabia.

On Saturday night a safe belonging to George J. Bradley, of Port Hope, was opened and an iron box containing a lot of deeds, policies and other papers abstracted.

Mr. Percy Sherwood, Chief of the Dominion Police Force, has secured a couple of counterfeit $2 Dominion bills of the recent issue. The work is so cleverly done that it is difficult to detect the counterfeit. The signature of Mr. Nash, of the Finance Department, is so well executed that he says himself it would be hard to swear that it was not his own handwriting.

About half-past 9 o'clock last evening parties in Nordheimer's Restaurant, which is situated next door to the recently burned Nordheimer Hall, Montreal, heard a sudden rumble, and almost before they had time to leave the dining room the gable of Nordheimer's fell smash through the roof, carrying everything with it. The parties inside barely escaped with their lives. The damage is estimated at $5,000, on which fire insurance is not available.

Notice has been received by the Dominion Government that the Fisheries Bill of last session, which was reserved for the sanction of the Imperial authorities, has received Her Majesty's sanction.

A strange proceeding is reported from Montreal, the stock of a dry goods firm having been seized at the instance of a firm in Winnipeg to satisfy the debt of an employee of the Montreal house.

The funeral of the late Mr. Justice Ramsay will take place to-day in Montreal. The Practice Court in Montreal was adjourned yesterday morning till Monday next, out of respect for the memory of the late Judge.

A meeting of college professors and others interested in the proposed College of Preceptors for Ontario was held in Toronto yesterday, when, after discussion, the scheme was unanimously adopted with some slight amendments.

Lieut.-Col. Jackson has finished all the business connected with the transport service of the Northwest rebellion, and made his final report to the Minister of Militia. He left the capital yesterday for London to resume his duties as Deputy Adjutant-General of No. 1 military district.

The Governor-General, accompanied by Lady Lansdowne and their respective suites, will make a prolonged visit to Montreal during the carnival. Capt. Streatfield is now in Montreal to hire a residence for the vice-regal party, whose visit will last about eight weeks, during which an elaborate round of festivities will be held.

The Ottawa Board of Trade yesterday discussed the question of discrimination in freight rates against that city, and decided to co-operate with the Kingston Board of Trade in appealing to the steamship companies at Liverpool for redress, the railway companies in Canada having stated that through freight rates were fixed by the steamship companies.

A farmer named Tinney undertook to cross the track with a team yesterday morning in the station yard at Bothwell while the west-bound mixed was shunting. The train, which was backing up at the time, struck his sleigh, knocking a boy about 10 years of age, son of James Fleming, shoemaker, of Bothwell, off the sleigh on the track, the wheels of the car passing over both arms, crushing them to a jelly. No hopes are entertained of his recovery.

In the trial of the cadets and officers of the Bulgarian army for conspiracy against the regency evidence has been adduced showing that the defendants were in communion with the Russian Consul.

The Journal des Debats renews its attack on England, which it accuses of being the only power whose conduct has aggravated the trouble which has culminated in the present crisis in Southeastern Europe, and declares that she has sought to embroil Austria and Russia in the dispute.

The Pope, in receiving Christmas congratulations from the College of Cardinals, spoke at some length of the position of the Church in Italy. He protested against the anti-clerical movement which is being carried on in the country, and said the Holy See was now despoiled of the last remnant of its patrimony. The only liberty left to him was that held by the Roman pontiffs in the earliest ages. The Italian Government, he declared, assisted the laity in unduly interfering with the administration of the Church. It had expelled religious bodies and had tolerated an organized hostility against the Vatican. As the head of the Church, he must continue to protest against the position in which he is placed.

Mr. Blaine is confined to his room at Augusta, Me., with a severe attack of rheumatic gout.

Mr. Bradford Dunham, General Manager of the Baltimore & Ohio system, yesterday tendered his resignation to President Garrett, who accepted it.

Cards have been issued announcing the marriage of Miss Mary N. Sherman, of Norwalk, Ohio, and Burchard Austin Hayes, eldest son of ex-President Hayes. The wedding takes place December 30th.

A claim has been filed with the Interior Department for a strip of public land lying along the lake front in Chicago, comprising about 90 acres, and valued at $15,000,000. The Secretary has taken the papers, and will consider the matter, argument upon which will shortly begin.

Wm. Warner, well known in Bridgeport, has been quite intimate with Mrs. Mary Lynch, a young married woman. A few weeks ago Mrs. Lynch went to her mother, who lives near Newtown. On Wednesday evening Warner called to see her, and during a quarrel Warner shot Mrs. Lynch through the heart. He then left the house. About 8 o'clock yesterday morning he returned to the house and shot himself. His body was found lying across that of his victim. He left a note in which he gave the cause of the murder as jealousy.

Filmore Jamieson, a prominent resident and business man of Ridgeway, N.Y., was instantly killed there on Monday by a train on the New Jersey Southern Railway. While driving across the track one of his horses balked. The train struck his team and waggon with terrific force, killing Mr. Jamieson and one horse and knocking the waggon to pieces. Mr. Jamieson's house was at the side of the track only a few feet from the crossing. The locomotive cut off Mr. Jamieson's head and hurled it down the embankment, nearly to the feet of his wife, who was a witness of his horrible death. She is insane from grief and horror.

The remains of the late Mr. Justice Ramsay were interred yesterday in Mount Royal Cemetery, Montreal, in the presence of a large assemblage of members of the Bench and Bar and prominent citizens.

Hoke, the bank defaulter of Peoria, Ill., who was committed for extradition a few days ago by the Montreal police magistrate, will be handed over to the United States authorities on the 2nd of January.

Messrs. Bickerdike and Delorme have made an offer to the Montreal City Council to take over the cattle markets and battoirs on a twenty years' lease, paying therefor $10,000 a year and all the annual charges in addition.

The St. Lawrence is still rising at Montreal, and the citizens living along the water front are removing their effects from the lower flats to places of safety, as a flood seems imminent.

The residence of the late Sir Francis Hincks, on St. Antoine street, Montreal, was sold to the Trust & Loan Company yesterday for $10,150. The property originally cost $32,000.

Dr. Henry Andrews, of Brooklyn, committed suicide by shooting himself yesterday while in a fit of despondency.

The family of Joseph Seidlote, a carpenter, of Cincinnati, consisting of himself, wife and 6-year-old son, were poisoned yesterday by eating canned green peas. Seidlote died last night, but his wife and child may recover.

Seven bars of silver were put into the Pacific Express Company's car on a Missouri Pacific train at a suburban station in St. Louis on Friday evening. On the train arriving at St. Louis it was found that two of the bars, valued at $2,000, had mysteriously disappeared.

Charles Burger, a farmer, living ten miles south of Bushville, Neb., returned home from town on Christmas evening and found his wife and three children dead in the house. His wife had been subject to temporary fits of insanity, and it is supposed that while out of her head she killed the three children and then cut her own throat with a razor.

Word has been received from the Rocky Mountains that two cars of a passenger train broke away on a steep grade. They ran back three miles with tremendous velocity, when they jumped the track, and running against the stumps were badly smashed. McNally, the express messenger, was killed and also a passenger whose name is not known. Twenty passengers in one of the cars were badly shaken up.

Mark Haddix, a well-to-do farmer, living near Osborne, while intoxicated Thursday night, jumped aboard a Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad engine which stood at the station at Dayton, Ohio, pulled the throttle open and started down the main track. A train of freight cars were coming in, and the engine collided with them. Three cars were wrecked, and the engine was derailed. Haddix was arrested and held on a charge of grand larceny in stealing a locomotive valued at $8,000.

Although the railway service in Germany was restored yesterday morning, traffic is still seriously blocked, especially in connection with Christmas deliveries. However the snowstorm was a God-send to the unemployed, as thousands of men are employed in clearing the streets of Berlin, for which work they receive 3½ marks per day.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times says Austrian statesmen declare that the maintenance of peace is entirely dependent upon the action of the Czar, and, as he drinks, delirium tremens may at any moment cause him to commit an act of folly which would precipitate a war. Austria must be ready for such a contingency. The Pester Lloyd says the Czar's fear of the Nihilists is excessive. He is suspicious of everybody with whom he comes in contact, including even his wife and children.

The Rocky Mountain Telegraph Company's new wire is completed from Medicine Hat, on the Canada Pacific, to Fort Assiniboine, which is connected with Helena. The electric circuit is now completed in the Northwest, east and west from the United States via the Canadian Pacific.

CURRENT TOPICS.

It may not be generally remembered that next year is not only the Royal Jubilee, but is also the jubilee of the electric telegraph in England. The first practical telegraph was worked between Euston Station and Camden Town on July 25th, 1837.

At the recent unveiling of the statue of Richard Cobden, in St. Peter's Gate, Stockport, England, one of the most significant inscriptions displayed by the people gathered in honor of the event was one which read: "Thanks to Richard Cobden, we get as much bread for 8d as our forefathers got for a shilling."

Mr. P. B. Kent, a civil engineer, who has been in China for seven years, has come to the United States to spend a few weeks with his relatives. He has been engaged in railroad work in Formosa for the Chinese Government, and says that upon the accession of the young Prince to the throne China will adopt the European railroad almost universally.

We learn from L'Electricien that a M. H. Dunville pledges his scientific reputation to the accuracy of the following observation: If two glasses of water be placed, one upon the north pole of a powerful magnet and the other upon the south pole, in four or five minutes the former acquires a slight alkaline reaction, while that on the south pole becomes slightly acid.

The ex-Empress Eugenie recently paid a private visit to Her Majesty Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle before leaving for the continent. The ex-Empress only stopped in Paris to dine and then went on direct to Turin. The Empress, who is in poor health, will remain in Rome till after Christmas, and will probably pass the winter in Naples and Palermo.

Mr. John M. Laflin, a man of prodigious physique and an enthusiast about gymnastics, says of the cigarette-smoking youth of to-day: "Why, an army of the young men of to-day would be utterly useless; a regiment of Roman mothers would lick the whole of them hand to hand. If this craze goes on the next generation of Americans will be as puny as Bushmen."

An interesting discovery was made the other day by M. Quentin-Bauchart, of Chalons-sur-Marne, on a bookstall of that town. This is the "Office de la Divine Providence," the sole comfort of Marie Antoinette in her weary captivity at the prisons of the Temple and Conciergerie. The book, the binding of which is much worn, contains on a fly leaf the following inscription, dated October 16th, 4.30 a.m.: "Lord, have pity on me! I can no longer weep save in spirit for you, O my children! Farewell, farewell!—Marie Antoinette."

Bridget Dunn, of New York, has no faith in wills and Surrogate Courts. So, believing herself to be dying, she transferred her savings bank account to her niece, Alice McCarthy. But Bridget recovered, and now Alice refuses to return the money, and the bank sustains her. Moral: Make sure you are actually dying before you transfer your worldly goods. If you recover your health you may not recover your property.

A national demonstration in favor of Home Rule will be held at Edinburgh on January 12th. Resolutions will be proposed to the effect that the time has arrived when National Legislatures should be granted to the respective nationalities forming the United Kingdom, and the national business of Scotland should be managed by a Legislature meeting in Scotland, with free control over all purely local and private Bills, and with an Executive responsible to it and the Crown.

The largest corporation engaged under the British flag at this time is the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. Exclusive of vessels now under construction, the company's fleet amounts to 200,000 tons, costing nearly £6,000,000 sterling. During the mail contract of the last seven years they have laid down 82,000 tons, at a cost of £2,260,000, and expended in renewals between £500,000 and £600,000. Altogether, in the seven years they had expended in new ships and improvements in old ones £2,800,000, or about £400,000 per annum. At the recent annual meeting, it was stated that the business of the company had increased so far as the increased number of the passengers carried: but the receipts therefrom had been less because of the large number of return tickets. The company had suffered to the extent of £18,000 by the great fall in exchange during the past twelve months.

J. G. Batterson, in whose granite quarries at Westerly, R. I., a profit-sharing system was adopted last January, says there has been no trouble this year with the employees, who, as far as he knows, are satisfied with the arrangement as well as is the company. If when the time of settlement comes next month the workmen are satisfied, the arrangement will be continued on substantially the same basis. The Westerly plan provided that after the expenses have been paid and a dividend of 6 per cent. on the capital invested, one-third of the remaining profits shall be divided among the workmen proportionately to their wages. The number of men employed in the quarries is 550.

It is safe to say that the marriageable girls in Bolivia will not serenade the members of the present Assembly. It is not even likely that the distinguished legislators of that Republic will find many partners inclined to dance with them. They have just passed the following law: "No officer from the rank of sub-lieutenant to captain will be allowed to marry unless he can prove that the lady with whom he wishes to marry possesses a dowry of $4,000." This throws the onus of the support of the officers on the weaker sex. Fortune-hunters are despised in most countries, but especially in South America. The Spanish-American press vehemently protests against a law that makes the women support the warriors, as being dishonorable towards the former and unjust towards the latter.

The latest method of identifying prisoners, which has been introduced into France by M. Alphonse Bertillon, and which is now successfully practised not only in the chief French prisons, but in Russia and Japan as well, is the exact measurement of the prisoner on his arrival at the jail. His waist, the length and width of his head, the left middle finger, the left foot, the outstretched arms, the three other fingers of the left hand, the left arm from the elbow to the wrist, and the length and width of the ear are measured, and the color of the eyes and any particularities are noted down. A photograph is also immediately taken, and by these means the many mistakes which have been made by trusting to a photographer only are avoided. The fact that during the two years since this mode has been in operation 826 habitual criminals who presented themselves under an assumed name have been identified in France shows that M. Bertillon's method is superior to any other.

A grand soiree has just been given in London by a society of French hairdressers, entitled the Societe du Progres de la Coiffure, when gold, silver and bronze medals were competed for, which created a great flutter among the fashionable fair. There were sixteen artist competitors who brought their models, and twelve judges, artists of mature age. The scene of the tournament was Mme. Tussaud's gallery, where at a long table sat sixteen lovely girls, with looking-glasses, etc., before them. A signal was given, forty-five minutes allowed and away went the scissors, the operators twisting, plaiting, frizzing, adding a switch of hair here and a frizette there to build up the pile. To pass to what is most interesting to ladies here, the present style as laid down for the coming season (we give it as translated from the French) is the demi-lugue or medium, neither the catogan drooping on the shoulders or all the hair drawn up towards the face. The front is frizzed a little and goes across in almost a straight line without coming down at the side of the face. The remainder of the hair, with such additions as may be deemed advisable, is arranged in a cluster of rolls, plaits, curls and bows, and at one side an aigrette, rosette, plumes or bunch of ribbons. As to combs, the greatest liberty is allowed in their use—diamond, pearl, garnet, etc., as well as pins put in here and there in an informal arrangement. In fact, a woman may wear two or three combs if she happens to have them and stick them where she pleases. Diamond aigrettes with espreys are in fashion, also bows of gold, pink or blue ribbons, with the espreys in the centre. One of the most beautiful heads at the soiree had as ornament a bunch of frosted silver dandelion clocks, which were beautifully light and elegant.

A Child's Christmas Story.

The following story, published in the Chicago News, though bearing many indications of the handiwork of Eugene Field, of that journal, is attributed to a girl of 11 years:

It was a sad sight to see Mrs. Jamison and her little family gathered about the fire one Christmas eve, for she had been a widow for twenty years. Yes, twenty years before had Mr. Jamison, her husband, set sail on a ship for a foreign land and nevermore had been heard of. The snow was falling fast and the wind was howling without.

"Alas," Mrs. Jamison said, as she pressed her hungry babe to her bosom, "I fear we shall have no turkey to-morow."

"Why not, mother?" asked Robin, a bright lad of 14.

"Listen," said Mrs. Jamison. "I have only thirty cents left. To-day I pawned my jewels, and thus we are cast upon the mercy of the cold world."

Mrs. Jamison wept bitterly and so did the children.

"Oh, if Henry were only here," moaned Mrs. Jamison. Henry was Mr. Jamison's name before he was lost at sea, never, never to return. By and bye Mrs. Jamison said: "Put on your fur cape, Lucy, and take this thirty cents and go down to the grocery store and buy one dozen eggs. It is all the money I have, but the eggs will allay our hunger, and keep the wolf from the door another day."

So Lucy, who was a beautiful girl of 15, put on her fur cape and Robin went with her. Having bought the eggs, each of them took an apple, when Mr. Sinclair, the kind-hearted grocer, was not looking, and with joyous hearts they rode home in a street car. While Lucy was eating her apple she put the bag of eggs on the seat, and suddenly a big man entered the car and sat down on the bag. Then Lucy began to cry and Robin, too.

"Children," said the big man, in kind tones, "why do you weep?"

"Alas!" said Lucy, "you have sat on our bag of eggs."

"Never mind the eggs," said the man; "but tell me, have I not heard that voice before, and have I not seen those features? Is your name Lucy Jamison?"

"Yes, sir," said Lucy.

"Then look upon me, child," cried the man, "and tell me if you do not know me. Has time and sorrow changed me so that my children do not know me?"

"Father, father!" cried Lucy, throwing herself into her father's arms.

It was indeed Mr. Jamison. He had been wrecked on a lone island for twenty years, but a passing ship picked him up and brought him home. He was very rich, and oh! what a happy meeting it was for Mrs. Jamison and the children. They had turkey for dinner and cranberries, and lived in peace all the rest of their lives.

A Cure for Chilblains.

Prevention is better than cure for chilblains as for everything else. A very hot foot-bath every night for a month, followed by the most vigorous rubbing, will usually cure cold feet and set the blood in good circulation in the extremities. But if the chilblains come they may be successfuly treated in several days. A good ointment is made of castile soap melted in a little rum. If from rubbing the skin be broken the rose salve is very healing. Camphor ice cures some chilblains and the various cerates are suited to those of other people. Peppermint essence, cologne and alcohol are reccommended to allay the stinging and burning of a frost-bitten heel.—Boston Record.

Ye Unskilful Tobogganer.

(He calleth for his Lady Love.)

The lanterns are shining, my love, my dove
Away to the slide let's be jogging;
For a ride I am pining, my dove, my love,
And I've brought out my little toboggan;
So put on your blanket coat quick as may be,
And come to the slide and toboggan with me,
Come ride on my little toboggan.

The north wind is blowing, my love, my dove,
It is splendid tobogganing weather;
So let us be going, my dove, my love,
And slide and toboggan together.
Oh! hasten my peerless one, off let us jog,
And dash down the slide on my little tobog,
Dash down on my little toboggan.

(They sally forth and reach the slide.)

At last off we're whizzing, my love, my dove,
And down the steep slide we are dashing;
Hear the air pass us fizzing, my love, my dove,
And on we go slashing and crashing.
We're nearing the bottom, aha! we are there—!!

* * * * *

But where's my toboggan, and where are you, dear?
Where's my love and my little toboggan?
(Emerges from snow heap and gazes wildly around.)

What can have occurred, my love, my dove?
With something I must have collided
I must have been flurried, my dove, my love,
And must have unskilfully guided
My vehicle, made from the bark of a log,
My little toboggan, my little tobog—
But where the deuce is my toboggan?

Ah! now I espy you, my love, my dove,
But who in the mischief's that feller
Who walks so close by you, my dove, my love,
It's that brute of a clerk—that teller.
Ah! woe me unhappy! now homeward I'll jog,
For my love I have lost, and my little tobog;
Yes, all smashed is my little toboggan.

MORAL.

Young fellows, give ear; ere you go to the slide
With your girl, learn to steer, for a duffer
No lady can care for, and if you can't guide
Your toboggan you'll certainly suffer,
As my hero above, whose unskilfulness cost
Him the loss of his girl, and besides her he lost—
He lost his little toboggan.

LATE SPORTING NOTES.

Turf.

Mr. W. H. Wilson, of Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, has purchased of his partner, Mr. P. S. Talbert, his half interest in the noted trotting sire, Sultan, by the Moor, dam Sultana, by Delmonico, paying therefor $10,000. They paid L. J. Rose, of San Gabriel, Cal., $15,000 for Sultan last summer. The horse has a record of 2.24.

Mr. Dan Swigert's ill luck with his stallions seems to have no end. First Virgil died and was followed soon after by Prince Charlie. To replace them Mr. Swigert sent to England and bought Kingcraft and Rotherhill, two horses of fame and great promise. Yesterday the steamship Lake Superior, sailed from Liverpool on Dec. 11th with a number of passengers and a valuable cargo, including twenty-two horses and twelve ponies, among them Kingcraft, who was somewhat amiss when shipped, died on the sixth day out and was thrown overboard. The weather from the start was very bad, with heavy seas. The price paid for Kingcraft was not made public in any of the English papers, but on this side of the Atlantic many persons interested thought that Mr. Swigert made a somewhat unwise purchase from the standpoint of age alone, as Kingcraft would have been 19 years old had he reached Kentucky safe.

The stud fees for British stallions continue enormous. First of all comes Hermit at $1,250. Then come Petrarch and Galopin at $750, Robert the Devil and St. Simon at $500, George Frederick, Master Kildare, Melton, Springfield, Touchet and Uncas at $250; Beauclerc and The Miser at $200, Chippenvale and Zelot at $150, and an endless number from that down.

Miscellaneous.

In the bicycle race in Minneapolis at the end of the forty-fifth hour the score stood: Morgan, 524 miles; Shock, 524 miles; Armaindo, 400 miles.

Of the seven contestants to-day in the 72 hour walking match Guerrero, who was in the lead Wednesday, is quite lame, and Hegelman is doing the great work of the day. Strokel is also going fast. The score at 2 p. m. was: Strokel, 217 miles; Hughes, 216; Guerrero, 215; Hegelman, 209 miles 7 laps; Vint, 209 miles 2 laps; Golden, 198 miles; Elson, 196 miles.

Why She Pointed.

A school teacher from "out west" tells the following laughable little incident: "On Christmas day I was invited to dinner at the home of a farmer in the neighborhood. He had a large family of children, and I was not the only guest, several families in the neighborhood having been invited.

"Just before we went out to dinner, a 10-year-old daughter of the family, a favorite pupil of mine, came into the room and began silently counting the guests, pointing her fingers at each person as she counted.

"As she stood near me, I thought to give her a little lesson in etiquette, and whispered:

"'Don't point, Milly; it is not polite.'

"To my amusement and the chagrin of her mother, she instantly replied:

"Well, I guess ma told me to, 'cause she's afraid there ain't mince pie enough to go round, and she hopes nobody won't take two pieces.'"

Personal Points.

Hon. Mr. Fraser is improving in health.

Washington Irving Bishop, the mind reader, says that he is in delicate health.

Hon. Mr. Mowat is greatly improved, and after a little rest he will be completely restored.

Mr. Gladstone, according to Mr. Labouchere, is at present engaged on a work connected with the Olympian religion.

A Bad Husband's Present.

Bogley—What are you going to give your wife for Christmas, Scrooge?

Scrooge—Something useful. A ton of coal, a ham and a pair of slippers about seven sizes too big.

Bogley—What good will that do her?

Scrooge—She will have the satisfaction of presenting them to me.—Philadelphia Call.

"Judge Jennison.—Please call at my house. It has no number, but they call it the county jail." So wrote Harry McKillop (formerly of Hamilton), to the presiding judge of the Wayne Circuit Court yesterday. His Honor did not go to McKillop's "house."—Detroit News. It is likely the case against McKillop—that of taking away furniture which did not belong to him from a house which he rented—will be dropped.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

"When the hurly-burly's done
When the battle's lost and won."
—SHAKESPEARE.

There is a nice little three cornered contest in Centre Grey. Two Tories and one Reformer running. Now is your time ye Liberals of Centre Grey. —Grey Review of 23rd Dec.

It was truly a nice little arrangement all through, but it did not work quite as well as the Review and many others wished, and, indeed, anticipated. The Owen Sound Advertiser was also quite sanguine and jubilant. They can now console one another with the fact that, on the whole, Mowat has been sustained—on the strength of his gerrymandering and the Catholic vote.

The laggard way Centre Grey election returns came in, might lead some people to imagine that we lived up in the neighborhood of the North Pole. The night of polling day, full returns from constituencies all over the Province came pouring in; North and South Grey being heard from among the rest. But Centre Grey gave forth uncertain sounds, and it was not until two days after the election that we heard anything definite; and even then we had to send a private despatch to Owen Sound to ascertain the fact—so wild and indefinite were the reports in circulation.

Mr. Brown, the Reform candidate got a majority of 38 votes in Collingwood Township. Thus, through the defection of McColman, the Conservative majority of 189 in Collingwood Twp. was reversed in favor of the Reformers to 38. The misrepresentation and falsehoods of the News had undoubtedly something to do with this. What did the year old hireling care about the Liberal Conservative party in Centre Grey, when it did its level best—in conjunction with Neil McColman and others—to play into the hands of Mr. Brown and the Reform party? Bounce the splitters!

Mr. Thos. Andrews, of Thornbury, is the gentleman who, at the second convention, shouted out that himself and the other delegates would make Mr. McColman keep his pledge to abide by the decision of that convention. And yet, in face of all this, Mr. Andrews went straight from that convention on an electioneering tour for Mr. McColman, and against the very man he had, on his word of honor, pledged himself to support! What does Mr. Thos. Andrews' word of honor amount to anyway? It is politicians of this stripe who reflect discredit upon the party to which they profess allegiance.

And Mr. Wm. Walters, of Collingwood Township, is the man who so savagely attacked us from the public platform on Nomination day, anent an editorial in THE ADVANCE, headed, "The Traitors." Amongst other things, he said we were a "boy who published a newspaper," appending a very strong epithet to the statement. Boy though we may be, we are prepared at all times—on the platform or through the press—to successfully defend ourself against the attacks of all the political tricksters that have ever fumed and raged at us on any public platform in Centre Grey. Why did not Mr. McColman's organ, the News, reply to our editorial in its columns, prior to the election, when ample time and opportunity was afforded it to do so? Why did it keep back the fact that Mr. McColman pledged himself to abide by the decision of the second convention as well as the first? Why did Mr. McColman pledge himself to abide by that second convention's decision, if he had no intention of keeping his pledge, made in the presence of 103 representative Conservative electors from all parts of the riding? Let us have "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" in this matter. If we have wronged Mr. McColman, or "Mr. anybody else," convince us of the fact, and we will make the amende honorable. But we haven't, and there's where the rub comes in.

ARTEMESIA COUNCIL, 1887.

Following are the members of our Township Council for the year 1887:—

Dr. Christoe, Reeve.

COUNCILLORS.

J. McArthur, Ward No. 1.
J. Boland, Ward No. 2.
Wm. Sharpe, Ward No. 3.
H. Cairns, Ward No. 4.

Now, gentlemen, the ratepayers expect that every man of you will do his duty; and as the editor of this paper purposes reporting the proceedings at each meeting of Council in future, your course will be watched with interest. While we want you to be as economical as possible, we certainly do not desire to see you niggardly in the expenditure of our money. Don't let our magnificent gravel roads fall into disrepair. Don't let pathmasters put dirt and mud on the roads where gravel should be. Don't be penny wise and pound foolish in letting jobs. Better far to pay a good price and have the job done in a substantial manner, than to give starvation prices, thereby encouraging slip-shod work and costly law suits, for broken limbs, &c. Lay out the Township funds on those roads and bridges, &c., where it is most necessary. See to it that the assessment of all kinds of property in the Township is made on an equitable and just basis. Don't trust to hearsay, but examine for yourselves. The past record has been a good one; let the future be still better. The Editor has concluded to keep the Township Fathers company during the coming year, and give the result of their deliberations to the public.

If there's a hole in a' your coats,
I rede ye tent it;
A chiel's amang ye takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it.

PROVE IT.

It is amusing to hear of the Thornbury News claiming the largest circulation of any paper in East Grey. Bald assertion is not proof. Why the News hasn't the slightest shadow of proof to produce, as it knows about as little anent the circulation of its county contemporaries as they do about it, which is saying very little. Why not make an affidavit of its circulation and challenge the other papers to do likewise? Just put up or shut up, Bro. Starrett.

FLESHERTON STATION.

Interesting and reliable information comes to us from the depot, that the gentleman who told us once, that "the constant dropping of water will wear a stone," is making himself very conspicuous by exhorting people not to subscribe for the ADVANCE. What better could be expected from a man whose insolence to his employer's patrons is so well known? And what better evidence of the fearlessness and honesty of the course pursued by the ADVANCE than the opposition of such persons?

ITS "INTRINSIC" VALUE.

We try to give the people a paper they can read for its intrinsic value. —Thornbury News.

In the light of the recent political contest in Centre Grey, subscribers should get the News for about 5 cents per annum. As a prophet, its editor is a most lamentable failure, and as a gatherer of news, he is, in many cases, very unreliable. THE ADVANCE stuck by the nominee of the convention from first to last. Had it followed the unpatriotic course of the News, Mr. Brown, the Reform Candidate, would in all probability have been elected. THE ADVANCE is always loyal to its own party, and impartial and just in its dealings with opponents. This cannot be contradicted.

Grievance Relating to Public Matters at Maxwell.

Will Mr. James Buckingham, of this place, please explain in detail his grievance in regard to the expenditure of the public money in this School Section. At the late annual meeting the Trustees and Auditors report was submitted and adopted without any objection. Mr. Buckingham being present, and after the close of the meeting, he went around the ratepayers telling them in an under tone, that the Trustees Board was a nest of rotten eggs, full of corruption and must be broken, also that the peopies money was improperly used. The ratepayers oppressed by taxes &c.

For the benefit of the School Section and reputation of the Trustees surely Mr. B. will make matters more public, and as he sets himself up as a model man and a christian, who would do unto others as he would wish others to do to him, an explanation is demanded, as the Trustees do not feel inclined to have their reputation tampered with, in any such underhand manner.

WESLEY LONG,
School Trustee, Maxwell.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The annual school meeting was held here on Wednesday of last week and there was quite a large attendance. Mr. E. McCallum, was elected Trustee, Mr. D. K. Preston, retiring, Mr. D.D. McFarlane, elected as auditor.

Mr. C. A Drummond, the new Teacher, commenced his duties on Monday and we hope he may prove as successful in his management of the school as his predecessor.

The municipal election on Monday, passed off in the usual quiet manner. But there was one new feature noticed in seeing some of the Lady voters coming out to record their vote for the best men. At present it is reported that the old Reeve and Council are elected.

The young men who left here some time ago for Michigan report times good. Wages from 17 to 22 dollars a month.

We are pleased to see our old friend, Rev. J. W. H. Milne, home on a visit. He preached in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening last and was listened to with much attention.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff. —Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

From M. Reiley.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir:—I notice in the columns of your valuable paper of Dec. 23rd, a letter from W. L. Dixon, on the eve of his departure from Priceville as an answer to my letter of Dec. 2nd.

Mr. Dixon says that the reason I opposed his re-engagement was that my son failed to pass the Entrance Exam. Now, Mr. Dixon knows that he was stating an untruth, as I did not oppose him on those grounds at all, but on the fact that the majority of the ratepayers of the section, were dissatisfied. I am surprised that a man of Mr. Dixon's standing, would stoop so low as to compare some of the children under his care, to that ferocious animal the Lion and that he would refer to them as being educated the same way, that is, teach them to allow their keeper to put his head into their mouth. Now I do not believe that even a lion would be willing to allow Mr. D's. head into its mouth much less his scholars.

Mr. D. says that he has been very attentive to his duties and that he has never been once late in three years. Now Mr. Editor we did not engage Mr. Dixon to be late. We expected him to fulfil his duties according to his agreement.

Mr. Dixon alleges in his letter that I made a false statement about the marks obtained by my boy, at the last Exam, and that he showed them to me on the 11th Nov. Now sir, it is a long time from the first week in July until the 11th Nov., and I suppose he did not send for those marks until the last moment when he heard that I was reflecting on him not doing so.

In regard to the petition for their removal I candidly state that I am informed that it was read to every person that signed it and that there was no misrepresentation made in regard to it. There must be a great change in the Section since the annual meeting of 1885 if said petition as M. D. said was to remove me out of office, as at that meeting out of five candidates I was elected by a large majority. Mr. Dixon's statements in regard to the children of families in the outskirts of the section, attending adjoining schools as a matter of convenience is false as the party lives much nearer to Priceville, than the other section and certainly they must have a choice of teacher. We as Trustees, object to no party sending their children to our school, as long as our school is not crowded, as, a matter of convenience for them. But the parties coming three miles, he can make no capital out of them, as they attended our school previous to his engagement as our Teacher. The average he claims, Mr. Editor, is 110, of this average he can only claim 20% and his assistant, the remainder. Referring to the matter of the Storekeepers of our village. It is customary with business men to find out the hard cases they have to deal with, and ask the prices to suit. I consider you can buy from the merchants of Priceville, as cheap as in any other place in Canada to-day. If Mr. D. refers to me as the Cliques servant, I must say he is very complimentary in regard to the people of this vicinity. We are a friendly class of people here in Priceville, but Mr. Dixon has never attended any of our meetings here, during his three years stay and I believe the reason he kept away was, that he was afraid it would cost him 25 cents. With regard to the petition, impairing his usefulness, I may state that there was a much larger one in circulation against him on his first engagement, and then he should have picked up the courage to resign. But I suppose money was the object and he would not do so until he had taken twelve hundred and sixty dollars off this section. Being an old soldier, I have learned ball practice and I do not believe in shooting at the tree, when the bird has flown. If he were here to face the music, I would give him more of it.

Dominion Elections.

It is now rumored that the Dominion Elections will be brought on in a short time. All the better. The County of Grey is ripe for action, and will send Dr. Jamison, Dr. Sproule and Mr. Masson, Q. C., to Ottawa as its representatives in the Commons. The battle here will be sharp but decisive: and just as surely as Centre, South and North Grey are now in line in the Local House, just so surely will they be in line in the Dominion House at the forthcoming elections.

That Ungentlemanly "Reply" by W. H. Thurston.

To the Editor of The Advance.

When a person is publicly attacked through the press, it is sometimes necessary to use the same medium for defence, especially when a public "hearing" cannot be obtained in any other way. This being the case now, will you please publish the following, viz.

The above named person undertook to, in a former issue of the ADVANCE, "set at naught," statements made in my 'parody' concerning a Southern climate which was a truthful account not only based on my own experience, that of my family and other Canadians of various ages, temperaments, complexions and constitutions, but also, upon the effects produced on natives of the South, all of which this ungenerous writer intimates as being "magnified" and afterwards says, "'Tis plainly a biased account," surely, having known me all his life, (and about twice his years,) as a truth telling man, not even given to exaggeration. It does not become him who never even saw the South, to use such strong, unfair expressions; to refer to others better authority &c. How does he know but they are "biased" in favour of the Southern States?

More than once in his "reply" he berates his own country, (Canada), conveying to foreigners at least, the idea that it is a cold, inhospitable climate. To shew you how incompetent to "reply," or defend the South, I may remark that he closes by intimating that it is a country of "earthquakes" to which he "owns, (he is) "afraid to go."

Now this is worse than anything I wrote, but, nothing more than what may be expected from a person undertaking what they are unqualified for. I wrote that 'parody' for the good of my fellow-countrymen, hoping thereby to save them loss of time, money, and health in trying to find a better country than CANADA which is an impossibility.

I again remark that those Southerners are a kind, hospitable people, may providence ever bless and prosper them, and Northerners also. In conclusion I would advise W. H. T. to use, and not abuse his poetical talent, which I have ever maintained is of no inferior order.

WM. PURDY.

Winnipeg, Dec. 4th, 1886.

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

The festive season has come and gone—the time, I mean—when the ponderous Xmas turkey and the fat New Year's goose is the prominent bill of fare at the festive board. Many a happy smile, ringing laugh, and side-splitting joke has been seen, heard and enjoyed by the circles of friends, that the Christmastide has brought together—once in the year. And the children—God bless them!—how their bright eyes sparkle! what screams of delight as Santa Claus drops his presents in their midst.

How mens minds surge with wild excitement when election times pass round. The past few days have been full of anxious care as to the result of the vote given for parliamentary and municipal legislatures. Eugenians in general believe that the right men have been sent to do duty at the front. With what eager eyes will their work be scanned by the awaiting multitudes at home; and justly, too, when one contemplates the tremendous issues that lie beneath and beyond their actions—fraught with weal or woe. Now, gentlemen—Rorke, Cairns—forward march! prove the metal your made of and the wise choice of those who gave you such sacred trusts.

RANDY'S RESIGNATION.

Efforts to Get Lord Hartington Into the Tory Cabinet.

THE IRISH JUBILANT.

Chamberlain Anxious to Get the Liberals United Again.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: It is said that Lord Hartington will be asked to assume the office of Prime Minister. On the other hand, it is reported that he will be pressed to take Lord Randolph Churchill's place as leader of the Government party in the House of Commons. Lord Hartington is at present in Rome.

The St. James' Gazette says that if financial reasons explain Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation from the Cabinet there is nothing to be said except that there is not much to be deplored, but if the Local Government Bill was the cause, then the Government has grievously erred.

The Echo says it believes that Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation was due to an essential divergence of opinion with the rest of the Cabinet.

The Evening News says patriots are pained and surprised. It asks Lord Randolph Churchill to justify his course, warning him that if he does not his name will never be heard without exciting exasperation.

The Globe says it would be difficult for the warmest admirers of Lord Randolph Churchill to vindicate his step.

The Pall Mall Gazette declares that it will be impossible for Lord Salisbury to govern unless Lord Hartington steps into the breach. It says it is impossible to conceive of any hypothesis upon which Lord Hartington could defend, morally or politically, a refusal to accept the post which Lord Randolph Churchill has vacated.

The Queen sent her private secretary o London to-day with a message for Lord Salisbury.

The resignation of Lord Churchill was proclaimed through the streets of Dublin this morning by a bell-man. The populace showed enthusiasm over the news.

The Carlton Club (Conservative) received the announcement of Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation with surprise and regret.

Lord Hartington will return to London immediately, and until he arrives the Marquis of Salisbury will remain quiescent. It is thought improbable that Lord Hartington will accept office, as Mr. Chamberlain and a majority of the Unionist leaders object to his so doing. On the other hand, it is learned from a reliable source that the Queen will use the utmost pressure to induce him to join the Ministry and become Conservative leader in the House of Commons, believing that he alone can neutralize the effect of Lord Randolph Churchill's course. If Lord Hartington refuses to take office the Conservatives favor Sir Michael Hicks-Beach resuming the duties of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the appointment of the Right Hon. Edward Stanhope, the present Colonial Secretary, to the Irish Chief Secretaryship. Lord Salisbury had a long conference to-day with the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, Secretary of State for War, and Sir Frederick Ponsonby. The Prime Minister returned to Hatfield House this evening. The Queen summoned Lord Randolph Churchill and Lord George Hamilton, First Lord of the Admiralty, to Windsor on Tuesday. Failing to reconcile Lord Randolph to the Cabinet's views, the Queen gave him time to consider the points at issue. Lord Salisbury was aware of Lord Randolph's decision yesterday morning, and the matter was whispered at a ball given at Hatfield House last evening. Lord Randolph's premature divulgence of his decision to the Times is considered a breach of faith. Mr. Matthews, Home Secretary, is the only member of the Cabinet whose resignation is considered probable, and the Right Hon. C. R. Ritchie, President of the Local Government Board, and Mr. W. T. Jackson, Financial Secretary of the Treasury, who share Lord Randolph's views, may possibly retire. Lord Randolph, in an interview to-day, said his health was better than it had been for months past. His decision to retire, he said, was the result of due deliberation, and arose from no ill-temper or weariness of office. Lord Randolph has abandoned his contemplated visit to Ireland.

The Mayor of Limerick, presiding at a meeting of the Irish National League to-night, said the resignation of Churchill would lead to the return of the Liberals to power and Home Rule for Ireland.

The Cabinet will not meet until next Wednesday. All the Ministers will pass Christmas at their country seats. Lord Randolph Churchill authorizes the statement that he will continue to give a general support to the Government, and on disputed questions in Parliament will hold aloof rather than oppose the Government, avoiding everything that might tend to jeopardize the entente between Tories and Liberals of Unionist principles. It is reported that Lord Salisbury has renewed his offer of the Premiership to Lord Hartington, he, himself, proposing to take the Foreign Office, and Lord Hartington to have the right to select a portion of the Cabinet. The Carlton and other Conservative clubs are almost deserted owing to the holidays, but the few members remaining give unlimited expression to their fury against Lord Randolph Churchill, stigmatizing him as a traitor who will be forever unworthy of the party confidence.

The Conservative Association in Lord Randolph's constituency is arranging for the appointment of a committee to call upon Lord Randolph and demand of him an explanation of his conduct.

An informal meeting of Gladstonians was held at the National Liberal Club to-night. There was much rejoicing over the prospective breaking up of the Conservative-Unionists coalition, and the hope was expressed that the gradual reapproachment of the Churchill-Chamberlain alliance to the Gladstonians will result, in the course of the coming session of Parliament, in the return of Mr. Gladstone to office.

Mr. Chamberlain made a speech at a private meeting of the Birmingham Liberal Council last evening. He said the political situation was an extraordinary and critical one. It had totally changed within twenty-four hours. "Although," he continued, "I have often differed from Lord Randolph Churchill I have never failed to do justice to his great ability and quick appreciation of public sentiment. Though reared in old Toryism, he has repeatedly risen superior to it, and his position in the present Government was a guarantee to me that they would not pursue a reactionary policy. Churchill's recent speeches displayed Liberal principles on the most important questions. His resignation is a very significant one. It seems old Tory influence has gained the upper hand. The keynote of Churchill's policy was to maintain the alliance with the Unionists. I thought that perhaps the Tories had grown wise by experience, and were prepared to govern in a liberal spirit. If they have abandoned that intention Lord Salisbury must be prepared to face the consequences. Now, gentlemen, in view of this startling change, I ask myself what are the Gladstonians going to do? It seems to me they have a great, and perhaps a final opportunity. We Liberals agree upon ninety-nine points and disagree upon only one point. Even upon Irish matters, when I look into the thing, I am more surprised at the number of points whereon we are agreed than at the remainder upon which for the present we must be content to differ. My opposition to Mr. Gladstone's Bill has been grossly misrepresented. I never said I was opposed to the great land scheme. I opposed the Gladstone Bill mainly upon two grounds. First, I believed it would involve a loss which the British taxpayer ought not to bear. Second, I was not prepared to do anything precluding an arrangement to make Ireland practically independent. It is one thing to use all the resources of the State to benefit your fellow citizens; it is a different thing altogether to undertake a risk for those about to drift from you, but I never doubted that it was possible to devise a plan for the settlement of the land question. I am convinced that any of the three Liberal leaders can soon arrange a scheme which, without the growing and unfair risk on the British taxpayer, will in a short time make the Irish tenant owner of the land he cultivates. We have all agreed on a scheme for England and Scotland and we are prepared to apply it, with the necessary change of details, to Ireland. Are we to remain disjointed, fighting, and in internecine strife for the benefit of our opponents, or are we to make this honest attempt? If we do not agree on every point, at least we can agree to carry these important reforms on which there is no difference of opinion between us, and leave it to time and a frank discussion of the subject to say whether, when we have accomplished these reforms, we may not go a step further in the direction of the views of those who are now unfortunately our opponents. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Chamberlain, writing to the leaders of the Crofter party, expresses his willingness to take charge in Parliament of needful amendments to the Crofters Act.

A London cable says: The Times says there is reason to believe that the Marquis of Salisbury is ready to serve under Lord Hartington, and will offer him the leadership in the House or allow him to form a strictly Liberal Unionist Government.

The Standard announces that Lord Randolph Churchill, in his letter of resignation to Lord Salisbury, gave as his sole reason for resigning his unwillingness to accept the naval and military estimates. "With the exception of Lord Randolph Churchill," says the Standard, "the Cabinet is in harmony on the subject of the estimates, feeling that while the whole Continent is trembling with the apprehension of war, England's first duty is to look to her defences. Lord Randolph Churchill was all for a popular, economic budget at any price; the country will know how to appreciate such services." Lord Randolph's resignation has produced the greatest sensation in European capitals.

In consequence of Lord Salisbury's request Lord Hartington will remain in Rome until Sunday to await letters from Lord Salisbury. Lord Hartington has not received an invitation to enter the Cabinet. It is improbable that an invitation would be sent by telegraph, as he has no cypher that would enable him to translate a Government despatch. He will not come to a decision until he has received Lord Salisbury's letters. Lord Hartington thinks that virtually there has been no change in the situation since last autumn. He reserves his opinion as to the future. The opinion grows that Lord Hartington will not enter the Cabinet.

It has been virtually decided to further prorogue Parliament until the second week in February. Lord Randolph Churchill alone insists upon an early meeting. A Cabinet Council has been summoned for next week. Lord Randolph Churchill is irritated and astounded at the unanimity of the denunciations of his course by Conservatives. The supporters of Lord Randolph declare that when he is able to tell the true reason of his resignation the disclosure will cause a sensation throughout the country and result in his triumphant vindication. They say it will be shown that he did not oppose the grants for the necessary defence of the Empire, but that he refused to sanction an increase of the estimates unless it was accompanied by a reformed administration of the War and Admiralty Departments. Lord Randolph discovered while in office, say his friends, that the Government had no control over the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of pounds which we yearly voted for the War Office for material that has never been provided, and that similar abuses exist in the Admiralty.

It is expected that Parliament will be prorogued until the 3rd of February, in order to allow of the formation of a new Ministry.

The News, referring to Mr. Chamberlain's speech at Birmingham yesterday, says his conciliatory temper will be reciprocated, and that his speech will bear fruit.

The Times says Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation will do more for economic reform in one year than his administration would have been able to do in a dozen years.

Lord Hartington, accompanied by Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, attended Christmas services at St. Peter's and Santa Maria Maggoire Cathedrals, in Rome. Lord Hartington will go to Monte Carlo on Monday. He will not reach London until January 10th.

The divisions in the Cabinet that led to Lord Churchill's resignation embraced questions of wide interest. Lord Randolph's disagreement with the chief spending departments commenced with a proposal to reform the entire Civil Service, including an investigation of the votes asked in the coming financial year. Lord Hamilton and Right Hon. Mr. Smith, heads respectively of the Admiralty and War Offices, while willing to consider a general scheme for future departmental investigations, declined to discuss the estimates now under preparation, and were supported by a majority of the Cabinet. On the County Government Board Bill Lord Churchill was defeated by a majority of one. On the question of the withdrawal of the army from Egypt he was supported by only four of his colleagues. On the proposed cloture rules and coercive measures in Ireland he failed to carry with him one-third of the Cabinet. But an issue of far more importance to him as a leader of the Tory Democracy was that of perpetual pensions. His position on this question rallied against him the entire body of permanent heads of departments, supported by every member of the Cabinet except Lord Churchill's personal appointees.

There has been a Churchill faction in the Cabinet from the start. It is well known that Sir Stafford Northcote was shot into the Peers at Lord Randolph's aim, who wanted to get rid of Sir Stafford from the House of Commons. But the latter in the Cabinet soon began to pay back his young tormentor.

Lord Iddesleigh is a Bourbon politician who opposes all progress and lives in the year 1847, while Lord Churchill, a radical Tory, wishes to keep abreast of the times. With Lord Iddesleigh as fellow-Bourbons in the Cabinet are Lord John Manners and Viscount Cranbrooke, about 70 years old each; also Messrs. Cross and Smith, who are over 60.

Lord George Hamilton is a young Bourbon, only 41 years old, but the son of a Tory duke, and whose mother is the daughter of another Tory duke, and who is jealous of Lord Churchill's leadership. The latter really had only Mr. Matthews, in the Home Office, as an intimate sympathizing colleague, and Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour as apparent friends.

Lord Randolph is a reformer, agitator and economist. He is for letting continental politics generally take care of themselves. He especially wished diminished taxation on the masses. Those old Bourbon colleagues were John Bulls, on whom Lord Churchill acted as a red rag. Several of them, at first, thought Lord Churchill would fail as leader of the House, whereas he made a decided mark. The first friction in the Cabinet was Lord Churchill's proposal to adopt Parliamentary changes—such as the previous question and divisional legislation by working committees. They twitted Lord Churchill with his intimacy with Mr. Chamberlain, who was another red rag to Lord Iddesleigh. Next, Lord Churchill believed in a real, local democratic, electoral county government, not in any half-way measures by letting the Home Government and what he called "the squirearchy" appoint some local officials. Soon the London city Tories were horrified to see Lord Churchill oppose their taxation of the rest of London a shilling per ton for coal, also Lords Iddesleigh and Manners, who pointed out that this tax was as old as the time of James II.

Lord Churchill did not believe in extreme Irish coercion and protecting landlordism, but when young Lord Hamilton wanted £800,000 for the navy and old Mr. Smith £500,000 for the army, and Lord Salisbury backed these, they were the last straws on the back of the budget, and Lord Churchill resigned.

The Telegraph rather defends Lord Churchill's step, and says frankly that "Conservatism, to live, must be democratic." The Chronicle writes similarly, and says: "On the question of economy being slighted by Lord Churchill's colleagues, they, and not he, have thrown away their future in politics." The Post climbs the fence on the event, but, on the whole, thinks Lord Churchill took the honorable and patriotic course.

The other Government organ, the Standard, inveighs against Lord Churchill's patriotism, and devotes two distinct editorials to show him up as a Tory traitor. The Standard is the devotee of Lord Iddesleigh.

GEN. GORDON'S LIEUTENANT.

Another Expedition Talked of to Equatorial Africa.

EMIN PACHA'S DANGER.

A London cable says: The apathy that has long prevailed regarding Emin Pacha is quickly changing into an earnest desire to send him help before it is too late. In 1878 Dr. Emin Bey was sent by Gen. Gordon to the Equatorial Province of Africa as Governor. When he took the post there was an annual deficit of £39,000; in 1881 he sent down £8,000 surplus revenue. In 1882 he was in Khartoum and offered to the authorities to try and make peace with the Mahdi. They refused his help, and told him to go back to his Province, develop it and protect its frontiers. From that day to this he never had news or orders from the Egyptian Government nor supplies.

The last letters received from him at that time were dated March, 1883. From that day till a few weeks ago no news was heard, though there were many rumors that he was dead. Then there came a letter from him dated December, 1885, and another, the latest received, dated July, 1886, from Wandelai. The last arrived three weeks ago, after an extraordinarily rapid journey of four and a half months. These letters were published, and the Anti-Slavery Society of London immediately petitioned the British Government to send an expedition for his relief. This was followed by a petition from the council of the Scottish Geographical Society asking the Government to send a pacific relief expedition. About the same time Stanley wrote to some friends in this country, offering to lead a Government expedition for the relief of Emin. His services were offered gratuitously, and he also said that should another leader be chosen he would give £500 to the expedition.

The British Government considered the different memorials and were forced to take action by events at Cairo. Unknown to them, Dr. Schweinfurth, the African traveller and a friend of Emin, brought great pressure to bear upon the Egyptian Government. They raised Emin Bey to the rank of Pacha, so that he is now Emin Pacha, thus recognizing his position and their responsibility. They also voted £10,000 to any expedition for his relief. Their action altered the matter considerably. The British Government had considered that Emin had been recalled and was holding out against orders. This, however, is not the fact, for, on the testimony of English missionaries at Uganda, the letters of recall sent, via Zanzibar, to Emin, were opened by King Mwanga and destroyed.

The British Government then accepted the offer of certain private individuals to equip a relief expedition with Stanley as the leader, the Egyptian grant to be given to that expedition.

Whatever expedition goes should carry relief at the earliest possible moment. Already the Government delay, and nothing is to be done till Junker arrives in London. He has been in Zanzibar a fortnight, and could have been telegraphed to. He leaves Zanzibar to-day and will be here in three weeks, a loss of five precious weeks. Very probably this will be the Gordon history over again—"too late."

Emin Bey, it is said, had ammunition enough to last him to the end of the year, provided he is not attacked. If he falls the result will be to hand over to the slave dealers a population of six millions, Emin Pacha having retained a province which is nearly as large as Europe intact from slavery. Both domestic slavery and slave dealing have been entirely abolished there since 1880, while the people have been taught the arts of weaving and cultivation, and roads have been made. The people themselves have most valiantly defended their liberty and prosperity against outside aggression, but it may be too late.

IMPORTANT SCOTT ACT DECISION.

Chief Justice Palmer Declares Its Enforcement a Matter of Dominion Concern.

An Ottawa telegram says: Advices from Prince Edward Island show that Chief Justice Palmer, of the Supreme Court of that Province, has rendered a decision which, if sustained, will make the Scott Act a dead letter. The Chief Justice has ordered the discharge of a party convicted of violating the Scott Act, on the ground that the Stipendiary Magistrate who tried the case had no jurisdiction, as he was appointed by the Provincial and not by the Dominion Government. This is in effect a declaration that the Scott Act, being a Dominion revenue act, must be enforced by Dominion officers. A writ of prohibition has been served upon the Stipendiary Magistrate at Charlottetown, restraining him from hearing Scott Act cases.

Chief Justice Palmer's decision goes much further than Mr. Mowat's statement that the Provincial Governments have nothing to do with the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act, and only undertake to aid in carrying out the provisions as a matter of good will.

A Strange Case of Seizure.

A Montreal despatch says: Jeffords & Co., importers of woollens and dry goods, have had a surprise from Ernest Friend, an employee they once had. A few days ago the firm of McKeand, Turner & Co., of Winnipeg, who held a claim against Friend, communicated with Messrs. Atwater & Co., of this city. The result was that the entire stock of Jeffods & Co. was seized last night on the ground that Friend was the sole member of the firm. It being late, a guardian was not found, and the store was closed this morning. Messrs. Greenshields, on behalf of Messrs. Jeffords & Co., made a deposit of $500, and asked that the seizure be set aside, as Friend was not connected with the firm. Judge Mathieu granted the application.

Sir Lyon Playfair says it costs 50 cents to $1 to put a pound of flesh upon an animal or man from a beef, mutton, or ham diet; 38 cents on wheat bread diet; 15 cents for a pound of flesh on an oatmeal diet, and 2½ cents for a pound on a potato diet.

A TALK WITH PARNELL.

He Discourses on His Illness, the Political Crisis and the Plan of Campaign.

A London cable says: A reporter called on Mr. Parnell at the Euston Square Hotel this evening. He presented his card and was promptly admitted to Mr. Parnell's apartments. Mr. Parnell looks much paler and thinner than at the end of the last session, but he is evidently making good progress. He said that his physician believed that he will be stronger than for many years. Mr. Parnell explained that he had not yet granted personal interviews on political subjects, as the fatigue and excitement would be too much for him, but he was willing to make an exception when information was sought for the American public. He said that his illness became acute about the end of October, but for several months previously he had been losing flesh, appetite and strength, until in the autumn session he felt almost entirely unable to do any work. Continuing, he said: "After my malady had become fully developed, I was unable to read or write anything or attend to any kind of business for several weeks, and it is only within the last three weeks that I have permitted myself even to think of political affairs, while even now the excitement and fatigue of the last few days have distinctly thrown me back and made me feel worse." Mr. Parnell then turned to the political situation. He remarked that the Government, now that Lord Randolph Churchill had resigned, would have something else to think of than coercing Ireland. It would have to struggle for existence. The Government, he continued, would have been unlikely to apply coercive powers in any case, because the marked absence of crime, the general moderation with which the campaign had been conducted, and the fact that the object of the Government and of the campaign promoters was the same, namely, that of obtaining a fair rent abatement from unyielding landlords, had taken away many of the usual excuses for coercion. Regarding the legality of the campaign, Mr. Parnell said, he was unwilling to take the law from either Justice O'Brien or Justice Johnston, both of whom were strong political partisans, who had received their offices in reward for political services, and who were notoriously lawyers of mediocre ability. There was confusion in the judgment itself as well as in the proclamation. "In any case," continued Mr. Parnell, "if it should be finally and clearly decided by high legal opinion of recognized authority that the campaign is illegal, you must remember it will be only technically illegal, and only so because the same right of combination which the Legislature, after much agitation, legalized for British workmen under the name of Trades' Unionism had not yet been extended to Irish tenant farmers."

LADY COLIN CAMPBELL ON GENERAL BUTLER

The conduct of Gen. Butler, in refusing to testify in the Campbell divorce case, is still a fruitful topic of conversation. Gen. Butler is in France and his solicitor, Mr. George Lewis, made every effort to induce him to return, but without success. Lady Campbell wrote to him as follows:

"DEAR GENERAL BUTLER,—You will remember that Mr. Lewis, in my presence and at his office, proposed for your own convenience that you should be examined in regard to the case now pending. You said it would be unnecessary as you intended to return to England and appear in person at the trial. This was so obviously desirable in the interest of your own character that nothing further could then have been urged upon you; and it is, therefore, with profound amazement that I now learn you have changed this intention. You must know that your failure to appear at the trial will inflict a monstrous injustice upon me and put me to cruel and unnecessary trouble in the vindication of my character from the unfounded inferences drawn by my enemies and yours from the single fact of your having called upon me in Lord Colin's house. These inferences can be instantly dissipated by a single, straightforward and manly denial on your part, and this denial I have the right to expect from you as a friend, a gentleman and a soldier. Hoping soon to learn that you have resumed your original intention to appear in person, I remain, yours truly ————."

The following curt reply was received:

"DEAR LADY CAMPBELL,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 15th of November, and in reply I can only repeat that my resolution of not appearing in evidence at the forthcoming trial remains unchanged."

Lady Campbell made a strong appeal to Lady Butler, who is the celebrated artist, and received the following answer:

"DEAR LADY COLIN CAMPBELL,—I beg to say I am fully aware of all the efforts you have made and have caused to be made to induce my husband to appear and give evidence on oath at your trial. Your appeal to me touched me deeply. I would I could help you, but I believe the case to have passed out of our hands and to have gone before a tribunal where human aid is impossible.—I remain, sincerely yours,

"ELIZABETH BUTLER."

A Pure Woman's Worth.

Dr. Elizabeth H. Bradley, of London, a leader in the social movement, who lately addressed a Chicago audience under the auspices of the W. C. T. A pure woman is worth a legion of corrupted men."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

STONEY CREEK.

Reminiscences of the Battle in 1813.

To the Editor of the TIMES:

SIR,—If you will favor me with the use of your valuable paper for a few reminiscences of one of the veterans of the war of 1812 and 1813, who took an active part in the battle of Stoney Creek, I will be grateful to you. I have read with interest the war stories in your paper of your correspondent Hans B. B. E. He has told you and your many readers how the British got possession of the American countersign on the eve of the battle of Stoney Creek, the 5th of June, 1813; how Isaac Corman got it from one of the American officers while he was a prisoner in charge of the Americans; how on his way home after his release from imprisonment he met the gallant young scout, William Green, to whom Mr. Corman communicated the American countersign. Let us now follow this gallant young hero, who had not yet reached his 18th year of age, as he dashes away with the fleetness of an Indian through the woods to his home at Stoney Creek, where he procures a horse, mounts it, and rides with all possible haste to General Vincent's headquarters at Burlington Heights. General Vincent's position on Burlington Heights was a most critical one. York on one side and Fort George on the other had both fallen; his ammunition, which he was obliged to abandon or destroy before evacuating Fort George, was now reduced to ninety rounds of ball cartridge for each man, and were he forced to continue his retreat, unless the British fleet, under Sir James Yeo, could reach the anchorage near the Brant House, four miles from his position and carry off his small force, he would have to continue it by way of York (Toronto), thence to Kingston over 200 miles of hard country roads—not such roads as we have at the present day. The reader will remember that York was then at the mercy of the American fleet. Vincent's position, as we said before, was a most critical one, having a comparatively powerful army in full pursuit, seven miles distant (at Stoney Creek), following closely on his tracks, he had to choose between making a most desperate stand there or to abandon his post with all its stores, etc., and continue his retreat to Kingston. Such of our readers as have travelled over the line of Vincent's retreat from Fort George to Burlington Heights will remember and call to mind that narrow neck of land between the Barton Heights and the head waters of Burlington Bay, on which the British force stood that Saturday night, the 5th of June, 1813. There were many young Canadians serving in that little British force—plucky boys, whose names will ever live, cherished as "household words" in many a Canadian home. Some of them afterwards rose high at the Bar, on the Bench, in the legislative halls, or as colonels of the Upper Canada militia. We may here note that at a "Queenston Heights Annual Dinner," over thirty years ago, Sir Allan MacNab gave as a toast, "The Fighting Judges of Upper Canada." There were at that time five of those judges still living who had served through the whole war. The young Canadian reader may thus form his estimate of the men who stood in the ranks of our Niagara frontier army in 1812-13, doing battle for their king and country. We will now return to that ever-memorable day, Saturday, the 5th of June, 1813. The advance guard, or rather rear guard, of the British that afternoon was stationed two miles in rear of the entrenched camp, near the present Court House and square in the city of Hamilton. Hamilton was then nowhere—not even a village. On that spot, half an hour before midnight, the attacking party of 704 men was formed and took up its line of march on Stoney Creek, under Colonel Harvey. During the day—Saturday, the 5th of June, 1813—Colonel Harvey (afterwards Sir John Harvey, Governor of New Brunswick,) had acquainted himself with the American position. Some say that he had visited their camp at Stoney Creek during the day disguised as a farmer on his way to his work. Be this as it may, Harvey made himself thoroughly acquainted with the American position, and, having got possession of the American countersign from the heroic young William Green, he proposed a night attack, which General Vincent approved of. Let us now follow this brave little army, with their 704 unloaded muskets and flintless locks, on their mission into the jaws of death. Before starting, command was given for every flint to be taken out of their muskets and not to even whisper, so as to prevent the possibility of an accidental alarm. Every man, however, had his well filled cartouche box, containing sixty rounds of ball cartridge, and his trusty bayonet by his side. The fate of Upper Canada depended upon the success or failure of this night surprise. Silently they moved, not a whisper was heard; there was silence deep as death in the ranks during that midnight march of seven miles. On and on they tread through that dense forest in the solemn hours of the night. So silently did they move that not a sound was heard, not a sound to quell the dreadful silence that prevailed, save now and then the cracking of a stray dry branch under foot, an occasional splash of some unfortunate fellow who makes a misstep into some mud hole, the howl of the wolf or the hoot of the night owl, or a whispered word of command. Have you ever, reader, walked at night along a country road of Upper Canada in the old time, the road often times only a narrow trail and so dark that you could not see your hand before you, with great towering trees of oak, elm, walnut, pine, etc., overhanging, adding to the darkness? If you have you can picture the road over which this forlorn hope had to travel. Thence, emerging from the thick darkness of their midnight tramp, they had to face an enemy's camp having six to one to greet their early, unexpected Sunday morning visit. "Hush," said Harvey to a young man, the late Judge Jarvis, "Hush, we are on them!" In an instant the bayonets of two of the leading men pierced the first sentry—the second shared a like fate. One of them was standing leaning against a large oak tree, quietly sleeping with his arms folded around his musket. William Green, the scout, who was in the advance close by Harvey in the beginning of the battle, related to me that with his sword he silenced one sentry at Lewis' Lane, who was in the act of bayoneting him. The fourth escaped, discharging his gun and alarming the camp. "Bayonets to the front" were the words passed quietly and quickly through the ranks, and our leading files were soon in front of the camp fires, bayoneting many of the sleeping enemy. A detachment of the small army, under Harvey, who was guided to the chapel door, or as it is better known as "the old Methodist meeting house," by the young scout William Green. I have already stated that the fourth sentry, who was standing near the door of the church, raised the alarm by discharging his musket, but the poor fellow had to pay the penalty for that act by having a bayonet thrust through his body, who, as the scout related, had only time to say, "O, Lord God!" and threw up his hands and fell backwards dead. The coast being clear they surrounded the church, and captured thirty Americans, who were bivouacked in the church fast asleep. The main body at "the double" pressed on into the valley under a cloud of fire bursting from an unseen enemy. The men then prepared to adjust their flints. It was first, "handle cartridge, prime, load, draw ramrods, ram down cartridge, return ramrods (all this had to be done with the old musket), then ready—fire!" Volley after volley followed, but with little execution, as they fired into the darkness, not seeing the enemy. During this operation a heavy volley from the enemy cut down a number of our men, but fortunately they were on low ground and the level fire of the enemy passed over them. Harvey ordered two companies of the gallant 49th Regiment to the right to attack, or rather to throw into confusion, the left and centre of the enemy. Those flank movements of the 49th threw the enemy into terrible confusion. Three of their guns posted in the centre on the main road were captured; scarcely a gunner escaped. The late Col. Fraser, of Perth, Ont., then serving as a sergeant in the 49th, having twelve men with him, was one of the first among the guns, bayoneting seven of the gunners with his own hands. He was present at the capture of the two American Generals, Chandler and Winder, near the guns. The young Canadian militia being so familiar with the Indians that they could imitate their warwhoop to perfection, they knew that the Americans dreaded the Indians more than the whites. There was fearful confusion in the American camp. Being ignorant of the strength of the attacking party, they fell back in great disorder. Hundreds of them scrambled to the heights on their left. Colonel Burns, on whom the command of the Americans now devolved, was among the first to mount his horse and start eastward with his 250 brave cavalry, reaching the Forty-mile Creek in a few hours, on their way to Fort George. It is not our intention to particularize or chronicle the many daring feats and hand-to-hand encounters during the darkness of that ever-memorable Sunday morning, the 6th of June, 1813. Suffice it to say that Harvey's surprise was most successful and complete, causing the breaking up of the American camp and their subsequent retreat. Sunday morning before break of day the now scattered parties of this forlorn hope fell back, to return by the road over which they had advanced. They had suffered fearfully. They were not now the "seven hundred and four" of the previous night! Over one hundred and fifty of them, between killed, wounded and missing, did not answer the roll call that morning. Let us take a peep at the shattered remnant of this forlorn hope as they muster and reform for their return march to Burlington Heights. They are gathering and coming in from all parts of the field, some in small squads, some in twos, some in threes, others singly, some bearing and carrying off wounded comrades. Over one hundred and fifty of them are missing; but they have swelling their ranks two American Generals, Chandler and Winder; seven officers and one hundred and sixteen men, prisoners, with their guns as trophies of war—gracing their blood-stained bayonets, thus rendering Stoney Creek the most gallant affair for the British arms during the war of 1812. There was only one mistake made that night—a fatal one—that of our men placing themselves in front of the camp fires as living targets for the bullets of the unerring American rifle.

This ends our sketch of the battle of Stoney Creek.

And now as nearly all of those gallant men who fought and bled to maintain our rights and liberties as well as theirs have passed away, the best thing we of the present can do to commemorate that victory, will be to erect a suitable monument on that old battle-field near Stoney Creek.

JOHN W. GREEN, Stoney Creek.

The Little Boy's Gift.

I have a true story which is well worth the telling. Last Sunday a young clergyman from a young congregation preached, by exchange, to a congregation which is one of the serene, old-fashioned, undisturbed sort, where the rising generation's undoubted human nature is allowed for in a quiet and sensible way. The visiting clergyman remained to the Sunday School, and after the exercises were about half finished he rose to make a little speech. "I know that you are an enterprising Sunday School," he said, "because I see you have so many new books. I know that you are a happy Sunday School, because I see so many smiling faces around me. And I know that you are a generous Sunday School, because that little boy over there by the long pew door offered me a peanut as I came in." The attention of the assembly was instantly directed to the little boy, who began to snicker uncontrolably to himself. "Well, what's the matter, my little man?" asked the clergyman. "You're not sorry you offered me the peanut are you?" "Did you th-think that was a peanut I gave you?" asked the little boy, still snickering violently. "Why, yes; wasn't it?" "No-o-o! 'twas only a shell!"—Boston Post.

CHRISTMAS BON-BONS.

Little Paragraphs About the Holiday Season--Poetry and Pastery.

The Christmas feast beyond all question
Would test an ostrich's digestion.

Buy wooden toys for your children. When they are broken next week they won't be entirely useless. They can at least be used as firewood.

Christmas comes but once a year, and it is very lucky for the man with a large family that he has fifty-two weeks to catch up before the next one arrives.

Young men who have pawned their overcoats to make a raise for Christmas will take notice that the new Eastern weather prophet declares that "it will be very cold in January."

Now Christmas comes with much good cheer:
With some 'twill be a day of beer;
Next day, with heads both dull and sore,
They'll swear that Christmas was a bore.

The laziest boy on record is one who wouldn't hang up his stocking on Christmas. His mother had to hang it up for him and make the present also. She will always have that boy to support.

Girls, if you want to discover your future husband, place the wish bone of the turkey above the door. If you have no turkey an old buckle will do just as well. Grab the first man who enters and jump heavily on his toes. If he swears, you haven't hold of the right man.

The sweetest day in all the year
Is Christmas day, so jolly,
When loved ones come from far and near
To dance beneath the holly.

Are you mad at your neighbor? Well, don't kill his chickens nor stone his cat, because that's silly and childish. Just make his boy a Christmas present of an accordeon and you have heaped coals of fire on his head which will soothe and singe his devoted scalp till the last inharmonious discord has been yanked out of the old machine.

A New Train Game.

A drummer fresh from a southern trip sat in a Boston liquor dispensary the other day and said: "Boys, I've struck a new game since I saw you last, and it is going to be popular sure enough. Cards are all right in a smoking car with the boys, and what a fellow wants is something that will keep his mind off from the fatigue of travelling, and at the same time give him some amusement. Well, when we left Atlanta I ran up against another drummer who knew all about this new game, and we hadn't been at it more than an hour before the whole train, men, women and children, were playing at it. Now, the modus operandi was something like this: The game is to count 1,000 points. My friend sat on one side of the car and I on the other. A boy, dog, cow, sheep or horse counted 10 each, a man 15, a woman 20, a girl 25 and a cat 30. A red headed girl counted 100. We watched the car window until we reached Alexandria, Va. His score was 875, and I saw that in ten minutes he was likely to make the 1,000. I had 730 and I felt pretty certain that I would have to pay for that box of cigars. Well, the train drew into Alexandria and there were three red-headed girls standing on the platform, and I ran the game out on him there."

Perhaps There are Chips and—Chips.

"I used to think that men had an awfully easy time," said Mrs. Franks, "but I've changed my mind, and hereafter I'm going to take all the care off Charles I possibly can. You see the other morning I told Charles we wanted some wood and to be sure and order some. Well, I waited all day, and that wood didn't come, and I was almost angry, for, said I, 'he has forgotten it, as usual.' Charles didn't come home until late, long after I had retired. He had to go to his club, and it seems he was detained until after midnight. He was awfully restless, and kept talking in his sleep, saying every once in a while, 'Give me another dollar's worth of chips.' So you see I knew that his mind was troubled about that wood. How much it must have worried him, to thus disturb his rest! Hereafter I'm going to attend to all house matters myself. Poor man! he has enough to bother him without doing home errand."—Boston Transcript.

Female Horse Thief.

Rosetta Phelps, a young woman from Gainsboro', aged 23, recently pleaded guilty before Judge Baxter to the charge of stealing a horse from David H. Sensabaugh, near Attercliffe, and was sentenced to six months in the Andrew Mercer Reformatory. She claims that a man named Bechan, with whom she had lived at one time, had forced her to go with him and steal the horse; that he went with her to Port Colborne, and that she drove alone from that place to Willoughby, where she sold the horse to Mr. Thomas Well. for $85, that she returned to Port Colborne and gave Buchan $60, keeping the balance. She says Buchan threatened to shoot her if she did not go with him to steal.

His Little Joke.

"I've become quite interested in that poor man," said a philanthropic old lady to the sheriff, as she pointed to one of the prisoners. "He tells me I would be surprised if I knew all he went through."

"I guess you would, mum," said the sheriff; "that fellow is the most expert pickpocket in the country."—The Judge.

John H. Craig, whose home is in Indiana, near Indianapolis, is six feet four and a half inches in height, and weighs 836 pounds. He measures eight feet two inches around the hips and eighteen inches around the ankle. He was born thirty years ago, and then weighed but eleven pounds. Two years later he took a prize at one of Barnum' baby shows because he weighed 206 pounds. Apparently he has been growing ever since.

From the official reports just published on the cost of vaccination in London, it appears that the whole expense is not less than $600,000 a year. In 1885 the fees and attendant expenses reached $450,000. The cost of a calf-lymph factory alone is over $15,000 per annum. The inspectors and other officers fill out the $600,000.

A PLAGUE OF EELS.

Too Much Fish in London Water Pipes—Where Did They Come From?

The inhabitants of the east end of London are now suffering from a plague of eels, which come to them in their water supply, says the London Post. The fish which the East London Company are distributing to their customers are easily visible to the naked eye, for some have been found no less than eighteen inches long; and the main abounds with them to such an extent that the Local Board of Westham has complained to the Local Government Department with the view of having some remedy applied. Eels are, it is true, a toothsome dainty, whether spatchcocked, stewed, fried or in the form known to diners at Greenwich as anguilles a la Toulouse; but those in East London, instead of fulfilling their destiny by being legitimately caught, skinned and cooked, have a fashion of committing suicide in stop-cocks and taps. There they decompose, with the result, as illustrated lately, of causing the water to become horribly putrid, and of giving something very like typhoid fever to the unlucky consumers. A whole family has just been laid prostrate in this way, and one or two of its members are still seriously ill. The company have been appealed to with little result. They say that three years ago some of their filter beds burst and that the unfiltered water on that occasion made its way into the mains, carrying with it a number of minute eels and other fish, which have since spawned and multiplied in the pipes. The mains have been repeatedly flushed with the object of getting rid of the intruders, but without success, and the company's engineer is only able to tell the sanitary authority that he does not consider that the water is injured by the eels as long as they are alive, though he admits that a dangerous nuisance may arise from them when dead. There is one consideration which does not seem to have occurred either to the Local Board or to the company, and that is whether water that can, under the conditions of its distribution here, support the life of fish, is fit for human consumption. On what do the eels feed? Clearly not on weeds or other vegetable substances, for the water is confined in iron mains. If, however, they find enough animalculæ in the water to enable them to live and grow to a considerable size, is it certain that what is eel's food may be man's poison; and how is it that the official analysts and microscopists are periodically certifying that the water is ree from any impurity of the kind?

A Chance for Married Women.

In 1872 an Act was passed which greatly extended the rights of property of married women. It placed under the control of a woman after marriage any real estate owned by her at the time of marriage or acquired afterward, and made her liable on any contract respecting real estate. It placed under a married woman's own control not merely all her personal earnings prior to marriage, but "all proceeds and profits from any trade or occupation which she carries on separately from her husband, or derived from her literary, artistic or scientific skill," and freed her personal property, even when in her husband's possession, from liability for her husband's debts. It authorized her to insure her own or her husband's life for her benefit or that of her children, to become a shareholder in any financial company, to deposit money in bank and withdraw it by her own cheque, and to institute either civil or criminal proceedings in courts of law for the protection of her property. And, lastly, it freed her husband from all liability for debts contracted by his wife before marriage, as well as for debts contracted after marriage "in respect of any employment or business in which she is engaged on her own behalf or in respect of any of her own contracts."

The Occupations of Great Men.

The Medical Age has been investigating this subject, and says that the father of Demosthenes was a blacksmith; of Euripides, a dealer in vegetables; of Socrates, a mediocre sculptor; of Epicurus, a shepherd; of Virgil, an innkeeper, Columbus was the son of a wool carder; Shakspeare, of a butcher; Luther, of a miner; Cromwell, of a brewer; Sixtus V., of a swineherd; Linnæus, of a poor country minister; Franklin, of a soap boiler; Rousseau, of a watchmaker, and Murat, of an innkeeper. The writer concludes that the mothers of these men may have been the source from which their genius was derived, and, indeed, it is known that some of them were women of more than ordinary excellence.

When the firemen had secured such control of the flames at the fire in Liverpool yesterday at Lewis & Co.'s stores and menagerie as to be able to confine them to the burning premises, it was noticed that the large polar bear in the menagerie was still alive and comparatively unhurt, although surrounded by flames. A determined effort was at once made to rescue the fine brute. A powerful stream of water was kept in full play on the cage, and a number of daring men made their way under the current to the cage. This they wrenched from its fastenings, and grappling it with chains and bars managed, the bear desperately flying at them all the while, to drag the cage from the fire just before the walls of the burning buildings fell in with a crash. The rescue of the bear was witnessed by thousands of people and greeted with great cheering.

DROWNING HIS CHILDREN.

Dreadful Story Told by Mr. James Heekin.

They tell a good story on James H. Heekin.

A friend met him one day at the Little Miami Railroad, just as he was returning from his suburban home in Linwood.

"Where've you been?" was the natural inquiry.

"Been out home drowning four of my children."

"What!—" in a half shriek.

"Been out home drowning four of my children."

"For heaven's sake explain what you mean."

"Well, it is just this. Yesterday I sent up to Levi Goodale at Bradstreet's to get the commercial standing of a New York merchant. This morning I got the report. It said that the man was honest, his business was flourishing, and that his credit was A1. However, it wound up with the suggestive remark, 'But he has a large family of children.' I thought that over, and saw that the inference was that the large family of children was draining his pocket-book, and that it might be held up against him. Now, I have about ten children myself, and as I didn't want my business standing questioned I at once went home and drowned four of them. Good-bye."

Mr. Heekin, it may be remarked, is still at large.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

The Ideal Boot for Women.

The Christmas shopping is fairly under way, and scores of shoppers are plodding through the deep slush and snow of the streets with what patience they can muster. Women can't legislate on the cleaning of the streets, indignation is of little use, and only one thing can be done in the way of self-defence, and that is to wear rubber boots. "But rubber boots are such ungainly things," urges the prejudiced person. Granted; rubber boots are ugly, and all of womankind are waiting eagerly for the promised beautiful boot which is to fit the foot, to lace up over a rubber, and be generally good to look at, as well as good to keep the feet dry and warm. The ideal boot has not yet appeared in the market, but when it does come, if it is to come, if it be not a chimera, it will be welcomed warmly.—Boston Record.

Methodist Anniversary.

Superintendent Armstrong of the Flesherton Methodist Sabbath School is to be most heartily and unreservedly congratulated for the magnificent manner in which the vast audience were entertained by the children of his school on New Year's evening. It was certainly the greatest treat, in the way of Sabbath School anniversaries, we ever had. How those choruses rang out like a myriad of cheerful, merry, musical silver bells on the frosty night air! How sweetly, how touchingly, how charmingly rendered was that delightful solo and chorus, "Tell it Again." One could almost fancy they stood in the tent and gazed on the dying gipsy boy, as they noted how vividly—in voice so sweet and gesture so natural—the scene was presented to the imagination by the soloist, Nellie Smith, And the recitations by the children—Ada Symons, Ernest Symons, Bert Field, James Field, Edwin Large, Walter Blakely, Fred LeGard, Lizzie Field, Robt. Smith, Fred. Sproule, Robbie Thompson, Wesley Smith, Willie Barnhouse, Philip Barnhouse, Violet Perkins, Bert Armstrong, Susan Taylor, Charlie Munshaw,—weren't they just splendid? The recitations alone were worth more than the price of admission. Not only were the pieces well recited, but remarkably good taste was shown in their selection—all containing well pointed morals. The dialogues were capitally rendered, and their tone in perfect keeping with the rest of the program. Among those who took part in them were, Robt. Keefer, Fred. Ayers, Wm. Bellamy, Geo. Pickell, Wm. Sullivan, Ed. Strain, Lou. Armstrong, Gertia Bulmer, Mina Bunt, Edie Bellamy, A. White, Ida LeGard, Minnie LeGard, James Field, Newton Large, Lena Large, Violet Perkins, Ettie Ayers, Martha Bradley, Ettie Varty, Flora Powell, Ada Symons, Laura Wilson, Hattie Sullivan, Flora Richardson, Lizzie Field, and Maggie White. The dialogue which (naturally enough) struck us most forcibly was that one in which Robt. Keefer personated the editor of the Smokingtown Spread Eagle, and Geo. Pickell an author in search of a publisher. It fairly brought down the house, so excellently was it rendered. The two little daughters of Mr. W. W. Trimble sang "Whem he cometh" in a most delightful manner. A quartette by Miss Ayers, Miss Damude, and Messrs. Sproule and Barnhouse, proved very chaste and acceptable. The cantata—especially the choruses—was surprisingly well rendered when we consider that the practice of it was commenced little over a week prior to the anniversary. Mr. C. J. Sproule certainly is deserving of credit in this connection. He is a most patient and persevering musical instructor. As a S. S. anniversary chairman, Rev. Mr. Ayers is assuredly a success—no long-winded speeches or anything of that sort to mar the program. Some of the brethren of the cloth might profitably take a note from Rev. Ayer's book. Miss Christoe presided at the organ in her usual happy manner.

One of the features of the anniversary was the presentation to Master Edwin Large of a handsomely bound bible, for not having been absent a single Sunday in the year from the Sabbath School. Miss Elize Cullens was presented with a well bound edition of Methodist hymns for committing to memory the most verses during the year. Another interesting feature was Secretary Thos. Clayton's report, which showed the healthy, state of the school's finances, the number of verses recited, number of books added to the library, attendance, number on roll, and other important particulars, showing the wonderful progress made by the school during the year 1886. The officers of the school are Squire Armstrong, Superintendent; Mr. Sept. Good, Assistant Superintendent; Messrs. Wm. Clayton and Wm. Barnhouse, Librarians; Mr. Thos Clayton, Secretary; and Mr. Josias Strain, Assistant Secretary. These are assisted by a large and efficient staff of Teachers to discharge their onerous duties. There are over 200 pupil's names on the register, and the verses recited during the past year was over 11,000. The average attendance is something like 130, which is an excellant showing.

Health is impossible when the blood is impure, thick, and sluggish, or when it is thin and impoverished. Such conditions give rise to boils, pimples, headaches, neuralgia, rheumatism, and other disorders. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purifies, invigorates, and vitalizes the blood.

Munificent Christmas Gifts.

From the Philadelphia Sunday Times.

Mr. Henry B. Bunting, of No. 910 North Broad street, Philadelphia, has given $5,000 for the maintenance in perpetuity of a free bed in Wills' Hospital, and a similar sum for a similar purpose to the Pennsylvania Hospital, both in the name of his deceased wife, Mary A. Bunting. In addition to the above, Mr. Bunting has donated $3,000 for the memorial rooms for the Old Ladies' Home for Presbyterians, on Darby road.

The above named Mrs. Bunting, now deceased, was sister to Mrs. Wm. Strain, of Flesherton, and these generous gifts of her husband, in the name of his deceased wife, are a grand tribute of love and respect for the memory of a noble, virtuous woman, and, at the same time, stamp him as a man of wise judgement, warm affections, and noble, generous impulses.

Mr. H. Meldrum Explains.

To the Editor of The Advance.

DEAR SIR,—On Nomination day, Mr. Elliott stated, that there was an error in the printed statement of last audit of Township accounts. Not having seen a printed copy, I could not then speak definitely as to the statement made, but having since then seen an Auditors' Report, can state positively that there is no error. The written report, attested by the Auditors as correct, was made out with double cash columns; the printed report is made in single cash columns, and, to the unpracticed eye, may seem somewhat incorrect, but a little thought and a short exercise in simple addition is all that is necessary to satisfy any one that the report even as printed is quite correct. Of course had the accounts been printed exactly as made out by the Auditors, everything would have been quite clear and more satisfactory.

As to our Treasurer, Mr. Armstrong, I feel it a duty to state that his books are kept in first-class order, and everything so correct that it is a pleasure to audit them. Yours truly,

HENRY MELDRUM,
Eugenia, Jan. 4, 1887. Auditor.

CHARD—SYMONS.—On the 21st Dec., 1886, by the Rev. A. Wilson, Mr. Frank Chard to Miss Harriet Symons, both of Artemesia.

Centre Grey Election.

OFFICIAL RETURNS.

	Brown.	McColman.	Rorke.
Artemesia	233	26	347
Collingwood	311	273	184
Euphrasia	134	97	259
Holland	260	21	244
Osprey	203	56	162
Sullivan	232	22	289
	1373	495	1485

Majority for Rorke.....112

The above figures shew conclusively how nearly Centre Grey was lost to the Liberal Conservative party through the split caused by Mr. McColman. Had the latter taken sixty more Conservative votes from the party nominee, Mr. Brown would have been elected by a majority of eight. It was truly "a nice little three cornered" affair. It was well managed by our Reform friends, and but for the extreme unpopularity of McColman might have resulted in a victory for them. McColman's unpopularity and the weakness of his cause is shown in the fact that Capt. Rorke took NINE HUNDRED AND NINETY more votes than the former, and at the same time succeeded in beating his Reform opponent, Mr. Brown, by the really handsome majority—under the circumstances—of one hundred and twelve.

Our native Township of Euphrasia did right nobly by giving Capt. Rorke a majority of 125; Artemesia followed with 112; then Sullivan with 57—the rest of the Townships, viz., Collingwood, Holland and Osprey giving Reform majorities. So that in not a solitary Township in the riding did Mr. McColman get a majority—after all the puffing and blowing of the profound journalistic authority on "wisdom teeth" and "conventions."

Anniversary Sermons.

The anniversary sermons in connection with the Methodist Sabbath School, Flesherton, were preached last Sunday according to announcement in these columns. Rev. Mr. Ayers, occupied the pulpit in the morning, his subject being "Seed Sowing." Rev. Mr. Cornish, of Markdale, preached in the evening. His subject being "Early Conversion." Both sermons were appreciated. At both services, Sabbath School children occupied seats behind the pulpit and sang several of their anniversary pieces very nicely.

Mr. Clayton is selling off boots and shoes at cost now. See his announcement elsewhere.

"Bell" Organs at the Colonial.

PATRONIZED BY ROYALTY.

In musical instruments, certainly Messrs. W. Bell & Co., of Guelph, Ont., have reason to be proud of their success, and it is universally conceded that their display was about the most prominent in their line.

H. R. H. The Prince of Wales, personally congratulated them on having the most handsome exhibit; the stand itself, a work of art in design and fitting, having been erected at a cost, it is said, of £600. The wood-work is in enamelled white, and real gold, handsomely carved, and the drapery is in silk plush and Indian muslin.

The Marquis of Lorne, and H.R.H. the Princess Louisie, after thoroughly testing the instruments made and exhibited by the different manufacturers, decided to buy one of the illuminated pipetop "Bell" organs. This sale was followed by others to the R't Hon. Sir Robert Bourke, Governor of Madras, India, and Sir Robert Affleck, each of whom purchased one of their large and handsome organs.

The popularity of this instrument is growing more extensively every year in the British Isles, and on the continent, confirming the critical judgment of experts, who have pronounced them superior to all others for purity of tone and pleasing design.

In the Citadel at Quebec, a "Bell" organ graces its drawing-rooms for the use of the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, and in far distant Victoria, B. C., Lady Douglass selected a "Bell" organ for her use.

Perfection in these instruments has only been attained after years of experience and study, by using the best material and employing none but skilled and practical workmen, Messrs. Bell & Co., have produced an organ without an equal.

Prominent English organists, who have tried them at the Exhibition, have been delighted with them. The Invention, a journal published in London, says:—The excellence of workmanship, and quality of the "Bell" organs, leave only one verdict possible to any expert who cares to personally inspect them, as we have done for ourselves, and we have pleasure in expressing ourselves as greatly pleased with the genuine organ tone brought out in their instruments.

The Music Trades' Journal, says,—"That Messrs. Bell & Co., are now doing a very flourshing business, which ought certainly to be much extended as a result of their handsome exhibit at the Colinderies, and it is gratifying to note that the judges at the Exhibition have endorsed our opinion as to the excellence of their instruments."

We understand that Messrs. Bell & Co., have received the Gold Medal at the Liverpool Exhibition, which has just closed.

AYER'S Sugar-Coated Cathartic PILLS.

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more on Ayer's Pills than anything else, to Regulate

my bowels. These Pills are mild in action and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained customary strength and vigor.—John Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

North Grey.

Political matters are not yet settled in this riding, as a recount of the ballots is now being made by the County Judge. Application for the recount was made on Tuesday last. Toronto.

We are pleased to know that our energetic young friend and former townsman, Mr. Will. Vokes, has secured a good position in Rennie's wholesale seed store, Toronto. What we want to hear next is that Will. is distinguishing himself as a member of some crack base ball club in the Queen City. He's an Irishman and a Fleshertonian, and with these superior characteristics ought to "get there with both feet." Success to you, anyway.

Obituary.

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. George Teed, an old and very much respected farmer of Euphrasia Township. He was deeply respected by all who knew him, and was a kind, generous, and warm-hearted gentleman. He leaves a wife and grown up family to mourn their loss. His friends have the deepest sympathy of the whole neighborhood, in their sad bereavement.

Narrow Escape from Fire.

Sunday morning while Mr. Wm. Rutledge, sr., was attending services in the Methodist church here, in connection with his class, his house, near the depot, caught fire, and but for the timely intervention of his daughter, Mrs. N. Lawrence, Messrs. H. Piper, Jas. McMullen, Wilson McMullen, Arch. McMullen, John Whittaker and others, would have been destroyed. As it was, a large portion of the roof was consumed, rendering the building uninhabitable. What made the affair the more painful was the fact that that venerable Christian woman, Mrs. Rutledge, sr., was lying dangerously ill in the house at the time. With amazing fortitude and calmness, the old lady watched the progress of the flames, alone while her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence, was absent securing assistance. Since the fire we are glad to learn that the heroic invalid has been safely removed to the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. N. Lawrence, in this town.

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.

The Terrible Husband Murder at Herkimer, N.Y., Revived.

A RESPITE FOR THE MURDERESS.

An Albany despatch says: Governor Hill has granted a reprieve in the case of Mrs. Druse until February 28th, 1887, to enable the Legislature to deal with the matter of capital punishment as applied to women. Should the Legislature not interfere, the law will take its course. Following is the Governor's decision:

The defendant, Roxalana Druse, was convicted of murdering her husband, William Druse, in the town of Warren, in the county of Herkimer, in this State. The verdict was murder in the first degree, and she has been sentenced to the only punishment prescribed by law for that crime, to wit: execution by hanging, to take place on the 29th of this month. The evidence shows that the killing was most brutal and atrocious in its character. Briefly stated, the facts satisfactorily established are as follows: The family consisted of the deceased and Mrs. Druse, the daughter Mary (aged 19 years), the son George (aged 10 years), and a nephew, Frank Gates (aged 14 years). A quarrel had occurred on the morning of the homicide between the deceased and the defendant at the breakfast table. The deceased was still at the table, and during the quarrel of words the defendant went into another room and took a loaded revolver which was there, and putting it under her apron, returned and whispered to the boys to go out of doors, which they did, leaving herself, the daughter Mary and the deceased in the room. Mary then placed a rope around her father's neck while he was at the table, and the defendant fired the revolver once or twice at him, wounding him, and he fell over sidewise in his chair, while the defendant, being unable to make the revolver go off again, called to the nephew Frank, who came in the house, together with the boy George, and whereupon the prisoner gave the revolver to the nephew, and, under a threat of killing him, compelled him to fire it off two or three times, and the deceased, being hit by the shots, rolled off the chair upon the floor, and then she seized an axe and hit her husband on the head with it, he exclaiming: "Oh, Roxy, don't," and she continued hitting him on the neck until she chopped his head off—severing it completely from his body. She then caused the head, as well as the body, to be taken into the parlor, and during that day and evening the body was cut up with an axe and was burned in the stove. She threatened to kill the boys if they told what had occurred, burned all her husband's clothes and made every possible effort to conceal the crime, causing the ashes in the stove where the body had been burned to be taken up and thrown in a swamp, and the revolver and axe to be thrown in a pond, and had telegrams sent to friends in other places making false and misleading inquiries as to her husband, and compelled the boys to tell every one that her husband had gone away from home, she herself telling her neighbors falsehoods of every description as to her husband's whereabouts. During the evening, while Mrs. Druse and Mary were burning the body in the parlor, the two boys were amusing themselves by playing checkers in the adjoining room, where the murder had been committed, thus showing the unconcern and utter lack of feeling of the whole family. Mrs. Druse had previously made threats against the deceased, and boasted that she would be rid of him some day. The revolver had been procured and brought into the house under peculiar and suspicious circumstances, indicating felonious purposes. These and other facts, almost too horrible for description, mark the case as a plain one of deliberate and premeditated murder. There seems to be scarcely a single mitigating circumstance surrounding it. The daughter, Mary, aided and assisted her mother in the murder, and after the conviction of her mother she pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree, which plea, on account of her youth, the fact that she was probably acting under the influence of her mother, and other circumstances, was accepted by the District Attorney, and she was sentenced to State Prison for life.

THE DAUGHTER'S NEW YEAR IN THE PENITENTIARY.

(From the Syracuse Standar

Mary Druse's cell in the penitentiary was embellished yesterday with a crayon portrait of her mother, which Mary received on Saturday. The picture, which was taken from life in the Herkimer jail, represents a slight, middle-aged woman, with a fairly intelligent face, wearing a high-necked black dress and a lace collar that reaches nearly to the chin. There is a pained and hunted expression about the eyes. To a reporter Mary said the likeness was a good one. "But when I saw that mother's hair was turning gray," she continued, "I nearly cried. Her hair was black when I saw her last. Gov. Hill's decision was read to me and I felt rather discouraged over it, though I haven't given up hope. I am afraid mother feels discouraged herself, though she doesn't say so in her letters to me for fear it would make me feel worse. I don't know anything about the Legislature, but I'm afraid it won't take any action."

Mary showed to the reporter a letter which she consented to have printed, barring a few sentences of a strictly personal nature. She said her mother must have been very nervous when she wrote it, as it is somewhat disconnected. The letter runs:

HERKIMER, 24.

DEAREST DAUGHTER,—I thought you would everything about the decision but the truth. Wherefore thought i would write you a line. Governor Hill has given me a stay until the 28th of february. Judge Prescott came in this morning also Mr. Luce this afternoon and assured me they should still fight for me & kind Mr. Cook came in and said the paper was served on him this morning to stay the execution intil the 28th of february as I have above stated Georgie has been her to day I bought him a pair of scates for a Christmas present. Mr. Sheriff Brown was here to see me yesterday i was glad to see him he gave me still great encouragement. The governor seems to be in my favor still does not want to take the whol responsibility upon him self it seems however there is no use to give we must keep up good courage and hope for the best for the prospects are as favorable as ever only we must watch and wait and pray. * * * I suppose my picture is on the road for I gave them the money to send it by express, if not it will be I am to tired to write more. I received a good letter from Juliar Northrup saying she would take care or keep anything I wanted her. She wrot a letter to the governor besides the piece in the paper she is a friend in need Mr. Powell was in to see me last night. from your mother in life or death,

MRS. DRUSE.

Mary's hope is that her mother's sentence will be commuted to imprisonment for life in the Onondaga Penitentiary. Mary is now 20 years old and her brother "Georgie" mentioned in the letter is 12. The girl is quiet and industrious and when not working is an omniverous reader. She told the reporter that she cried at the sight of the Christian at Work, which somebody gave her recently. She said her parents used to take that journal regularly and she had not seen a copy since her arrest.

STANLEY'S EXPEDITION.

The Explorer's Coming Search for Emin Bey—A Typical Arab.

A London cable says: Mr. Henry M. Stanley has completed his arrangements for starting on his expedition for the rescue of Emin Bey. Mr. Stanley is in remarkably good health and is very confident of the success of his mission. He evidently means to keep his plans to himself until fairly started. "The only thing that is certain is that I go to Africa," he says. The telegram that he had made arrangements with Tippoo Tip to accompany him is premature. The idea is, however, so daring a masterstroke, and so much in keeping with Stanley's past, that one may well believe there is something in the telegram.

Tippoo Tip, an Arab ivory and slave hunter, is at this moment probably the most powerful man in all Central Africa. In men and means his resources are practically unlimited. His agents and his raiders will be found in all directions from Kasonge as his centre. It is doubtless his Arabs that have wrecked Stanley Falls station—a catastrophe which might have occurred at any time in the past had it not been for Tippoo's friendship for the white chiefs of the station, for even he, slaver as he is, has his own sense of honor. One must remember that in his eyes slave raiding is as legitimate as elephant hunting.

Mr. Stanley thinks if Tippoo Tip adhered to his intention six months ago of proceeding to Zanzibar he will doubtless be there by this time, ready to meet Stanley on his arrival. Dr. Junker is expected in Egypt next month, and, if considered advisable, no doubt a meeting could be arranged between him and Stanley. The latter has been overwhelmed with offers of companionship from all quarters, none of them, probably, at all likely to be accepted.

TWO DEATHS FROM FRIGHT.

One Results from Another Boy's Fall, the Other from a Practical Joke.

A Detroit despatch says: Willie Stiebling, aged 14, was buried to-day, death having been brought on by fright. For several years he has been a bell-boy at one of the hotels. Last Wednesday Robert McHale, another bell-boy, was sliding down the banister of the main stairway when he tipped backward and fell from the second to the first floor. The injured boy was bathed in blood, his face having been badly cut and his right thigh broken. The sickening sight seemed to daze young Stiebling. He went about his work for a time, when he was suddenly taken with convulsions. He rallied on Friday, but soon became delirious and died on Sunday. During his delirium he complained of something in his head and asked that it be opened for examination. In accordance with this request a post-mortem was held, which developed the fact that blood had coagulated in the brain.

From Reading, Pa.: Franklin B. Goodhart, the gambler, who was the victim of a practical joke about two weeks ago, as stated in the TIMES at the time, and became insane in consequence, died last night of nervous prostration. Some acquaintances, knowing that he was timid, got up a mock murder in his presence.

A Masculine Evangelist in Petticoats.

A Halifax, N.S., despatch says: A man dressed in woman's clothing and calling himself Miss Foster has been holding evangelistic services in some of the districts along the north shore of New Brunswick. He held meetings in Blackville, where his methods and his religious fervor were so feminine that he was not detected. At the Travers school-house, on the Little Southwest, a few days ago he started a series of meetings, but his enthusiasm and skirts could never cover up his masculinity from the penetration of the Little So'westers. He was exposed at a meeting and forced to decamp without explaining his reasons for adopting petticoats.

The Fate of the Editors.

The editors who secured election in the recent contest were J. R. Stratton of the Peterboro' Examiner; Gaspard Pacaud, of Le Progres, Windsor; E. F. Clarke, of the Orange Sentinel; D. Creighton, of the Owen Sound Times; W. D. Balfour, of the Amherstburg Echo; and W. M. Dack, of the Bruce Reporter. The defeated editors were John Carnegie, of the Peterboro' Review; J. S. Larke, of the Oshawa Vindicator; J. H. Schmidt, of the Stratford Kolonist; and T. M. Campbell, of the Brampton Conservator. Four Liberal and two Tory editors elected. One Liberal and three Tory editors defeated.

The greatest reformer of the age was the inventor of the bustle, which has reformed nearly every woman.

So "time softens al things," does it? Not much. How about summer boarding-house steak?

—White furniture is the rage. It is a reaction to have been expected after the dark sombre trappings of our æsthetic houses, and it won't do to criticise the decorative powers. But a drawing room furnished in ivory and gold, with white plush draperies, white leather chairs and sofas and white fur rugs is a little too virginal to be comfortable. How the dickens is a man going to make himself at home in such a snowdrift as that?

GLADSTONE'S BIRTHDAY.

How the Grand Old Man Spent It—Liberal Banquets—A Notable Letter.

A London cable says: Yesterday was the 77th anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's birth. He attended early service at the Hawarden Church, and during the day was fairly deluged with telegrams of congratulation from all parts of the world. He was also the recipient of innumerable presents.

Banquets were given by the Liberals throughout the country last night in honor of Mr. Gladstone's birthday. Mr. Gladstone returns thanks through the press for the many congratulations which he has received, to which, he says, it is impossible for him to reply personally.

Mr. Gladstone wrote as follows to the chairman of a banquet given at Chester in honor of his birthday: "The strain of last year has been considerable, but never during my path of duty have I more clearly seen that I was at work in behalf of my countrymen in all parts of the three kingdoms, and in behalf of the true union and greatness of the Empire, which in this year of Her Majesty's jubilee we ought to cherish more warmly and loyally than ever. In this conviction the recent progress of events confirms me daily."

Sees Clearly With Her Eyes Closed.

A South Londonderry, Vt., despatch says: Miss Alice Walker, aged 17, has not opened her eyes since December 21st. She is conscious at times and then knows those who are about her, can tell the style and color of her visitors' dresses and converses freely with them. She could move freely about the house a few days ago, and even went out to the barn one day. Her appetite is good, and there seems to be no other symptoms of disease. She has had these spells before, and at one time, while seemingly unconscious of everything else, hemmed two yards of muslin with stitches so fine that they could hardly be seen, her eyes being closed all the time. An injury to the spine, which happened to her several months ago, may have had something to do with her disease. She was formerly a school teacher.

An Insane Hermit Living in a Tree.

A New Haven, Conn., despatch says: Dr. C. B. Adams, agent of the Connecticut Humane Society, has been investigating the very familiar case of Isaac Pardee, of East Haven, who, ten years ago, was one of the most promising and prominent young men in that town. Suddenly he became demented and took up his abode in the woods. Of late years he has been living in the hollowed-out trunk of an old tree. Dr. Adams will see that he is sent to an insane asylum as soon as possible. It is said to be a case of unrequited love.

IRISH RENT STRUGGLE.

The Extraordinary Speech by Mr. John Dillon, M. P.

"PLAN OF CAMPAIGN" DEFENDED.

The following is a full report of Mr. Dillon's speech at the public meeting held in Loughrea, Ireland, on Thursday immediately before the "rent offices" were opened under the "Plan of Campaign," which has now been declared illegal:

Mr. Dillon said—A fortnight ago the Government struck a blow at me. (Groans.)

A Voice—And they struck a blow at us. (Groans.)

Mr. Dillon—They summoned me to appear before the Judges of the Queen's Bench in Dublin in order that I should be held to bail for good behavior. (Groans and laughter.) I ventured to say that although I meant to appear in the Court of Queen's Bench I would appear afterwards in Galway, and finish with Lord Clanricarde—(loud and prolonged cheers)—and I say here to-day, in spite of the Court of Queen's Bench in Dublin, and in spite of all the judges in Dublin, that you will win in this struggle. (Cheers.)

A Voice—God spare you to us!

Mr. Dillon—I stood in the Court of Queen's Bench on Tuesday, and I heard the conduct which I had practised in this country and the programme which I had advised denounced as criminal. (Groans.) I was told by the Judges at that Court that I was engaged in a criminal conspiracy. (Laughter.) But I ask you here to-day, men of Galway, to look back over the story of your country, and recall to your memories this fact, that every man who has ever tried to raise his voice in this country on behalf of the poor and oppressed against their oppressors—every single man whose name is dear to the memory of Irishmen—has stood in the dock before Irish Judges—(cheers)—and if I stood on last Tuesday before a Court of Irish Judges to be told that I was engaged in a criminal conspiracy I stood where your fathers had stood before me, and where every man who had the courage of a man in the past history of Ireland had stood. (Cheers.) I stood where O'Connell stood—(cheers)—and where every Irish leader who has the first trust and love of the Irish people stood before. (Cheers.) We are told to-day that we are engaged in a criminal conspiracy, and, forsooth, that if we do not desist we may come into collision with the law! (Groans and laughter.) Well, I have been for six years engaged in that conspiracy—(cheers)—and four times I have come into collision with the law, and three times I have beaten them. (Prolonged cheering.)

A Voice—And will again, please God. (Cheers.)

Mr. Dillon—This is not the first time I have come into collision with the law, and with Irish Judges, and I leave it to you to judge whether to-day the class of men, the Irish landlords, who three times have had me up as a criminal—(laughter)—are better for it to-day? All I can say is, if they like the results that have followed from putting me in prison I am satisfied. (Cheers.) But this I will say also, that they have not got me in yet. (Cheers.) I do not think they will either. (Cheers.) I have said that on last Tuesday I was told by the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench that I was engaged in a criminal conspiracy—(groans)—and when they were delivering that opinion they quoted words which I remember well, and these were the words delivered by Mr. Justice Fitzgerald—(groans)—when he was trying the leaders of the Land League, and Mr. Parnell at their head, and I recollect distinctly in that charge, which was quoted on last Tuesday, he warned us then to give up the criminal courses which we were then said to be engaged in—that is to say, the agitation of the Land League; and I put it to you to-day, if we had obeyed his words and turned our backs on the Irish people and on the cause of the poor men in Ireland, where would you be to-day?

A Voice—Dead or in the workhouse.

Mr. Dillon—If, in 1880, we had listened to the warnings of the Irish Judge who then sat in judgment on us, would there have been a land bill passed for Ireland? (Cries of "No.") And if we had listened to these warnings, thousands of Irish families would have been wandering absolutely homeless or pining in the workhouse. The terror of the name of the Land League, and the might of that agitation, have borne their good fruits, and those people who engaged in it are struggling still for their rights, and are still in possession of their homes. (Cheers.) And, just as in 1880 we thought that our judgment on Irish politics was better than the judgment of Judge Fitzgerald, I am of opinion that I know more to-day about the interests of the Irish farmers—aye, and care more, too, than Mr. Justice O'Brien; and, whatever may be his opinion as to the legality of my action, I repeat here to-day the challenge which I gave the Attorney-General in the courts on Tuesday—(cheers)—and I defy him, and I defy the Executive in Dublin, to put me into jail until they give me a fair trial. I will never shirk a fair trial; and if I am guilty of a crime, let them try me. But they know right well that they dare not try me; they know we are guilty of no criminal conspiracy; they know that we engaged in this movement are engaged in a movement as great, as noble, and more successful than any movement started in Ireland before our time. I recollect perfectly well when I was young the old people talking of past times, and it used to be said among the people that after all they did not know whether it was not a mistake to begin the national struggle by obtaining the emancipation of the Irish Catholics, or they said what good did it do us except to enable certain judges to get places. I must say I think they did begin at the wrong end, and I think that the first duty that ought to have suggested itself to the Irish people was to have protected the laboring classes of this country from ruin and destruction, and then when they were free men—when their homes could not be levelled by their tyrants and oppressors—we could have won all the other rights. (Cheers.) But since it has been so, the old saying comes in, "Better late than never," and as it was not done by our fathers, we had better get to work ourselves. We are engaged in no criminal conspiracy. We are engaged in an open public movement—to do what? To overturn, I venture to say, the most horrible and crime-stained institution that ever existed in any civilized land. To overturn it, in a public organization; to emancipate the people of this country from a system which has exterminated in the past more human beings than half a dozen insurrections. We are engaged in a public and open attempt—no conspiracy at all—to overthrow a system which, so long as it has existed, has caused Ireland to be known throughout the length and breadth of the world as "poor Ireland." What was it that made this country, which came from the hand of God as rich as any country in Europe or America—who was it turned it into a country to be called "poor Ireland?" It was the landlords, and no one else; and the attempt we are engaged in now is an attempt dear to the heart of every one who loves Ireland and cares for her prosperity—an attempt in which your fathers before you suffered—an attempt which, with the help of God, and with the help of the "Plan of Campaign"—(cheers)—will be carried in our day to a glorious victory. (Loud cheers.)

A BALLOT BOX JOURNEY.

Terrible Sufferings from Cold and Exposure.

A Colchester despatch says: On Sunday morning last a party of four started from here across the lake on the ice to Pelee Island, a distance of twenty-five miles, to convey the ballot-box for the recent election, and arrived safe about 2 p. m. the same day. On Sunday morning they started back and had proceeded some distance when they encountered an opening in the ice about a mile in width. Two of them crossed over in a small boat they had taken with them, intending to return for the others, but found it impossible to work the boat back through the new made ice. Consequently they had to leave their companions and started for the shore while those left behind went back to the island. Those in the boat got within two miles of the shore when night overtook them, and they were obliged to remain all night on the ice, suffering terribly from the severe cold, and reached shore on Monday morning well nigh exhausted. The other two started back on Monday and encountered the same difficulty, and had to remain all night on the ice, reaching the shore on Tuesday morning badly frozen. A young man named Staff Bottoms, who was acting as guide, will lose one of his feet.

Bill Nye's Mince Pie Story.

"I am the engineer of the 102, and I'm givin' it to you straight. No man ever stood by the company's interest, or saved more money for the Old Back Up & Toot Road, than I have. Many's the time I've got off the 102 to drive off a 2-year-old steer instead of squashing him and then allowing the Back Up & Toot Road to pay for him. I could pull the pay-car or yank No. 7, loaded with Mormon emigrants, it made no odds to me. I always allowed to obey orders, whether it was to back up four feet or slack ahead half a car.

"I never was a man that would drink while I was on duty, but sometimes I would take in the town with the boys and give it a coat of red paint when there was no danger of bein' called out on an extra or asked to double back with a 102. Still I wasn't a drinking man at all, and didn't care two cents for the taste of liquor or the effect of it. I just wanted to be sociable.

"Well, one afternoon I was west bound, pulling three day coaches and two sleepers, besides baggage, mail and express. We stopped twenty minutes for dyspepsia at the regular supper station, and there I met a lady I used to be acquainted with in the States. She was in the rear sleeper and had a lunch along with her. It's all like a dream, but it's burned into my memory still. She asked me to eat lunch or tea, or whatever you might call it, with her, and I did. It seems like yesterday.

"She had an old-fashioned mince pie with her. I can taste it yet. She held a piece of it toward me with her beautiful round wrist and white, dimpled knuckles like a baby's. I said, 'No, thank you; I never drink.' But she laughed and socked it into my mouth. I knew it was flavored with brandy and yet I took it and ate it greedily. She chatted on gaily while I put that home-made demon pie into my mouth to steal away my brains.

"Finally the passengers came out of the dining-room picking their teeth as if they'd had a square meal, and the conductor hollered 'all aboard.' I felt as if I ought to go and tell the conductor that I was unfit to run the engine, and that I would be a murderer, for my brain was already on fire with pie. But I clome into the cab, took a chew of fine-cut and pulled out.

"Somehow the face of my little daughter kept coming before my eyes. I couldn't keep her out of my mind as she looked when I left her in her blue and white gingham dress and sunbonnet. She haunted me and whirled through my pie-soaked brain. In an hour we'd be at my home and I would have her in my arms. My own little Mary Ann! It grew dark fast and the headlight flashed along the track, but I was in a dream. I fretted because old Hundred and Two didn't get up and hump herself as she ort. The telegraph poles looked like a corduroy bridge, and still I wasn't happy. I was a madman for the time, dragging my load of human freight to certain death.

"As we rounded the curve a mile out of the home station, the headlight showed me lying across the rail the gingham dress and sun bonnet of Mary Ann! I saw it too late! It was like a flash, then a dull sound came up from the murderous wheels and the checked sun bonnet lay outside the track and the gingham dress was under the train! The drunken engineer had murdered his only child. My fireman stopped old Hundred and Two, and I reeled to the rear of the train, where Mary Ann lay in the darkness, still forever and ever!

"I made a plunge toward the little mangled mass and caught it in my arms. It was, indeed, Mary Ann's little gingham dress, but it was stuffed with straw.

* * * *

"Then I heard childish laughter under the culvert, and I knew Mary Ann had put up a job on me. But it was a close call. They call me the mince pie maniac now, for I never touch it, no matter how fair the siren that seeks to feed it to me. We never know when the pie is loaded. Let us shun it as we would the deadly upas tree."

Smith (with effusion)—"Hello, Brown, is that you? I heard you were drowned." Brown (with sadness)—"No, it was my brother." Smith (thoughtlessly)—"What a pity."

"THE NATION'S CURSE."

By Archdeacon Farrar.

The Venerable Archdeacon Farrar, D.D., preached in Westminster Abbey last month in connection with the 21st anniversary of the Church of England Temperance Society. He took for his text—"Behold I set before you a blessing and a curse."—Deuteronomy xi. 26.

The preacher said: "It is with deliberate purpose that I mean the sermon this evening to be almost exclusively a plain statement of plain facts. I wish it to be an appeal, not to the imagination, not to the emotions, but to reason, to the sense of duty, to the conscience of Christians in a Christian land. If I say one word that is not true, I am guilty; if I consciously exaggerate a single argument, I am morally responsible; if I do so from ignorance, or mistaken evidence, I hail any possible refutation of what I urge as a service to the sacred cause of truth. But if the facts be facts, indisputable, and for the most part even undisputed, and then if they do not speak to you for themselves, I know nothing else that can or will. If they do not carry with them their own fire; if they do not plead with you, clear as a voice from Sinai, in their barest and briefest reality, and spur you to seek redress—

If not the face of men,
The suffrage of our soul's, and time's abuse,
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man home to his idle bed.

Those who plead for temperance reform are daily charged with exaggeration. Exaggeration is never right, never wise, even when moral indignation renders it excusable; but before you repeat that hackneyed and irrelevant charge, remember that there never was prophet or reformer yet, since time began, against whom the same charge has not been made. We have no need to exaggerate; our cause is overwhelmingly strong in its moral appeal to unvarnished realities, and we have nothing to do but to set forth things as they are, till not only the serious and the earnest, but even the comfortable, even the callous, yes, even the careless and the selfish, unless they are content to forego altogether the name of patriot and the name of Christ, shall be compelled to note them for very shame."

The Archdeacon then quoted statistics, proving the criminal waste of the nation's resources involved in the drink traffic. He eloquently dealt with the physical and moral degradation which was the direct result of the traffic, and continued:

"Nor is this all. The curse does not stay with him who caused it. It spreads in concentric circles of ruin. The drunkard almost invariably drags down his wife and family into the lurid whirlpool of his own retribution. Go to some public house on Saturday night, between 10 and 12, when the miserable workingman is pouring into the till of the publican and the purse of the gin distiller the money which should clothe and feed his wife and little ones; see when the gin palaces in our most pauperized districts are cleared at night a scene which for vileness cannot be paralleled in any region of the world. Then follow the drunken man or drunken woman into the lair which they call their home. Home? it is a Dantean hell of brutality and squalor, of which the very air reeks with abomination! 'In former times the wife was usually the victim of her husband's brutishness; now she becomes in innumerable cases the partner in his sin. In either case, be she victim or associate, no creature on earth so demands our pity.' While threats and blows resound in that curse-laden air the children—the ragged, miserable, half-starved, degraded children—the children who will grow up hereafter to recruit the ranks of the felon and the harlot, huddle together in mute terror. 'They do not cry; such children seldom do shed tears. Nature could never furnish a fountain to meet such demands.' Often they make their escape into cellar or chimney, or hide themselves under the rotting heap of rags or straw, and do not venture to creep out, half suffocated, till the drink-maddened fiend whom they call 'father,' is away, or till he has slept off for a time the vitriol madness. And in most of our large towns there are whole streets and alleys and districts of such drundards' homes—infamous streets which hide hundreds of blighted families, the disgrace of our civilization, and the disgrace of our Christianity; the only things which flourish there are public-houses, which, confronting the minimum of virtue with the maximum of temptation, drain from the wretched neighborhood its last life, and, like the fungus on the decaying tree, feed on the ruin which is their boon. We have heard much in these few days of 'Horrible London,' and of the bitter cry of its abject. What makes these slums so horrible?" I answer, with the certainty and the confidence of one who knows, Drink! And what is the remedy? I tell you that every remedy you attempt will be a miserable failure; I tell the nation, with the conviction founded on experience, that there will be no remedy till you save these outcasts from the temptations of drink. Leave the drink, and you might build palaces for them in vain. Leave the drink, and before a year was over your palaces would still reek with dirt and squalor, with infamy and crime. Of the trade in general which ministers to this temptation I will say nothing; but at least in such vile streets as these whence, day and night, this bitter cry of abject cities rings in the ears of the Lord God of Sabbaoth, I should have thought that any man who believes in God, that any man who calls himself a Christian, would have been not ashamed only but afraid to swell those geysers of curse and ruin. In such districts, at any rate, I know not how they can be blind to the evils which spring from what they sell, or how they can fail to hear the stern words ringing in their ears:

Fye, sirrah
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live!

They who will not see this must be left to their own conscience, in that hour when she speaks and we can be dead no longer to her voice; but I ask every man concerned in such evils, which is best? which will they think best when, a few years hence, they face the hour of death and the day of judgment, to forego such tainted gains, or to go on contributing—inevitably contributing—to the wholesale manufacture of infancy that knows no innocence; of youth, without modesty or shame; of maturity that is mature in nothing but guilt and suffering; of blasted old age which is a scandal on the name we bear?"

After quoting the opinions of various judges, and referring to the terrible record of murders and misdemeanors appearing in the newspapers, and known to be the direct result of the traffic, the Archdeacon, in conclusion, said:

"Englishmen and Christians, if such facts do not cheer you up, I ask, could they do so even were they in the thunder's mouth? It is not in the thunder, it is by the still small voice of history and of experience that God speaks to the reason and to the conscience. It is not by the lightning-flash that He would have us read His will, but by the quiet light that shows all things in the slow history of their ripening. When He speaks in the thunder and the lightning, by the tornado and the earthquake, He speaks in retribution then. And what is retribution but the eternal law of consequences? If you cannot see God's warnings against drink, if you cannot read in the existing condition of things His displeasure and our shame, if you cannot see it in the marriage-tie broken and dishonored, in sons and daughters ruined, in the peace of families laid waste, in the work of the Church hindered, in whole districts blighted, in thousands and tens of thousands of souls destroyed, if you cannot see it in the records of crime, and murder, and outrage, and madness, and suicide; in the fathers who in their very mouths, through drink, have slain their sons; and the sons who, through drink, have slain their fathers; and the mothers who, for drink, have sacrificed the lives of their little ones upon the breast—men of England, if these things do not wring your heart and fire your zeal, what do you expect? Can the letters glare more plainly on the palace wall of your power? Are you waiting till there falls on England the same fate which, for their sins, has fallen in turn on Assyria, and Greece, and Rome, and Egypt, and Carthage, and Jerusalem, and Tyre? They perished; sooner or later all guilty nations perish by sudden catastrophe, or by slow decay.

The sword of heaven is not in haste to smite,
Nor yet doth linger;

but when it does smite, it is apt to smite once and smite no more. Will you be so complacent over your epigrams, and your vested interests and your Biblical criticism when vengeance leaps at last upon the stage and strikes sore strokes, and pity shall no longer avert the blow? You are Christians; yes, but see that you have not been admitted into a holier sanctuary only to commit a deeper sacrilege! Why, had you been Pagans, these very same arguments ought to be irresistible to you! To millions of Pagans they have been so. The sobriety of China was due to Confucius. The sobriety of India and of Burmah are due to Buddha. I am horrified to read that in contact with us in the last threee years the sale of drink in India has increased 36 per cent, in Burmah 74 per cent. The sobriety of vast regions of Asia and Africa was due to Mahomet. In the day of judgment, shall not Confucians, shall not Buddhists, shall not Mohammedans, rise up in judgment against this generation and condemn it, for they abstained from strong drink at the bidding of Confucius, Budda and Mahomet, and behold a Greater than these is here? Ah, if the voice of all these tempted, suffering, perishing, miserable souls be nothing to you—if the voice of your country be nothing to you—yet, if you be Christians, listen to the voice of Christ, pleading with you in the pathetic accents of myriads of the little ones that it is not His will, that it is utterly against His will that His cross and passion be thus rendered of none effect for multitudes, for the very least of whom Christ died. 'If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those who are ready to be slain; if thou sayest, Behold, we know it not (when, now, at any rate, you have no excuse for not knowing it), doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? And shall not he render to every man according to his work?'"

The Tell-Tale Telephone.

"Charlie, you were kept late at the office last night, weren't you?" "Yes, darling." "Just as you were on Thursday and Friday evenings?" "Yes, dear." "You were in the office all the time?" "Yes, dear." "You were in the office all the time?" "And very busy." "Charlie, is your telephone in order?" "Yes, love." "Well, it is queer, don't you think? I went to the telephone in the drug store next door these last three evenings and tried to ring you up every half hour. The druggist said you couldn't have been in your office."—Philadelphia Call.

Whistler and Wilde.

A Boston artist tells this story of Whistler and Oscar Wilde, who has the reputation of borrowing Whistler's bright speeches. Having heard the artist say an unusally good thing, Oscar exclaimed, deploringly, "I wish I could have said that." "Oh," replied Whistler, derisively, "but you know you will say it."

She now knows more about the power of steam than she did.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

BY MRS. BOWSER.

The other night when Mr. Bowser came home to supper I was lying down with a dreadful headache. I have headaches occasionally. I wouldn't have them if I could help it, but I can't. Once in a while I have a chill, but it's nothing I'm to blame for.

"Sick, eh?" growled Mr. Bowser as he entered the bed-room.

"Got a headache."

"That's always the way of it! I wish I could remember one single well day which has passed over your head since we were married!"

"I'm always well."

"Oh, you are! Well, I must be bl d not to have discovered the fact! I wan d you to go to the theatre to-night."

"I—I guess I can go."

"Well, I guess you can't! Mrs. Bowser, it does seem queer that whenever I have any special entertainment mapped out you invariably bust it with a headache, palpitation of the heart, torpid liver or some other ailment. It must be the grossest carelessness on your part. Have you had a doctor to-day?"

"Why, no!"

"Well, we'll have one! I'm going to know what ails you, if I have to call half the doctors in town! I want to know whether I've married a woman or a bundle of drugs."

"You may be ill some day, Mr. Bowser."

"Bosh! I've got the strength of mind to throw off even a case of smallpox. The Bowser family never made fools of themselves by being upset at every change of the weather."

The doctor came up and prescribed a dover's powder, and he thought I needed a tonic of some sort. Bowser was grouty all the evening, and when he went to bed he sniffed and snuffed and muttered:

"Oh, excuse me! I thought for a moment that I was in Harper's Hospital!"

Two mornings after that Bowser woke me up an hour earlier than usual. His face was very pale, his teeth chattered, and I saw at once that he had a chill. He had been looking yellow around the eyes for three or four days, and it was evident that his liver was out of order.

"What is it?" I asked.

"I believe I'm going to have a c-chill!"

"Oh, pshaw! Just exercise your will-power and throw it off."

"Mrs. Bowser, I want you to telephone for a doctor—two—three doctors, without delay! I'm an awful sick man, without one chance in twenty of getting well!"

"Pooh! Mr. Bowser, I had all arrangements made to go over to the toboggan slide to-day, and to have a progressive euchre party here to-night. It seems funny that you should fall sick and spoil all my pleasure!"

"All right—go ahead and abuse me all you want to. When I am under the sod you'll think of these things."

The family doctor came up after breakfast and prescribed quinine and some other simple remedy, and advised Bowser to lie in bed through the day. The following was the programme of the forenoon:

1. I soak Mr. Bowser's feet.
2. I prepare him three different kinds of gruels.
3. I send the baby over to mother's, because its cooing disturbs him.
4. I stop all the clamor in the house at his request.
5. I drive all the boys out of the neighborhood to soothe Mr. Bowser's nerves.
6. I shut the dog in the barn and drive the cat to the attic.
7. I make a list of his debtors and creditors, and look up the insurance papers.

At noon Mr. Bowser resolved to get out of bed, and the amount of dinner he ate was positively astonishing. After dinner he put on his slippers and dressing gown and asked:

"Mrs. Bowser, do you suppose a cigar would hurt me?"

"Pooh!"

"There you go! You don't seem to understand that I have been dangerously ill, and that a relapse would cause my death! Mrs. Bowser, I believe you secretly wished during the forenoon that I might die!"

"Nonsense!"

"Well, your conduct is very suspicious, to say the least. In case of my death I believe you'd marry again!"

"I might."

"You would, eh? That's the kind of a person you are, is it?"

"But, Mr. Bowser, you've been sick so much, you know, and you've turned the house into a hospital so often——"

"Who's sick?"

"You are. I'd just like to remember the time when you had a well day. Mr. Bowser, it's an awful thing to chain a woman to an invalid husband."

Then Bowser began to cry, and I had to tuck him up in bed and put a hot flatiron to his feet, and tie a rag around his head and make him some sage tea. He was all right next morning, and when I asked him if it was safe for me to invite company for Friday night he roared out:

"Safe! Why not?"

"You may be ill, you know!"

"And I may not, you know! Mrs. Bowser, I want you to understand that the Bowser family—the line I am descended from—never give up until the very last."

"But they recover wonderfully quick."

"They do, eh? And that's because of their strong will power. Mrs. Bowser, I'm satisfied that I was snatched from the grave yesterday, and that by no help of yours. If I do not return home for the next three days you have only yourself to blame."

But he was back at noon, and he hasn't had another word to say about my headaches.—Detroit Free Press.

—Bagley—"Susan, did you notice that item about the man who killed himself because his wife never gave him a present?" Mrs. B.—"Yes, I noticed it. Well?" "Oh, nothing," "Oh, I see! Well, just pass over $10, and you shall have the best box of cigars that $2 can buy."

—They had been sitting for a long time in silence. Suddenly she woke up from a reverie and said: "It is an age of progress after all, George." "Yaas," he replied, after drawing the head of his cane out of his mouth; "but what led you to make the remark?" "Well, not much," she gurgled; "but I saw in this evening's paper that you can buy wedding-rings on instalments."

According to all accounts Port Hamilton, the most recent acquisition of the British in the China Seas, must be a somewh. t breezy sort of a place. The huts of the marines stationed there have to be secured by heavy chain cables passed right over the roof and fastened to the ground in order to prevent their being blown away.

Boston Herald: The operatives in the woollen and cotton mills of this country, who are paid by piece work as most of them are, are paid less per cut or per yard, per pound, or whatever the terms of the payment may be, than the operatives who are employed in English mills. Instead of bringing in to them higher wages, the tariff secures to them, if anything, lower wages than they are paid in England. That they receive more at the end of a week is due to the performance by them of a larger quantity of work.

The almanac for 1887 gives a few items of general interest: New Year's Day comes on Saturday, St. Valentine's Day on Monday, April Fool Day on Friday, First of July on Friday, Christmas on Sunday. Easter Sunday will be on the 10th of April; Lent begins March 2nd. There will be four eclipses, two of the sun and two of the moon. One, February 8th, visible as a partial eclipse in Canada. The others that occur, as follows, are not visible in Canada: The annular eclipse of the sun, February 23rd; August 19th, of the sun.

An ingenious doctor, named Garre, living in Basle, Switzerland, has acquired much notoriety by collecting old boots and shoes to study human character from the way in which they have been worn. Carlyle showed the philosophy that could be extracted from old clothes, but Dr. Garre confines himself to old boots. He calls his discovery "Scarpology," a word hitherto unknown to lexicographers. He furnishes an alphabet illustrating the characters of the wearers of the boots or shoes. Boots whereof the outside edges and toe-caps are worn away prove the wearer capable of murder. Girls who wear a "four" shoe on a "six" foot should be avoided by matrimonially inclined young men as a plague.

Horatio Ross, the famous old Scottish sportsman who died the other day, was Nelson's god-son, his father, Hercules Ross, having been an old West Indian friend and frequent correspondent of Nelson. On the 9th of June, 1801, Nelson, then in Kioge Bay, wrote to Mr. Hercules Ross: "You do me a great deal of honor in wishing me to stand god-father for your next child. I accept the duty with much pleasure, and hope that the future Horatio or a will be an addition of happiness to you and Mrs. Ross;" and on the 12th of September, 1801, he wrote from the Amazon, in the Downs: "I congratulate you most sincerely on the birth of a son and heir; and from my heart I wish all the wealth and happiness you possess, and all the honors which have fallen to my lot, may be the young Horatio's."

Lord Salisbury appears to be having a good deal of trouble with his colonial Governors. Only a few weeks ago the Legislature and principal inhabitants of Natal addressed a petition to the Queen demanding the recall of Sir Henry Havelock, the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the dependency, on the ground that he is an altogether unfit person to hold so important an office. It is now announced that the British Government has been obliged to suspend from his function Sir John Pope Hennessy, Governor of the important colony of the Mauritius, who by his quarrels with his Lieutenant-Governor, the notorious ex-Irish magistrate, Clifford Lloyd, almost caused a revolution in that lovely island. The reasons which have induced Lord Salisbury to take so unusual a step as to suspend a Governor previous to his recall must be of exceptional gravity.

A snow storm in Paris is anything but as pleasant as one of our home zephyrs, so far as horseflesh is concerned. A despatch to the London Daily News says. "Saturday evening, at about 5 o'clock, the snow began falling, and in a short time the streets and housetops were covered over with the flakes. In one moment the thoroughfares became so slippery that traffic was stopped, such horses as were abroad only being able to advance with cautious steps, and for the first time this year people were able to cross the Place de l'Opera without serious risk of being run over. The city street sweepers spent the night strewing sand and chiefly salt over the main streets, and fourteen cartloads were thrown over the avenues leading up to the Arch of Triumph." The trouble is that the asphalt in Paris is very slippery, composed as it is of a burned stone that has no catch for a horse's foot, and must be reinforced with sand whenever snow or rain assails the city.

The Danes have a society quite peculiar to themselves. It is known as "The Maiden Assurance Society." It aims to provide for a class—single women of well-to-do families. It shelters and cares for them, and furnishes them with "pin-money." Its methods are thus described: As soon as the girl-child is born to him the father enrolls her name in a certain association, and pays a certain sum, and thereafter a fixed sum, to the society. When she has reached the age of, we believe, 21, and is not married, she becomes entitled to a fixed income and a suite of apartments in a large building of the association, with gardens and park about it, inhabited by other young or older ladies who have thus become members. If her father dies in her youth, and she desires it, she has shelter in this building, and at a fixed time her own income. When she dies or marries all this right to income lapses, and the money paid in swells the endowment of the association.

What Britain Does for Egypt.

An important and interesting White Book has just been issued containing the German Foreign Office correspondence respecting the affairs of Egypt for the year 1886, up to June last. The information is valuable, especially now when people are beginning to be anxious to know a little about what has been going on in Egypt for the past six months. By far the most vital point to be considered is what good the natives of Egypt have derived and do derive from British occupation. The answer is given by a memorandum of conversation with two native gentlemen, one a Moslem of good standing, whose opinions are much respected by those who know him; the other, a country squire who owns an estate not far from Cairo. The evidence of these persons comes to this: Since the days of the Caliph Omar Egypt has never seen such security as that enjoyed by the masses. They are no longer exposed to arbitrary taxation, mulct and intimidation by those in authority. A peasant does not now live in constant dread of arrest and exile simply because he is well-to-do and has excited the envy or cupidity of some court favorite. Personal security for the ordinary Egyptian is now at least a historical fact, and not a matter of opinion. The people hardly believe their senses in this respect, and only fear that the present state of affairs is too good to last. There is less robbery and brigandage now than there was twelve years ago. A cadi, or native judge, is quoted as giving an opinion that Egyptian peasants nowadays suffer less ill-treatment and enjoy more freedom and security of person than has ever before been known. The more intelligent of the population have begun to appreciate those advantages, and the expression of their opinions at the present moment may no doubt be attributed to a dread of an eventual relapse into the old system of administration.

POLITICAL POINTERS.

The Thornbury News eats the leek with the most ridiculous grimaces, and makes the backward somersault with the agility of an adult elephant. Like "ancient Pistol" the News man occupies a most humiliating position; but he has to eat the leek all the same, "Got pless you!"

The "comparative popularity" of Rorke and McColman can be seen in the fact, that the former took nine hundred and ninety more votes than the latter. The News man will please communicate this fact to its readers. Don't keep back anything, but "eat the leek, Got pless you," like a man.

Somebody says Mr. McColman should be recompensed "for at least the loss of one session to which he was entitled." What! Recompense the man who so nearly lost the riding to his own party! Recompense the man who went into the field against the wishes of three-fourths of the Conservative electorate? Recompense the man who would not abide by the decision of his party's convention, after promising to do so? Surely not.

Somebody else said Mr. McColman would have been elected had he not attended that second convention. Nonsense. It may be true that it bettered Capt. Rorks's chances—the second convention, we mean—but Mr. McColman's absence or presence mattered nothing, so far as the result of the polling was concerned. The contest would still have been between Rorke and Brown, with the same danger that McColman might just take enough votes to allow the Reform candidate to head the polls. With McColman out of the contest, Mr. Brown's would have been an utterly hopeless struggle. His only chance for success lay in Mr. McColman's keeping in the field, and the inference is quite natural that gentlemen in the Reform ranks would likely be quite friendly with Mr. McColman; and, perchance, might urge him to keep in the field. In fact they did considerable in both directions.

The officers of the Association deserve the thanks of every true Liberal Conservative for their energetic and well directed efforts during the contest. Mr. Kells worked like a beaver from first to last, loyally, honorably, and right nobly, supporting the nominee of the party; while the other officers were to the fore in good shape.

A word to the authority on "wisdom teeth:" When you crawl out of that knot hole you got into on the 28th ult., be careful that you get your political pointers from the ADVANCE. Otherwise you may have to try to squeeze yourself into a much smaller crevice than you did.

EXPLANATORY.

In answer to enquiries why our late popular teacher, Miss Hopkins, was not engaged for this year, the following will explain:—Miss H's. certificate lapsed some eighteen months ago, but by petition to Minister of Education was extended or renewed for two years. Thus she had not the necessary legal qualification to teach another full year. The Trustee Board offered to engage her for the first half of the year, and waited from the 12th of November to the 23rd of December, up to which date they had received no definite reply to their proposition. On this date they advertised for a teacher, receiving a large number of applications at salaries fifteen to twenty per cent. less than had been offered to Miss Hopkins. The young lady engaged, Miss Ganton, comes with excellent testimonials, and we trust she will not be less successful than her predecessor.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

Mayor Howland's election in Toronto by such a splendid majoity (nearly 2200) must be regarded as one of the signs of the times. It is significant of a great change in public sentiment as regards the liquor question, for the contest was fought out squarely on that issue. It means far more than appears on the surface, and cannot but be regarded as a great moral victory as well as the forerunner of great events yet to transpire in the history of the cause of Temperance in Canada. Let every Temperance banner be unfurled—"For God, for Home and for Country"—and keep your armor bright.

HENRY GEORGE'S PAPER.

We have just received the initial number of the new paper published in New York city by the great labor reformer, Henry George. It is called The Standard, and contains some powerful and brilliant articles from the pen of the distinguished publisher It is issued at the rate of $2.50 per year, and considering that it is edited by one of the most profound reasoners of the age, ought soon to have an immense circulation. We confess ourself deeply interested in the great work Mr. George has undertaken to perform.

"THE PROPHET."

The above is the name of a publication printed in the Beeton World office, and published by somebody, whose address is Box 56, Bradford, on the first of every third month, at the rate of 25 cents per annum. Although the weather claims chief attention at the hands of The Prophet, other important matters are not forgotten. In the January number before us we are told amongst other things, (1) that Toronto will get the base ball pennant this year; (2) that St. Louis will be the champions of the National League; (3) a re-arrangement of the counties may be looked for at an early date; (4) there will be a boom in real estate throughout Ontario during the coming summer; (5) the Scott Act will be repealed at the first session of the Dominion parliment or amended in such a way as to be enforced; (6) mad dogs will be unusually common this year; (7) A. Pasteur, physician, will commence practicing in Lloydtown; (8) the Government may give Dr. Chase a gratuity for his success in alleviating pain; (9) Prohibition is John A's next platform; (10) the Federal election will come on early in February; &c., &c. ad infinitum. The Prophet has a great head, but we think the Government will need to give it an immense gratuity—not for "alleviating pain," but to induce it to suspend publication and give people a rest in the prophetic business, which has been done to death by Vennor, Moses Oats, Wiggins, and others. If The Prophet isn't extinguished soon we shall hear of a great many more mad men than "mad dogs" this year.

Letter from Mr. W. G. Duncan.

We have received quite a lengthy letter from Mr. W. G. Duncan, denying the truthfulness of the statements made by Mr. Sample relative to Mr. Thos. Moore, himself, and Washington Territory. He scouts the idea of Mr. Moore or anybody else banking $1,000 a year, and repudiates with equal scorn, the statement that Mr. Moore was losing that amount in W. T. He says that Mr. M. is a shrewd, careful calculator and not given to speculation. In reference to the country generally, Mr Duncan says Mr. Sample cannot speak with authority as he saw but very little of it. In Mr. D's own words, "put a greyhound after a jack rabbit and they will soon take in all of the land seen by Mr. S."

Mr. Duncan says he is perfectly satisfied with his home and highly delighted with the prospects.

Farmers Advocate.—This excellent farmer's magazine, which is now in its twenty-second year, has a large circulation, The January number before us, contains, amongst a large amount of other well selected and original matter, a prize essay by Mr. Frank Howell, of St. George, Ont., entitled, "Is Our Future Husbandry to be Special or Mixed?" which alone is worth more than the subscription price. Published by Wm. Weld, London, Ont., at the rate of $1 per annum in advance.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE McKENZIE.

(Specially Contributed for The Advance.)

George McKenzie of Orange Valley, Artemesia, passed away to rest on December 14th at the ripe old age of 76 years. Deceased was born in Rossshire Scotland and when young moved with his parents to the City of Aberdeen where he received his education. When quite a youth or about the age of 16, he took charge of a Linen manufactoring business. After some years employ there, he was sent to Spain. There he took charge of a factory in the same line. After about four years engagement there he took a position as engineer on a Spanish Man of War. Disatisfied with that life he againreturned to the land of his birth.

Being than able to speak and write the Spanish language and having some knowledge of French, he was again engaged by a Linen firm in Aberdeen to represent them in their various lines on the Continent.

In that connection he visited nearly every town and city in France, Spain and Portugal. After some years of experience in that life he decided on seeking his fortune in the far off land of America.

In 1856 he arrived in Canada locating in the city of Hamilton. After about one years residence there he moved into this Township taking up land he launched out into what was to him a new experience, Farming. For the first three years of residence in the Township, he taught School in the Section adjoining this village and was first and for a number of years Superintendent of the Valley Union Sabbath School. In early life he gave his heart to God and united with the Presbyterian Church of which he remained a consistent member until the Master called him home.

About ten years ago, he was elected and ordained an Elder in Chalmer's Church here. He took an active interest in the work of the church giving liberally of his time and means for the advancement of the church of God. Every one had confidence in his piety, he stood spotless and unrebukable before the world. His death was calm and triumphant, he spoke of it as going home. He leaves an aged partner and family who mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and father, but for him to live was Christ and to die was gain.

Ladies troubled with Pimples, Blotches, Rough hands or face, or Sores of any description, should use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It will leave the skin in perfect health, smooth, clean and good color. Be sure and get the genuine, made by McGregor & Parke. Price 25c. Sold at the Drug Store

SALT RHEUM CURED—McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face or hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. Try McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. 25c. per box at the Drug Store.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Mendville, Pa.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Thermometers Differ.

Editor Advance: Sir,—Do all thermometers indicate the weather alike in the same neighborhood?

WEATHER WISE.

[They don't; and to prove this, the Agricultural Editor will mention a circumstance which occurred in this town on Sunday afternoon, 2nd inst. The weather was intensely cold that day, and in order to get the exact temperature the A. E. consulted a thermometer hung up on the outside of Mr. R. Trimble's store. It indicated ten degrees above zero. From curiosity we went straight to Richardson's drug store and examined the thermometer hung out there. To our astonishment we discovered that the mercury in the latter was down no less than five degrees below zero!—ED. ADVANCE.]

"Thornbury Standard."

Our old and esteemed friend, Mr. Farewell, did perhaps the most effective work of any journalist in the riding during the recent parlimentary election in Centre Grey. He loyally, forcibly and logically supported the Liberal Conservative nominee from first to last, and this fact should not be forgotton by the patriotic members of the party. All honor to the Union Standard.

Last week the Standard—which is now in its fourteenth year—came out with a new heading and otherwise much improved. Go on and prosper, old friend; whatever your critics may say to the contrary, we know your heart is sound and loyal to the core.

Don't Lend Your Paper!

In every community there are people who are either too mean or too stingy to take a local paper. They borrow their neighbors, however, and thus keep posted on current events at other people's expense. If asked to subscribe, they tell the editor it is unnecessary, as neighbor B. lets him have the paper as soon as he is through with it himself—sometimes he gobbles it before Mr. B. has a chance to look at it, all the same. Now, reader, if you are like neighbor B. just make up your mind that your stingy, borrowing friend will have to pay for his own reading in future. Don't lend your paper, except to those who are really too poor to take it.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Girl's Protest.

We're getting very tired of the silly things men say
About the "good old-fashioned girl," and her superior way.
The highest point of nonsense they have fairly overtopped,
And we—"the girls"—decide that it is really time they stopped!

Our dear old grandmas—bless them!—never mean to lead astray
Young Ned or Tom, when, with a loving smile at us, they say,
"Ah, boys, the girls are different from what they used to be!"
But we think they've forgotten all the fun they had, you see!

They remember all the spinning, but the dancing they forgot;
They can recollect the baking—not the way they used to fret
When they had to stay at home sometimes, to dust the parlor clean,
When lots of other girls and boys were "dancing on the green!"

Why should a girl sit down and spin from morning until night,
With so much big machinery—do you think it would be right?
And modern girls can make good pies, and fancy dishes, too,
And just as well, we'll wager, as the old ones used to do.

But for an instant we'll assume the girls were better then,
Were more sedate, industrious—but how about the men?
We think our grandpa just too nice when sometimes he will say,
"Oh, girls, the boys are not so fine as in my old-time day!"

But, seriously, we should think that older folks would know
That times are very different from fifty years ago!
"The girls" must follow with the world, which surely has advanced—
* * * * *
One day grandma forgot and we were perfectly entranced
When she said that she was noted once for a minuet she danced.

The Bald-Headed Tyrant.

Oh! the quietest home on earth had I,
No thought of trouble, no hint of care;
Like a dream of pleasure the days flew by,
And Peace had folded her pinions there;
But one day there joined in our household band
A bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land,

O, the despot came in the dead of night,
And no one ventured to ask him why;
Like slaves we trembled before his might,
And our hearts stood still when we heard him cry,
For never a soul could his power withstand,
That bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

He ordered us here and he sent us there—
Though never a word could his small lips speak,
With his toothless gums and his vacant stare,
And his helpless limbs so frail and weak,
Till I cried in a voice of stern command,
"Go up, thou bald-head from No-man's-land."

But his abject slaves they turned on me;
Like the bears in Scripture they'd rend me there;
The while they worshipped with bended knee
This restless wretch with the missing hair;
For he rules them all with relentless hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

Then I searched for help in every clime,
For peace had fled from my dwelling now,
Till I finally thought of old Father Time,
And low before him I made my bow.
"Wilt thou deliver me out of his hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land?"

Old Time he looked with a puzzled stare,
And a smile came over his features grim;
"I'll take the tyrant under my care,
Watch what my hour-glass does to him;
The veriest humbug that ever was planned
Is the same bald-head from No-man's land."

Old Time is doing his work full well,
Much less of might does the tyrant wield;
But Ah! with sorrow my heart will swell
And sad tears fall as I see him yield.
Could I stay the touch of that shrivelled hand,
I would keep bald the head from No-man's-land.

For the loss of peace I have cease' to care;
Like other vassals I have learned, forsooth,
To love the wretch who forgot his hair
And hurried along without a tooth.
And he rules me, too, with his tiny hand,
This bald-headed tyrant from No-man's-land.

Mary E. Vandyne.

Earth's Fleecy Mantle.

The beautiful snow comes fluttering down,
And lovingly nestles on country and town.

I watch from my window its feathery fall,
And see how it spreads out its soft, fleecy pall.

Tossed lightly and whirled by the frolicsome wind,
The white, star-shaped flakes their resting-place find.

Heaped softly together they hide all the ground
And cover the earth in a white, shining mound.

* * * * *

The storm in its beauty I watch all the day,
Till night comes at last and the clouds break away.

Then I take the snow-shovel and out doors I go
To clean out a path through the beautiful snow

"Light!" "Fleecy!" Who said so? I say to his face,
That for once in his life he was 'way off his base,

My back aches before I have hardly begun!
"Light!" "Fleecy!" Each shovelful weighs a full ton!

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"Ah!" interposed Jeremy, "that shot was a credit to you. I didn't think you could have done it."

"A credit! I'll tell you what, it is an awful thing to kill a man like that. I often see his face as he fell, at night in my sleep."

"I was merely looking at it as a shot," replied Jeremy, innocently; "and considered as a shot at twenty paces and under trying circumstances, it was a credit to you."

"And then, you see, Jeremy, there was another thing, you know—about—about Eva. Well, I wrote to her, and she has never answered my letter, unless," with a gleam of hope, "you have brought an answer."

Jeremy shook his aching head.

"Ah, no such luck. Well, it put me off, and that's the fact. Since she has chucked me up, I don't care twopence about anything. I don't say but what she is right; I dare say that I am not worth sticking to. She can do much better elsewhere;" and Ernest groaned and realized that his head was very bad indeed; but there it is. "I hadn't the heart to write any more letters, and I was too proud to write again to her. Confound her! let her go. I am not going to grovel to any woman under heaven, no, not even to her!" and he kicked the bedclothes viciously.

"I haven't learned much Zulu, yet," replied Jeremy sententiously; "but I know two words—'hamba gachle' (go softly.")

"Well, what of them?" said Ernest, testily.

"They mean, I am told, 'take it easy,' or 'look before you leap,' or 'never jump to conclusions,' or 'don't be in a confounded hurry'; very fine mottoes, I think."

"Of course they do; but what have they got to do with Eva?"

"Well, just this. I said I had got no letter. I never said—"

"What?" shouted Ernest.

"Hamba gachle," replied Jeremy, the imperturbable, gazing at Ernest out of his blackened eyes. "I never said that I had not got a message."

Ernest sprang clean out of the little truckle bed, shaking with excitement.

"What is it, man?"

"Just this. She told me to tell you that 'she loved you dearly.'"

Slowly Ernest sat down on the bed again, and, throwing a blanket over his head and shoulders, remarked in a tone befitting a sheeted ghost:

"Did she! Why couldn't you say so before?"

Then he got up again and commenced walking, blanket and all, up and down the little room with long strides, and knocking over the water jug in his excitement.

"Hamba gachle," again remarked Jeremy, rising and picking up the water jug. "How are we going to get more water? I'll tell you all about it."

And he did, including the story of Mr. Plowden's shaking, at which Ernest chuckled fiercely.

"I wish I had been there to kick him," he remarked parenthetically.

"I did that too, I kicked him hard," put in Jeremy; at which Ernest chuckled again.

"I can't make it all out," said Ernest at length, "but I will go home at once."

"You can't do that, old fellow. Your respected uncle, Sir Hugh, will have you run in."

"Ah! I forgot. Well, I will write to her to-day."

"That's better; and now let's dress. My head is better. By George, though, I am stiff. It is no joke fighting a giant."

But Ernest answered not a word. He was already, after his quick-brained fashion, employed in concocting his letter to Eva.

In the course of the morning he drafted it. It, or rather that part of it with which we need concern ourselves, ran thus:

"Such then, my dearest Eva, was the state of my mind toward you. I thought—God forgive me for the treason!—that perhaps you were, as so many women are, a fair-weather lover, and that now that I am in trouble you wished to slip the cable. If that was so, I felt that it was not for me to remonstrate. I wrote to you, and I knew that the letter came safely to your hands. You did not answer it, and I could only come to one conclusion. Hence my own silence. And in truth I do not at this moment quite understand why you have never written. But Jeremy has brought me your dear message, and with that I am content, for no doubt you have reasons which are satisfactory to yourself, and if that is so, no doubt, too, they would be equally satisfactory to me if only I knew them. You see, my heart's love, the fact is that I trust and believe in you utterly and entirely. What is right and true, what is loyal and sincere to me and to yourself—those are the things that you will do. Jeremy tells me a rather amusing story about the new clergyman who has come to Kesterwick, and who is, it appears, an aspirant for your hand. Well, Eva, I am sufficiently conceited not to be jealous; although I am in the unlucky position of an absent man, and worse still, an absent man under a cloud, I do not believe that he will cut me out. But on the day that you can put your hand upon your heart, and look me straight in the eyes (ah! Eva, I can see your eyes now), and tell me, on your honor as a lady, that you love this or any other man better than you do me, on that day I shall be ready to resign you to him. But till that day comes—and there is something in my heart which tells me that it is as impossible for it to come as for the mountain-range I look on as I write to move toward the town and bury it—I am free from jealousy, for I know that it is also impossible that you should be faithless to your love.

"Oh, my sweet, the troth we plighted was not for days, or years, or times—it was forever. Nothing can dissolve it; Death himself will be powerless against it. With each new and progressive existence it will re-arise as surely as the flowers in spring, only, unlike them, more fragrant and beautiful than before. Sometimes I think that it has already existed through countless ages. Strange thoughts come into a man's mind out there on the great veldt, riding alone hour after hour, and day after day, through sunlight and through moonlight, till the spirit of nature broods upon him, and he begins to learn the rudiments of truth. Some day I shall tell them all to you. Not that I have ever been quite alone, for I can say honestly that you have always been at my side since I left you; there has been no hour of the day or night when you have not been in my thoughts, and I believe that till death for a period blots out my senses no such hour will ever come.

"Day by day, too, my love has grown stronger even in its despair. Day by day it has taken shape and form and color, and become more and more a living thing, more and more an entity, as distinct as soul and body, and yet as inextricably blended and woven into the substance of each. If ever a woman was beloved, you are that woman, Eva Ceswick; if ever a man's life, present and to come, lay in a woman's hands, my life lies in yours. It is a germ which you can cast away or destroy, or which you can nourish till it bursts into bloom, and bears fruit beautiful beyond imagining. You are my fate, my other part. With you my destiny is intertwined, and you can mold it as you will. There is no height to which I cannot rise by your side; there is no depth to which I may not sink without you.

"And now, what does all this lead up to? Will you make a sacrifice for me, who am ready to give all my life to you—no, who have already given it? That sacrifice is this: I want you to come out here and marry me; as you know, circumstances prevent me from returning to you. If you will come, I will meet you at the Cape and marry you there. Ah! surely you will come! As for money, I have plenty from home, and can make as much more as we shall want here, so that need be no obstacle. It is long to wait for your answer—three months—but I hope that the faith that will, as the Bible tells us, enable people to move mountains—and my faith in you is as great as that—will also enable me to bear the suspense, and in the end prove its own reward. Oh, how life has changed for me since yesterday!"

Ernest read selected portions of this composition to Mr. Alston and Jeremy. Both listened in solemn silence, and at the conclusion Jeremy scratched his head and remarked that it was deep enough to "fetch" any girl, though for his part he did not understand it. Mr. Alston relit his pipe, and for a while said nothing; but to himself he thought that it was a remarkable letter for so young a man to have written, and revealed a curious turn of mind. One remark he did make, however, and that was rather a rude one:

"The girl won't understand what you are driving at, Master Ernest; she will think that you have gone off your head in these savage parts. All you say may or may not be true; on that point I express no opinion—but to write such things to a woman is to throw your pearls before swine. You should ask her about her bonnets, my boy, and tell her what sort of dresses she should bring out, and that the air is good for the complexion. She would come then."

Here Ernest fired up.

"You are beastly cynical, Alston, and you should not speak of Miss Ceswick like that to me. Bonnets indeed!"

"All right, my lad—all right. Time will show. Ah, you boys! you go building up your ideals of ivory and gold and fine linen, only to find them one day turned into the commonest of clay, draped in the dirtiest of rags. Well, well, it is the way of the world; but you take my advice, Ernest; burn that letter, and go in for an Intombi (Kafir girl). It is not too late yet, and there is no mistake about the sort of clay she is made of."

Here Ernest stamped out of the room in a passion.

"Too cock-sure, wanted cooling down a little," remarked Mr. Alston to Jeremy; "should never be cock-sure where a woman is concerned; women are fond of playing dirty tricks, and saying they could not help it. I know them. Come on; let us go and find him, and go for a walk."

They found Ernest sitting on the box of the waggon, which was out-spanned together with Jeremy's, just outside the town, and looking rather sulky.

"Come on, Ernest," said Mr. Alston apologetically; "I will throw no more mud at your ideal. In the course of the last thirty years I have seen so many fall to pieces of their own accord that I could not help warning you. But perhaps they make them of better stuff in England than we do in those parts."

Ernest descended, and soon forgot his pique. It was but rarely that he bore malice for more than half an hour. As they walked along one of the by-streets they met the young fellow who had acted as second to Jeremy in the big fight of the previous day. He informed them that he had just been to inquire how the giant was. It appeared that he had received an injury to the spine, the effect of Jeremy's "lift," from which there was little hope of his recovery. He was not, however, in much pain. This intelligence distressed Jeremy not a little. He had earnestly desired to thrash the giant, but he had had no wish to injure him. With his usual promptitude he announced his intention of going to see his fallen enemy.

"You are likely to meet with a warm reception if you do," said Mr. Alston.

"I'll risk it. I should like to tell him that I am sorry."

"Very good; come along—that is the house."

The injured man had been carried to the house of a relative just outside the town, a white thatched building that had been built five-and-thirty years before, when the site of Pretoria was a plain inhabited only by quaggas, eland and wilderbeeste. In front of the door was a grove of orange trees, which smelled sweet and looked golden with hanging fruit.

The house itself was a small, white building, with a double-swinging door like those used in stables in this country. The top half of the door was open, and over the lower portion of it leaned a Boer, a rough-looking customer, smoking a huge pipe.

"'Dagh, Oom'" (good-day, uncle), said Mr. Alston, stretching out his hand.

The other looked at him suspiciously, and then held out a damp paw to each in turn, at the same time opening the door. As Ernest passed the threshold he noticed that the clay flooring was studded with peach stones well trodden into its substance to prevent wear and tear of passing feet. The door opened into a fair-sized room with whitewashed walls called the "sit-kame" (sitting-room), and furnished with a settee, a table, and several chairs seated with "rimpi" or strips of hide. On the biggest of these chairs sat a woman of large size, the mother of the family. She did not rise on their entry, but without speaking held out a limp hand, which Mr. Alston and the others shook, addressing her affectionately as "tanta" (aunt). Then they shook hands with six or seven girls and young men, the latter sitting about in an aimless sort of way, the former clearing off the remains of the family meal, which had consisted of huge bones of boiled fresh beef. So fresh was it, indeed, that on the floor by the side of the table lay the gory head and skin of a newly-killed ox, from which the beef had been cut. Ernest, noticing this, wondered at the superhuman strength of stomach that could take its food under such circumstances.

The preliminary ceremony of hand-shaking having got through, Mr. Alston, who spoke Dutch perfectly, explained the object of their visit. The faces of the Dutchmen darkened as he did so, and the men scowled at Jeremy with hatred not unmingled with terror. When he had done, the oldest man said that he would ask his cousin if he would see them, adding, however, that he was so ill that he did not think it likely. Raising a curtain, which served as a door, he passed from the sitting-room into the bedroom ("slaap kame"). Presently he returned, and beckoned to the Englishmen to enter. They passed into a small chamber about ten feet square, which was, after the fashion of these people in cases of any illness, hermetically sealed from air. On a large bed that blocked up most of the room, and on which it was the usual habit of the master of the house and his wife to sleep in their clothes, lay the fallen giant. So much as could be seen of his face was a mass of hideous bruises, and one of his hands, which lay on the bed, was in splints; the chief injury, however, was to his back, and from this he could never expect to recover. By his side sat his little wife, who had on the previous day urged the thrashing of the Hottentot. She glared fiercely at Jeremy, but said nothing. On catching sight of his victor, the giant turned his face to the wall, and asked what he wanted.

"I have come," said Jeremy, Mr. Alston interpreting for him, "to say that I am sorry that you are injured so much, that I wanted to beat you, but had no idea that I should hurt you so. I know that the trick of throwing a man as I threw you is very dangerous, and I only used it as a last resource, and because you would have killed me if I had not."

The Boer muttered something in reply about its being very bitter to be beaten by such a little man.

It was evident to Ernest that the man's pride was utterly broken. He had believed himself to be the strongest man, white or black, in Africa, and now an English lad had thrown him over his shoulder like a plaything.

Jeremy next said he hoped he bore no malice, and would shake hands.

The giant hesitated a little, and then stretched out his uninjured hand, which Jeremy took.

"Englishman," he said, "you are a wonderful man and you will grow stronger yet. You have made a baby of me for life, and turned my heart to a baby's too. Perhaps one day some man will do the same for you. Till then you can never know what I feel. They will give you the Hottentot outside. No, you must take him; you won him in fair fight. He is a good driver, though he is so small. Now go."

The sight was a painful one, and they were not sorry to get away from it. Outside they found one of the young Boers waiting with the Hottentot boy, whom he insisted on handing over to Jeremy.

Any scruples the latter had about accepting him were overcome by the look of intense satisfaction on the features of the poor wretch himself.

His name was "Aasvogel" (vulture), and he made Jeremy an excellent and most faithful servant.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A WAY OF ESCAPE.

When Mr. Alston, Jeremy and Ernest emerged from the back street in which was the house they had visited into one of the principal thoroughfares of Pretoria, they came upon a curious sight. In the middle of the street stood, or rather danced, a wiry Zulu, dressed in an old military great-coat, and the ordinary native "moocha," or scanty kilt, and having a red worsted comforter tied round one arm. He was shouting out something at the top of his voice and surrounded by a crowd of other natives, who at intervals expressed their approval of what he was saying in deep, guttural exclamations.

"What is that lunatic after?" asked Jeremy.

Mr. Alston listened for a minute, and answered:

"I know the man well. His name is Goza. He is the fleetest runner in Natal, and can go as fast as a horse; indeed, there are few horses that he can not tire out. By profession he is a 'praiser.' He is now singing the praises of the Special Commissioner, 'bongering' they call it. I will translate what he is saying:

"Listen to the foot of the great elephant Somptseu. Feel how the earth shakes beneath the tread of the white t'Chaka, father of the Zulus, foremost among the great white people. Ou! he is here; ou! he is coming. See how the faces of the "Amabooma" (the Boers) turn pale before him. He will eat them up; he will swallow them, the huge vulture, who sits still till the ox is dead, who fights the fight of "sit down." Oh, he is great, the lion; where he turns his eye the people melt away, their hearts turn to fat. Where is their one like Somptseu, the man who is not afraid of Death; who looks at Death and it runs from him; who has the tongue of honey; who reigns like the first star at night; who is beloved and honored of the great white mother (the Queen): who loves his children, the Amazulu, and shelters them under his wide wing; who lifted Cetawayo out of the dirt, and can put him back in the dirt again? Abase yourselves, you low people, doctor yourselves with medicine, lest his fierce eyes should burn you up. Oh, hark! he comes, the father of kings, the Chaka; oh! be still; oh, be silent: oh! shake in your knees. He is here, the elephant, the lion, the fierce one, the patient one, the strong one. See, he deigns to talk to little children; he teaches them wisdom; he gives them light like the sun—he is the sun—he is t'Somptseu.'"

At this juncture a quiet-looking, oldish gentleman, entirely unlike either an elephant, a lion, or a vulture, of medium height, with gray whiskers, a black coat, and a neat black tie, fastened in a bow came round the corner leading a little girl by the hand. As he came the praiser lifted up his right hand, and in the most stentorian tones gave the royal salute, "Bayette," which was re-echoed by all the other natives.

The oldish gentleman, who was none other than the Special Commissioner himself turned upon his extoller with a look of intense annoyance, and addressed him very sharply in Zulu:

"Be still," he said. "Why do you always annoy me with your noise? Be still, I say, you loud-tongued dog, or I will send you back to Natal. My head aches with your empty words."

"O elephant! I am silent as the dead. Bayette. O Somptseu! I am quiet, 'Bayette'"

"Go! Begone!"

With a final shout of Bayette the Zulu turned and fled down the street with the swiftness of the wind, shouting his praises as he went.

"How do you do, sir?" said Mr. Alston, advancing. "I was just coming to call upon you."

"Ah, Alston, I am delighted to see you. I heard that you were gone on a hunting trip. Given up work and taken to hunting, eh? Well, I should like to do the same. If I could have found you when I came up here, I should have been tempted to ask you to come with us."

At this point Mr. Alston introduced Ernest and Jeremy. The Special Commissioner shook hands with them,

"I have heard of you," he said to Jeremy; "but I must ask you not to fight any more giants here just at present, the tension between Boer and Englishman is too great to allow of its being stretched any more. Do you know you nearly provoked an outbreak last night with your fighting? I trust that you will not do it again."

He spoke rather severely, and Jeremy colored. Presently, however, he made amends by asking them all to dinner.

On the following morning Ernest sent off his letter to Eva. He also wrote to his uncle and to Dorothy, explaining his long silence as best he could. The latter, too, he for the first time took into his confidence about Eva. At a distance he no longer felt the same shyness in speaking to her about another woman that had always overpowered him when he was by her side.

Now that he had been away from England for a year or so, many things connected with his home life had grown rather faint amid the daily change and activity of his new life. The rush of fresh impressions had to a great extent overlaid the old ones, and Dorothy, and Mr. Cardus, and all the old Kesterwick existence and surroundings seemed faint and far away. They were indeed rapidly assuming that unreality that in time the wanderer finds will grow round his old associations. He feels that they know him no more, very likely he imagines that they have forgotten him, and so they become like shades of the dead.

Already Ernest began to find it something of a labor to indite epistles to people in England, and yet he had the pen of a ready writer. The links that bound them together were fast breaking loose. Eva, and Eva alone, remained clear to the vision of his mind. She was always with him, and to her, at any period of his life, he never found difficulty in writing. For in truth their very natures were interwoven, and the rapport between them was not produced merely by the pressure of external circumstances, or by the fact of continual contact and mutual attraction arising from physical causes, such as the natural leaning of youth to youth and beauty to beauty.

These causes no doubt had to do with its production, and perhaps were necessary to its mundane birth, as the battery is necessary to the creation of the electric spark. Thus, had Eva been old instead of a young and lovely girl the rapport would perhaps never have come into being here. In short, they formed the cable along which the occult communication could pass, but there their function ended. Having once established that communication, and provided a means by which the fusion of spirit could be effected, youth and beauty and the natural attraction of sex to sex had done their part. The great dividing river that rolls so fast and wide between our souls in their human shape had been safely passed, and the two fortunate travellers had been allowed before their time to reap advantages—the measureless advantage of real love, so rare on earth, and at its best so stained by passion; the divine privilege of suffering for that love's sake that will bring such endless blessings in its train, which will only come to most of us, and then perhaps imperfectly, in a different world to this.

Yes, the bridge might now be broken down, it had served its purpose. Come age, or loss of physical attraction, or separation and icy silence, or the change called death itself, and the souls thus subtly blended can and will and do defy them. For the real life is not here; here only is the blind beginning of things, maybe the premature beginning.

How Death May Come.

As the great physiologist Bichat observed many years ago, death may come at last in any one of three different ways: By failure of the heart, the lungs or the brain. The first named is, in fact, the one that always shows that life is extinct. So long as the heart keeps going, the circulation is kept up, and all parts are nourished. When breathing ceases no more oxygen can reach the blood, and the latter no longer nourishes any part as it should; the brain no longer sends its influence to the heart, and it has no further incentive to keep on working. If injury to the brain should happen, or some poison interfere with the outflow of nerve force, then the lungs no longer take in fresh air, and the heart ceases its work. So, finally, all modes of death result in the cessation of the heart beats, and the life of the body stops within two or three minutes after complete failure of this great force-pump to continue its action.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HENNESSY'S SUSPENSION.

Why the Governor of the Mauritius was Withdrawn — A Disagreeable Individual.

A London cable says: The suspension of Sir John Hennessy, Governor of the Mauritius, has caused a sensation in diplomatic circles, though it is generally admitted that Lord Salisbury is fully justified in inflicting this unusual and very severe disgrace by the conduct of the Governor.

Sir John Pope Hennessy, K. C. M. G., has the unfortunate reputation of causing disturbances wherever he is sent. A thorough Irishman, he was born in Kerry and educated in Cork, where he evidently imbibed some of the fighting qualities for which he is famed. From 1859-65 he represented King's County, Ireland, in Parliament, as a Nationalist, and made himself so intensely disagreeable to the Government that, with a view of getting him far away from the House of Commons, he was appointed Governor of Labuan, and subsequently of the West African colonies. Contrary to the general expectations the deadly climate of the latter failed to affect his health in any way. In fact he appeared positively to thrive on the fevers of the place.

In due course he was promoted to the Bahamas and the Windward Islands, where he almost caused a revolution and created such a disturbance that it was found necessary to transfer him to Hong Kong. Here he became the bosom friend of the heathen Chinee and the sworn enemy of every white man on the whole coast of the Celestial Empire. When he at length left to assume the Governorship of Mauritius, not a single European member of the colony was present to bid him farewell, his name being execrated by the whites on the ground of his doctrine that a Chinaman was in every way equal to a European.

Since he has been in the Mauritius the whole of that usually tranquil dependency has been kept in one constant state of ferment by his quarrels with his Deputy-Governor, Mr. Clifford Lloyd. The latter, who is remembered in Ireland as the most harsh of all resident magistrates and as the bitter enemy of the Land League, is equally notorious for his quarrelsome disposition, and the person who proposed cooping up two such men as John Hennessy and Clifford Lloyd on the Island of Mauritius must have had the deviltry in question suggested by some remembrance of two Kilkenny cats fastened over a clothes line.

Matters at length got to such a pitch that one-half of the population of the colony refused to speak to the other half, and Mr. Clifford Lloyd, after a frantic scene with his chief, left for London to report matters to the Government. The latter found the matters to be sufficiently grave to despatch the Queen's High Commissioner in South Africa on a special mission to the island in order to inquire into the state of affairs. It is on the strength of the latter's report that the Cabinet has taken the very unusual and grave step of suspending Sir John Hennessy from his functions of Governor before either recalling him or giving him an opportunity to resign.

DEGRADED AND CONDEMNED.

Failure of Efforts to Obtain the Reprieve of the Murderer of Mgr. Isquierdo.

A Madrid cable says: With the refusal of the Supreme Tribunal to commute the death sentence of Father Galeote, the murderer of Mgr. Isquierdo, all hopes of saving the priest from the garrotte have vanished. Strong efforts were made for a commutation rather for the purpose of saving the priesthood from the blot of the execution of a cleric than from any love for the dissolute Galeote, whose conduct was long a reproach to the Church. Father Galeote is the priest who, in order to revenge himself for an order of suspension inflicted upon him for immoral conduct by the Bishop of Madrid, shot the latter with a revolver at the doors of the Pro-Cathedral on Palm Sunday last. Before being executed by means of the garrotte on the plain outside Madrid, Father Galeote will be solemnly and publicly degraded from the priesthood. One by one his ecclesiastical vestments will be removed from him, and after his head has been shaved to obliterate all traces of the tonsure, his hands and the crown of his head will be scraped with blades of steel in order to erase all traces of the sacred oil with which he was anointed on entering the priesthood. During these proceedings a dirge is chanted by the "freres de misericorde," the cowls of whose monkish garments are drawn down over their faces, leaving only two little holes for the eyes. On the conclusion of the ceremony the criminal will be seated on a chair with his back against an upright post fixed into the scaffold. A steel collar, the ends of which are passed through the post, is fastened round his neck, and as soon as the yellow bag has been drawn down over his face, the executioner gives a turn to the windlass, which causes the steel collar to tighten, and at the same time forces the point of a screw against the spinal column, which it breaks. The body is then left during the whole day exposed to the public gaze on the scaffold, and is only removed for burial at nightfall.

BURNED AFLOAT.

Destruction of a Small Steamer—One of the Crew Drowned—The Captain and Four Men Badly Burned.

A St. John (N.B.) despatch says: The small steamer Sir John left this port last night about 11 o'clock for Shulee, N.S., with a general cargo. When near Black Point, a short time after leaving port, fire broke out in the galley of the steamer, and rapidly spread over the vessel. The only boat was soon launched, but it upset and drifted away. As their only chance, Capt. Purdy then took the helm and steered for the shore, two miles distant. After much suffering from smoke and fire they ran the vessel on the rocks, when the captain jumped overboard and reached the land. The next man to jump, John Sinclair, failed to reach the shore and was drowned. The remainder of the crew, four men, then got ashore by a rope secured by the captain from the vessel. All of the survivors are more or less burnt. They had to remain on the beach in the cold till daylight. The captain reached here this afternoon. The steamer was built last summer, was valued at $10,000 and was insured for $5,000. She was owned by Capt. Purdy and his brother, of Sackville, N.B.

HER DREAM.

This story being true, in order not to wound the susceptibilities of any one now living, I suppress proper names as well as a few of the least important details. As to the improbability, that is a matter of no concern, because it is simply true. As to its impossibility, I leave that to be discussed by the incredulous, who are so wise when they know nothing about a matter.

About ten years ago Lady Dash was staying at a large hotel in a fashionable watering place on the western coast of France. We will call the hotel the Lion d'Or, although that was not its name; the Lady Dash's daughter Blanche, as it is more convenient to have a real Christian name than to subsist on continual initials. The Dashes had just arrived with courier and maid and an immense pile of luggage, intending to stay till Easter, when they were due at Rome. After a rather early dinner they spent the evening in the gardens and listened to an excellent band while chatting with some friends who had just turned up. Lady Dash at last said it was delightful, but it was time to go to bed. She led the way in her handsome black draperies, a lace veil thrown over her white hair. Blanche followed slowly, loath to leave the moonlight on the sea, the pregnant shadows in the garden, the scent of flowers and cigarettes, all the brightness and the beauty outside under the stars, and shut herself within four walls with a candle instead of a glowworm. Her mother glanced over her shoulder to see if she were following, and then disappeared inside the wide open doors which led into a brilliantly lighted hall. Although the hotel was already crowded, there were a few fresh arrivals standing by the bureau. Blanche looked round with idle curiosity at the same time as a man turned away from the sort of pigeon-hole, with the number of his room in his hand, and came quickly across the tesselated pavement. He was rather under the average height, with broad shoulders, short neck and long arms. The light of the chandelier fell full on a pair of restless eyes, a pale, ordinary face, a short, dark beard, such as nine Frenchmen out of ten affect, and a scar on the left cheek. Blanche stood quite still, every scrap of color leaving her face, and then ran upstairs as fast as she could, panting and terror-stricken, to find her mother.

Lady Dash was quietly taking off her veil when her daughter burst into the room. She closed the door behind her and then said excitedly: "We must leave this place at once. I wouldn't sleep here another night if you promised me thousands of pounds."

"My dear child, what are you thinking of? We've just come."

"Never mind, we must go at once. Where's Mary?"

"Eating her supper, I suppose. You must be mad to talk of starting off at this time of night. Nothing would induce me," taking a seat on a small sofa and looking very determined.

"But, mother dear"—and Blanche knelt down by her and seized her hand.

"Why, child, you are cold as stone! What is it?" rubbing her fingers gently and looking down with growing alarm into her agitated face.

"You know my horrid dream last night," her lips quivering—"how I thought I was being murdered. Just now, in the hall, I saw him."

"You saw whom? I don't understand."

"The man who murdered me," shaking from head to foot. "I should know him anywhere. He has a scar on his left cheek."

"But, my dear, this is childish nonsense. Who pays attention to dreams. I dreamed most vividly one night that I was shipwrecked. Am I never to go into a boat again?"

"But that's different. Oh, mother, do you want to see my throat cut?"

"Don't ask such horrible questions. You must be reasonable. We can't leave at this time of night. It would create quite an esclandre. You shall have Mary to sleep on the sofa."

"Mary, who goes into hysterics at a spider!"

"Then I will stay with you myself," magnanimously. "Anything to satisfy you."

Blanche assented to this with a deep-drawn sigh. She could not help seeing the difficulties in the way of an immediate departure, but, as far as she herself was concerned, she would rather have slept in a cow house than under the roof of the Lion d'Or. Lady Dash could not be expected to consent to the cow-house, so she reluctantly gave way.

The two ladies having ascertained that they had a sufficient stock of light and literature, and having securely locked the door, established themselves in Blanche's bed-room and prepared for a wakeful night. Lady Dash's nerves were on the alert, although she pooh-poohed the whole affair, and she started uncomfortably when an old gentleman sneezed on the stairs or a waiter dropped a pair of boots. By and by the hotel became quiet, the doors ceased to bang, and the last scrap of conversation was silenced. Lady Dash, after reading, or pretending to read, for some time, began to grow drowsy

About a yard from the bed was the door, of which Blanche had a distinct view as she sat at a little ornamental table placed at the end of the bed. Lady Dash, when her eyes were open, could also see the door across the corner of the bed, but she did not think it necessary to watch it as her daughter did. There was a looking-glass draped with coarse lace, into which Blanche felt compelled to look every now and then, as it stood on her right hand. As the night wore on she had an uneasy feeling that there was somebody standing behind her, and at the next glance she would see him reflected in the mirror. This terror grew on her till she was afraid to look over her shoulder. Her mother was fast asleep and she felt as if she were no protection to her. She longed to wake her, but knew it would be cruel. Suddenly there was a sound; every hair on her head stood erect and cold water ran down her spine. Her heart beat so loud that she could scarcely hear anything else. Lady Dash had awakened and was staring hard at the door Again there was a sound—an unmistakable cautious footstep. They did not look at each other, but kept their eyes fixed in the same direction. Breathlessly they watched and saw the handle of the door turn. Their hearts seemed ready to burst in the pause that followed. Again it was tried, but the lock resisted; then there was silence. Every sense seemed merged in listening. They waited with white faces and clammy hands, their nerves strung to the utmost point of tension; but the murderer, if murderer he were—was balked, and did not come again. * * *

Lady Dash was never more delighted to see the sun than on the bright morning that succeeded that endless night. She felt utterly worn out, but she quite agreed with Blanche that a move to Pau was advisable if that man were still in the hotel. Mary, having been told of the wretched night her mistress had passed, urged her to go to bed now in the broad daylight and get a good rest; but Lady Dash stoutly refused, confessing to herself, though not to the maid, that rest would be impossible. After a hurried breakfast she sent for M. Paul, the proprietor, who was dismayed to hear that the apartment, which had been engaged for a fortnight, was to be thrown on his hands at an hour's notice. He demanded the reason so pathetically that Lady Dash was at last induced to tell him the real facts of the case. Then his face cleared and he begged Madame to dismiss all uneasiness from her mind. As to the Monsieur with the scar he had left the Lion d'Or before dawn, but the police were already on his track. The bon Diu had mercifully preserved the English ladies by means of a dream, but others had received no such warning, and had suffered in different ways. M. le Baron had lost his silver cigar-case, Mme. la Comtesse her necklace of pearls, M. le Prince a porte monnaie containing bank notes to the amount of £6,000, Mme. S— a gold watch, Mlle. C— a handsome bracelet, etc., etc.

"But all these ladies and gentlemen, did they sleep with their doors unlocked?" inquired Lady Dash, feeling that they had brought their misfortunes on themselves by their own imprudence.

"Not at all, madame; but the vaurien had an easy contrivance by which he could turn a key in a lock, and so open the door."

"Then why didn't he open ours?"

"It must have been the light that protected you, madame. He saw it, and guessed that you were sitting up."

Lady Dash shivered at the danger they had run, but allowed herself to be persuaded to stay. Common sense told Blanche that the Lion D'Or was the last place to which "the man with the scar" would return, unless brought there involuntarily in the hands of the police. So she allowed herself to go to sleep at night without listening for his footsteps. It was a relief to her mind when the thief was caught and finally sentenced to a considerable term of travaux forces. This happened ten years ago. The term of imprisonment is probably over, consequently Blanche lives with the sword of Damocles hanging over her head; for until the man with the scar is known to be dead she knows there is a possibility that the dream may yet be fulfilled. Absit omen.

REJOICING WITH EMPEROR WILLIAM

Taffy from Son to Father and from Father to Grandfather.

A Berlin cable says: Emperor William on Saturday celebrated the 80th anniversary of his entrance into the Prussian army by receiving all his commanding generals, headed by Crown Prince Frederick William. The Crown Prince addressed the Emperor as follows: "The army celebrates with Your Majesty the day upon which, eighty years ago, you entered the army. On several occasions we have been fortunate in coming before our chief in war, to thank him for leading us through severe struggles to glorious victories. To-day, however, Your Majesty can look back upon sixteen years which have been richly blessed by peace—years, above all, dedicated to the undisturbed development and strengthening of the Empire, which was only established after long waiting and struggling. This work of peace succeeded because Your Majesty's competent and active leadership raised the capability of the army to that state of perfection of which every German soldier is justly proud. The Prussian principle, that no difference exists between the people and the army, because both are always ready to defend their country, has by Your Majesty's care become the property of the whole German nation. In this natural capability lies our greatest security for the maintenance of peace. May I then again tell Your Majesty that our strong and united nation, in grateful love and faithfulness, always ready for sacrifices, trusts in its Emperor and leader in war; looks with joyful confidence upon him as the preserver of the peace, and cherishes the wish that God's blessing in fulness may dwell upon him."

The Emperor, replying, referred to his father, who, he said, allowed him to enter the army in the hope that he would experience better times than Prussia had endured. Providence had permitted him to see such happy times in the fullest measure. These better days were especially due to the successes of the army. Here the Emperor, much moved, embraced the Crown Prince and afterward General Von Moltke, to whom he spoke in an earnest manner, thanking him for his unparalleled services. Finally, turning to the other officers present, he said he hoped to meet them again on the 1st of January, 1888.

The city was gaily decked with flags last night and the whole city was brilliantly illuminated. The Emperor attended a special service in the Cathedral, driving there in a carriage. Crowds lined the streets through which he passed and unceasingly manifested their enthusiasm. A military banquet was held, at which eighteen commanding generals and 364 colonels and staff officers were present.

Mr. T. H. Cox, a member of the firm of Cox Brothers, manufacturers, Lochee, has intimated his intention of giving £12,000 for endowing a chair of anatomy in the University College, Dundee. This donation is another of the fruits of the approaching "jubilee year."

—Unreasonable Old Man (to bruised and maimed son)—"There you are, with one eye gouged out, both ears gone, a dislocated shoulder-blade, broken arm and fractured leg, with whiskey enough in you to start a liquor store, and all for a college game of football. It's outrageous, disgraceful." Bruised and Maimed Son (reproachfully)—

THE LAND OF FROSTBITES.

Travelling in the Snow With the Temperature at 50 Degrees Below Zero.

The vapor of the breath will at once condense on the beard in the shape of ice that will keep accumulating indefinitely if not removed, says Lieut. Schwatka, writing in the Youth's Companion of his Arctic experiences. Of course we tried to keep our beards as short as possible, but living as Esquimaux, shaving was completely out of the question unless we lathered ourselves with a snowball and shaved with an icicle. So all our efforts were confined to what we could do with a pair of scissors, and even then the ice would manage to get at this slim hold and build itself up into a ball of varying proportions. Our method of removing it was peculiar. When we stopped to rest we would bury our mouths in the palms of our open hands and breathe with deep inspirations for a minute or two. This would always make the icy mass drop off, especially if the beard was kept short. If the reindeer hood comes too close up around the chin it also will accumulate ice in the same way, and in keeping it far enough away to avoid this the full chin is generally exposed. The chin, the nose, the eyes and parts of the cheeks are the only portions of the face exposed, for the hood comes down closely to the eyebrows. These exposed parts of the face are subject to frequent nips of frost, which during a very disagreeable day of wind and low temperature may exceed half a dozen an hour. The cure is to take the warm hand out of the reindeer mitten and apply it directly to the place until the little white spot which attracted the attention of some companion walking by your side disappears, for so complete a local anæsthetic is frost that you would never have known it yourself. This is especially true of the protuberant parts of the chin and cheeks, but some times upon the nose, just at the instant of freezing, is felt a hornet-like sting that makes a person feel like jumping twenty feet into the air. I have often been asked if such bitter cold air would not freeze the tongue in the mouth while breathing, and I have noticed this sensation apparently once or twice when the thermometer stood at about 70 degrees minus, but could at once get rid of the feeling by breathing through the nostrils and closing the mouth for a short time. The question naturally arises: Why not breathe through the nostrils all the while; but doing so continuously always results in such a persistent catarrh that it does not take one long to return to the usual method of breathing through the mouth, as by far less disagreeable. Every one has heard about the drowsiness that accompanies extreme cold, and supposed by many to be caused by breathing intensely cold air. None of my party experienced it in the least in all our winter's trip of almost constant travel in not only the greatest cold, but the longest continued cold endured by white men, showing that, living as the Esquimaux do, no such discomfort or danger need be feared. I have said that this intensely cold weather was usually accompanied by calms which made it quite bearable. I remember one quite noteworthy exception. One morning the thermometer at 8 o'clock showed us that it was 68 degrees below zero, but as it was calm and quiet we loaded our sledges for a short day's journey to the igloo of an Esquimau, where we could buy reindeer meat for our dogs. We were just ready to start when a wind sprang up that felt like facing razor blades. Had it come ten minutes sooner we should not have thought of going, but being loaded we started. The dogs trotted, and we ran along the whole way, except for one short rest, until we reached the welcome snowhouse. Both the white men and the Esquimaux were frozen in unexpected places.

At the end of the journey the thermometer showed 55 degrees minus—that is, it was warmer by 13 degrees. I told this to the Esquimaux with me, but I think from the incredulous glances they took at each other that they voted the thermometer to be the most accomplished Ananias they ever met, and wondered how we could allow ourselves to be duped by it.

Freaks of Convicts and Unruly Tramps.

A squad of six convicts working on the Augusta & Chattanooga Railway, near Augusta, Ga., overpowered and disarmed their guard yesterday, imprisoned two trustys in a hole just dug, and with picks and shovels triumphantly marched into the adjoining woods and escaped.

A telegram from Philadelphia says: The tramps in the Lancaster County (Pa.) workhouse, who recently struck for roast beef and were put in irons as a result, are a villainous set. On Saturday night at midnight the Irish tramps, aided by a few English and American brothers, began a terrible attack on their German associates, some of whom were severely punished. Nightwatchman Shaub ran in among them and discharged a number of shots from his pistol before the attacking party retreated to the old building in the workhouse yard, which they call their fort. Officer Shaub was considerably cut and bruised about the face and head. The tramps are quiet to-day, but there is no certainty as to how long they will remain so.

Manitoba Weather and Wheat.

A wheat buyer just in from a trip throughout the Province says that the country is as badly off as Winnipeg and its vicinity for snow. Sometimes by leaving the beaten track a little sleighing can be obtained; but generally speaking the country roads afford neither decent sleighing nor waggoning. This greatly affected the grain market. Asked whether the output this year would equal last, he said it was a question on which the buyers themselves could not agree. Two of the leading buyers of the city have a wager up, the one that the amount exported this year will surpass that of last yer, which amounted to about 3,500,000 bushels, the other that it will not equal it. It is estimated that so far about two-thirds of the grain has been marketed. —Winnipeg Free Press.

Not long ago a lot of chests of tea were seized in San Francisco on their arrival from China, and in the chests were found 3,003 five-tael boxes of opium and 456 pounds of partially prepared opium. This was sold at auction a week ago and fetched over $25,000.

A fresh detachment of the Salvation Army, consisting of two men and two women, arrived at Quebec Saturday and commenced services on Sunday.

CURIOUS FIGURES.

Republican and Royal Rulers in Octaves.

The following numerical collection of those who have been Presidents and Vice-presidents of the United States is quoted from "Bayne's Chronology:"

1. Washington-Adams.	1. Van Buren-R M. Johnson.
2. Adams-Jefferson.	2. Harrison-Tyler.
3 Jefferson-Burr-Clinton.	3. Polk-Dallas.
4. Madison-Clinton-Gerry	4. Pierce-King.
5. Monroe-Tompkins	5. Pierce-King.
6. J. Q. Adams-Calhoun.	6. Buchanan-Breckinridge.
7. Jackson-Calhoun-Van Buren.	7. Lincoln-Hamlin-Johnson.
	1. Grant-Colfax-Wilson.
	2. Hayes-Wheeler.
	3. Garfield-Arthur.
	4. Cleveland-Hendricks.

This arrangement makes each series of seven a chapter by itself, with the critical points on the odd numbers. If this is in accordance with musical rules, it would follow that every seven should indicate a similar harmony. For example: John Adams to Van Buren; John Q. Adams to Pierce; and, as an octave, Cleveland would follow Fillmore—in which event it is rather singular that both should hail from the city of Buffalo, N.Y.

Of course it may be a mere coincidence without another illustration. Yet, admitting the musical rule, there may be good reason to believe that one administration does reflect another, both as to men and measures. The transition from Mr. Lincoln to Gen. Hayes, and from the latter to Mr. Cleveland, was evidently a natural continuation. On the other hand, Buchanan led the way to Grant, and the latter to Garfield. Harrison-Tyler presupposed Taylor-Filmore, and with a like fatality, extending even to Cleveland-Hendricks.

The tendency to return to the original starting point has been demonstrated over and over again in the history of every nation, in process of which the original class of men reappear and often from the old localities. Thus, it would be no surprise to find the octave to Franklin Pierce in New Hampshire—a man, perhaps his opposite—a man, instead of catering to old prejudices, may seek to educate the Southern mind out of them. But should the Vice-President be taken from Alabama, as Mr. King was, it might be well to consider the probabilities in his case, for while nothing is more certain than death and taxation, yet a man intended for high position should be strong enough to bear the strain of it.

The same peculiarity is seen in the order of the British monarchy. The Stuart dynasty came to grief on the seventh James (James II. of England). But lest that should be regarded as an old superstition, let us go backward from Queen Victoria, thus:

1. Victoria.	William III and Mary	Mary.
2. William IV.	James II.	Edward VI.
3. George IV.	Charles II.	Henry VIII.
4. George III.	Cromwell.	Henry VII. (Tudor)
5. George II.	Charles I.	Richard III.
6. George I.	James I.	Edward V.
7 Queen Anne.	Elizabeth.	Edward IV.

This is not regular historical division, for it is plain that Cromwell was the octave of Henry VIII. Nevertheless, there are other octaves not less definite. For example, from Bloody Mary to William and Mary, and from the latter to Victoria, who has thus the misfortune to inherit the bitterness of the conquest of Ireland under William of Orange, as well as the pledge of a Protestant succession consequent upon the revolution of 1688. It would follow that another revolution is at hand, or has actually occurred, and this would be a remarkable commentary upon the law of musical harmony were it not an actual and active force in nature, subduing all things unto itself.—Boston Transcript.

About Rats.

My wife tells me that the hired girl tells her that she saw a rat stick his tail in a bottle of California cherries preserved in heavy syrup. After the tail came out several rats licked it. The Kalamazoo story goes that the rats got the eggs up a long pair of stairs in the following way: A small rat hugged the egg with all fours. The expedition then took hold of his tail and he was pulled up the staircase. The Chicago fall and winter fashion is to suck the egg downstairs and wear the shell up to bed for a nightcap. Will any one tell me why a rat that could get into my house through an inch auger-hole will bite off from the side of my house a hole the size of a wash-boiler? I tried tar the other day. I heard, some ten years ago, that tar was good for the scalp. Next I heard it was good for rats. It is. It appears to make them happier. They will not enter a wooden trap. As the store clerk would say, the wooden trap was not popular with them. But the wire "fixing" that goes through their gills as they come through the hole seems to be an invention of considerable danger to rats. The real way to catch them, though, is in the cage. I have seen seven in one cage, all caught between midnight and morning. Nine years ago I poisoned all the rats in my block. They died under my back parlor floor. This regrettable episode has caused me to join the Cruelty to Animals Society, and I take a far more merciful view of the rat question. The life of a rat is a sacred thing to me, so far as poison is concerned —Chicago Evening Journal.

The Storm in England.

A London cable says: The British telegraph service, which suffered so severely from the storm of Saturday, the 26th ult., has not yet been completely restored to working order The destruction of wires was the most serious that has occurred since the Government acquired the service sixteen years ago. The strongest poles were in many cases dragged out of the ground and hurled over hedges into adjacent fields. The Great Western Railway Company is among the heaviest sufferers; the interruption to the wires along its line is general.

Over 300 Royal Engineers are assisting the post office authorities and the railway companies in the restoration of the system. The lines are now open to Beachyhead and Lowestoft, by which communication has been resumed with France, Germany, Holland and Belgium, and the Submarine Company's wires have been improved. The total damage is unknown; but it must amount to many thousand pounds.

Father, you seem to forget that you were a young gentleman yourself once."

Special Religious Services.

Special religious services are being held in the Methodist church here every night in the week except Saturday. On Sunday evening last Rev. Mr. Ayers preached a stirring sermon, his remarks being based upon the cleansing of the leprosy of the distinguished Syrian commander, Naaman. At the close five persons stood up in the congregation for prayer. A rousing and very interesting prayer meeting followed. The special services will be continued all this week and perhaps longer.

SUDDEN DEATH!

The Sad and Sudden Demise of Mr. Archibald Elliott.

Rarely have we taken up the pen with feelings of more profound sorrow than at this moment, when it is our sad lot to chronicle the death of one of the most gifted of our county agriculturists—Mr. Archibald Elliott, of Artemesia. The news of his untimely and sudden demise was brought to Flesherton on Saturday morning last, and we are safe in saying that it is many months since our townspeople have received such a severe shock. A great many could scarcely bring themselves to believe the report was correct, until the sad tidings were at length confirmed beyond the shadow of doubt, when the expressions of sorrow and sympathy were universal.

As nearly as can be learned at time of writing, the facts in connection with the demise of Mr. Elliott are as follows:—He was in Markdale on Thursday. He appeared to be in his usual good health. Suddenly, some time in the afternoon, he fell in a deathlike swoon or faint being restored to consciousness, sympathising acquaintances tenderly placed him in a vehicle for the purpose of bringing him to the earthly home he was destined nevermore to see in this life. But a short space of the distance between the village and his home had been travelled when Mr. Elliott again became unconscious. Not deeming it prudent to continue the journey under such distressing circumstances, the dying man was carefully brought to the residence of his brother in-law, Mr. Walker, on the outskirts of the village. Dr. Sproule was then hastily summoned, and, arriving shortly afterwards, made an examination, when he informed the patient that if he had any affairs to settle they should be attended to as soon as possible, for he had only a short time to live. The dying man then summoned the members of his household to his bedside, and about midnight on Friday, Jan. 14th,—some thirty hours after the first severe attack of illness—he passed quietly away to his eternal rest. On Sunday afternoon last the remains of deceased were borne to the church of England cemetery, Markdale, and lowered to their last resting place. The obsequies were conducted by the Orange brotherhood—of which deceased was a very highly esteemed member—Rev. Mr. Ward officiating. Over one hundred Orangemen were present. The funeral cortege was the largest ever seen in this section of the country, and was proceeded by the Flesherton Band, which played the "Dead March in Saul."

The late Mr. Elliott was for many years a most energetic and intelligent representative of Ward No. 2 at Artemesia County Council Board. As a public speaker he had few equals in the county—indeed we have known M. P. P's. who were not to be compared with him for an instant in real oratorical abilities. He was neither wordy or violent in declamation; but presented his thoughts on the various topics briefly and clearly: and although uttered in calm, almost measured, tones, they possessed much force. Although we had not a close acquaintance with him, we believe deceased was a gentlemen of generous impulses and fired with a laudable ambition to benefit his follow-men wherever and whenever possible. We also believe that he was a sincere and earnest Christian—one of those kind of men who believe—and live up to their belief—that

"Religion is the life: and
The life of religion is to do good."

He died in the prime of life. From all appearances, the ordinary observer would have said his chances to attain unto a ripe old age were good. On Thursday he seemed to be in good health. On Friday he was dead. As he was treated for heart disease many years ago, it is probable this was the cause of his lamentably early and sudden death. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death."

A BLASPHEMER'S WISH.

A Man Curses His Creator and Hopes that God Will Paralyze Him, When His Desire is at Once Gratified.

A Douglas, Ga., despatch says: "I hope that God may paralyze me," were the words spoken by William Burklett. At once his hands dropped to his side, his legs refused to move, and his eyes rolled wildly around. His prayer was answered, and he stood paralyzed on the spot where, but a few moments before, he was a magnificent type of physical manhood. He tried to speak, but his tongue would not move. Half a dozen men who were present were rendered motionless by the evident visitation of the hand of God. When they recovered self-possession they tenderly moved the afflicted man to his residence, a half mile distant. When Miss Rhody Burklett saw the plight in which her father was brought home she screamed and fainted, and died a few days after. For many years Mr. Burklett had been the ferryman at the Hankinsville road crossing of the Ocmulgee river. He was of giant physique, with long gray locks, and became especially noted because of the brace of revolvers which he kept strapped to his waist. He was a great hunter and, the ferry being in the midst of a swamp, he was convenient to an abundance of game. From those who lived around him it is learned that he was very profane whenever he sighted game and was called away from it by alarm from the ferry. He would pour out such a volley of oaths as would make the flesh of ordinary men crawl. It was in one of these profane spells that he cursed his Creator and wound up with the expression above quoted. The news soon spread through the county, and scores of people called to see the victim. He was at first completely prostrated, but subsequently was enabled to take a few steps, when he would fall. When spoken to he replies in an inarticulate mumble, and acts in a most idiotic manner. The physicians can ascribe no natural cause for his affliction, but admit it is a visitation of God. The preachers in the neighborhood have used the incident in their sermons with great effect.

DID HE "DIE" FOR THE INSURANCE?

An Interesting Case for Members of Friendly Societies.

(Toronto World.)

Probably the most interesting case to be tried at the forthcoming York Assizes is that of the heirs-at-law of Samuel Dunseath against the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Dunseath was a member of the Order, living in the neighborhood of Orangeville. Early in January, 1886, he left home, ostensibly for Dakota, having previously insured his life for $20,000, distributed among several companies. On January 15th Dunseath, with two companions, boarded the ferry steamer Victoria at Windsor and crossed to Detroit. When the boat reached its dock the men did not land with the other passengers, and a minute after the crowd was ashore Dunseath's companions raised the alarm that he had fallen overboard. They say that he was sick and while retching fell over the rail. Dunseath's friends gave their names as James Carson and Gallagher. They did not seem to be very anxious about recovering the body, and after crossing to Windsor the two disappeared. The Detroit police and ferry authorities looked the case up and satisfied themselves that it was a hoax. Nothing has since been seen of Dunseath's body, although diligent search was made for it. The A.O.U.W. Order now resist payment of the $2,000 due to the heirs of deceased members on the ground that Dunseath is not really dead, but that his disappearance is part of a scheme to obtain the money under false pretences. The insurance companies will also contest the claims of the heirs-at-law. Witnesses will be brought from Windsor and Detroit.

A CHEAP WIFE.

Inquiries Into a Murder Case Disclose a Business Transaction.

A Hartford, Conn., despatch says: Letters written by Mrs. Julia Lynch to William Warner, who shot her in cold blood at her mother's house in Newton on Thursday, December 23rd, have been made public. They show that Warner and Mrs. Lynch used to meet at Mrs. Fred. Lovejoy's in Bridgeport, where the plan for separating from her husband so as to marry Warner was matured. She seems to have been very jealous of his attentions to other women and reproves him for his conduct in this particular. She also dwells on the alms she received from her husband, and says his ill-usage caused her to hate him. This was found among Warner's papers:

"Dec. 30, 1885.

"This is to certify that I sell my wife, Ella Lynch, with my free will to Wm. H. Rowell, jun., for the sum of 10 cents.

"JAMES LYNCH.

"Witness, George W. Peet, Stepheny, Conn."

Lynch is the husband of the woman whom Warner murdered.

Death of the Living Skeleton.

A Chicago despatch says: Isaac Sprague, the "Living Skeleton," died here yesterday. He was born in Bridgewater, Mass., and was quite healthy until his twelfth year, when he caught a cramp while swimming, fell sick, and lost flesh, until he weighed only forty-six pounds. Barnum took him all over the United States, Canada and England. He was married and the father of three robust children.

Praying for Her Recovery.

A Chicago, Ill., telegram says: Farwell Hall was crowded to-day by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, who, led by Miss Frances E. Willard, prayed earnestly for the recovery of Mrs. Carse, the President of the Union, who is lying dangerously ill at her home on the West Side.

A DREADFUL CONFESSION.

How One Young Man Murdered and Chopped up the Body of Another Young Man.

A last (Thursday) night's Boston despatch says: Edward Newlin, arrested in Boston in connection with the Lexington murder, yesterday morning made a full confession. Newlin killed young Codman at 3 o'clock Tuesday morning by stabbing him in the back of the neck with a carving knife. The deed was done in Codman's own stable. Later in the day he cut the clothes off the body, chopping off the left leg and right arm, and started with the corpse in his pung for the country. At the spot in Lexington where the head and arm were found he dropped the head in the middle of the road and threw the arm out. He returned to Somerville at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning. Newlin states that after driving a while he began to realize the enormity of his crime and became frightened. His fears worked so much upon him that when he came to a lonely part of the road and was free from observation he took the body out of the pung, and, half frenzied by fear, seized his axe, chopped the head off, and mashed the face of the dead man until he thought it was unrecognizable. He then threw the head and arm over the wall, returned to the road, lifted the body into the pung and started again. After driving about a mile and a half he again alighted, and taking the body threw it in the shrubbery where it was found. Evidences of the crime were found when the police searched the stable. Behind a closet was found a box containing a bloody mass of flesh and gore. The murderer, James Edward Newlin, is a handsome young fellow, a little over 17 years old, and is very intelligent looking. He is one of four brothers who reside in Somerville. While nothing really bad is known of the boys, they have the reputation of being hot-blooded and wild, the father of the family, it is stated, being himself in a penitentiary in the provinces.

DEATH WAS HER BRIDEGROOM.

Sudden Demise of a Bride Elect who Saw Her Dead Body in a Dream.

A Pittsburgh, Pa., despatch says: The sudden death of Miss Fannie Barckley, of Bedford avenue, after a brief illness, and while preparations were going rapidly forward for her approaching marriage to a well known young business man of this city, presents a case in which death was foreshadowed or caused by a dream. About six weeks ago Miss Barckley had a dream, in which she saw her dead body laid out in a beautiful casket, amid flowers, and surrounded by her sorrowing friends. This dream she solemnly narrated to her father and mother, and said that it was a warning that she would soon die. At the time she was in the best of health and looking forward with happy anticipations to her wedding day, which was not far distant. The belief inspired by the dream seemed to grow upon her, and, notwithstanding the efforts of friends, she seemed unable to shake it off. About a week ago she was taken ill, and then declared that it was her last sickness, although it was not known that her illness was of a serious character. Whether it was brain fever or typhoid fever which caused her death seems to be a question of doubt, but during all her illness she refused to be encouraged and said that she would surely die. She died on Tuesday, and to-day her remains were laid away in Allegheny Cemetery.

TERRIBLE MUTILATION OF A BODY.

Discovery of the Remains of a Murdered Man Scattered on a Farm.

A Boston, Mass., despatch says: A bundle of bloody clothing was found on Tuesday in Lexington. Yesterday farmer Brooks discovered near the place the head of a man which had been severed from the body, and near it other portions of a body covered by snow. The head was gashed and distorted by terrible wounds. It had evidently been chopped from the body with a dull axe. About a mile from where the head and arm were found the investigators discovered in a deep gully a mutilated trunk. It was naked, and deep cuts on the hip and leg indicated the intention of the murderers to sever the left limb as they had the right, which had been rudely chopped off at the thigh. The features were those of a hard-working man. The Somerville Police have received information which indicates that the disfigured remains are those of George A. Codman. Codman was a young unmarried man, and carried on a milk business in Somerville. There is little doubt that the victim was killed by a terrible blow on the back of the neck with an axe and then chopped to pieces as found. The right leg, which was hacked off, has not yet been discovered.

The Winnipeg Mayoralty.

A Winnipeg telegram says: The official declaration of the mayoralty re-count was made to-day, giving Jones the seat with a majority of five. There is a good deal of trouble here over the settlement of disputes arising out of bets on the contest. Many bets were paid on the returning-officer's decision, which was in favor of Mr. Pearson, but now that the County Judge has counted Mr. Jones in the supporters of the latter are demanding the money. The Pearson men say that so far as bets are concerned the declaration of the returning-officer is final.

A Prairie Snow Boat.

A Grand Forks, Dak., despatch says: A party of pleasure seekers left the city for a trip over the prairie in a snow boat, invented by Dr. H. W. Wheeler. The boat will accommodate twenty persons, and is comfortably fitted out and wonderfully constructed. They started out from North Third street, and in less than one hour had reached a village twenty-one miles out. They claim that in a good wind it will make thirty miles per hour.

ANOINTING WITH OIL,

Public Faith Healing Convention Giving Practical Demonstrations of the Work.

A Reading, Pa., despatch says: Very odd and novel scenes were witnessed here to-night at a public healing meeting held by the Union Christian Convention in Faith Chapel of the Mennonite Brethren. Rev. Dr. Thomas Anderson, during the day, publicly announced that all the sick in Reading, who could possibly venture out through the snow storm, should come and be publicly healed by faith. In answer to this a large number of believers filled the chapel. Dr. Anderson emphatically proclaimed that when the Lord said anything He meant it, and he quoted the Scriptural passage: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the Church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

Rev. F. L. Haas, of Philadelphia, conducted the faith cure meeting. He said: "We place the hand on the head in this way and anoint the person with oil in the name of the Lord and pray over him. We can quote many passages of Scripture to show faith cures, and we can also point to living examples. Last week a person in Wilmington was cured of an abscess of the heart. A woman in Philadelphia who had a complication of diseases nine years, and was treated by nine doctors without any benefit, was cured instantaneously four years ago, and she is now as stout and hearty as any woman living. We prayed over her an hour and ten minutes, when the power came down and struck her on the head, and passed through her body and all her limbs and healed her immediately."

Quite a number were publicly anointed with oil to-night and were prayed over, and the clergymen say the meeting was very successful.

A PERILOUS CRUISE

Twenty-Three Miles Down the Ohio on a Cake of Ice.

A Louisville, Ky., telegram says: John Grigsby, the 19-year-old son of E. H. Grigsby, went skating last evening with a party of friends on the Ohio River at Westport, a town about twenty-five miles up the river from here. He ventured too near the outer edge of the ice, when a great cracking was heard, and the portion upon which he was standing broke loose and floated away. It was impossible for a skiff to be pushed into the great, grinding cakes. His companions ran and informed Mr. Grigsby of his perilous position. The latter immediately saddled a horse and overtook the young man about three miles down the river. The cake was only about one hundred yards from the shore. Mr. Grigsby followed it down to within two miles of this city, a distance of twenty-three miles, when he gave two fishermen $10 each to go out in a skiff and rescue the boy. With much difficulty they did so and brought the young man safe to shore. He was almost frozen and nearly scared to death.

The mayoralty re-count was commenced to-day before Judge Ardagh, but was not finished. Mr. Pearson's majority of six has been reduced to three so far.

The recount of the votes cast in the Mayoralty contest closed this morning. The result converts Ald. Pearson's supposed majority of six into a minority of five. Judge Ardagh declared Ald. Jones elected, and there is great rejoicing among the friends of the latter. The case may still go to a higher court.

Turned Out of Doors in Midwinter.

A Westerly, R. I., despatch says: Many of the strikers at the Moss Manufacturing Company's works are being turned out of the tenements owned by the company. W. C. King, a weaver, who did not strike, has also been turned out of his tenement because, according to his story, he refused to turn his boy, who is a Knight of Labor, out of his home. He says he has spent much money and time beautifying the house, and has always been faithful to the interests of the company. There is a great deal of suffering among the evicted tenants. The Whipple family was turned out in the midst of a blinding snowstorm, and old Mr. Whipple, who is dying with consumption, was carried out to the waggon in a blanket. Public sentiment does not justify the company's treatment of its striking workmen.

Competition in Wheat.

A Paris cable says: M. Lockroy, Minister of Commerce, announces that wheat of excellent quality and superior weight has been exported for the first time by Russia from the Caucusus. Large cargoes of this wheat, M. Lockroy says, have been sent to Odessa across the Black Sea from the ports of Potia and Batoum, destined for the Adriatic and the English Channel.

A Melbourne cable says: The wheat harvest in Victoria is 12,000,000 bushels, an average of 12 bushels per acre. The exportable excess is 150,000 tons, or 60,000 tons over that of the preceding year.

BATTLING WITH THE WAVES.

Twenty-Seven of a Crew and Their Would be Rescuers Engulphed in the Angry Billows—Thrilling Scene at a Shipwreck.

A last Saturday night's Norfolk, Va., despatch says: A ship was driven on the Virginia coast at 2 o'clock this morning near the Little Island Life-Saving Station, fourteen miles south of Cape Henry. Not less than twenty, and probably more, lives were lost, among them five life-saving men, who, in the discharge of their duty, were drowned. The morning was bitterly cold and a blinding snowstorm prevailed, with the wind blowing a gale from the northeast. During a lull in the storm the life-saving patrol from Little Island Life-Saving Station sighted a large ship stranded on the bar about eight hundred yards from the shore. In a little while crews from the Little Island and Dam Neck Stations, with life-boats and apparatus, were abreast of the wreck, and the boom of a mortar announced that a line had been shot out to the ill-fated vessel. The shot was unsuccessful, and a second one fired with like results. After firing six unsuccessful shots the life-saving men determined to brave the furious sea and the death which seemed certain to await their venture. The men gave way with a will, and in a moment both boats were breasting the furious waves. They reached the ship in safety, and five of the ship's crew were taken in a lifeboat and ten in a ship's boat which was launched for the purpose. The boats were headed for the shore and not a word was spoken, for each man realized the awful peril which surrounded them. With a steady pull the two boats were making good headway for shore, when a wave of great power struck both boats, capsizing them instantly and pitching their twenty-two occupants into the boiling sea. Then began a desperate struggle for life, and with many of the men it was a prolonged one The horrified life-savers on the beach were powerless to assist their drowning comrades or the unfortunate strangers. The drowning men were carried southward by the seas, and some of them were washed ashore. As they came within reach they were picked up, and endeavors were made to revive them, which in two instances were successful, although one of the two is badly injured. The vessel is the German ship Elizabeth, Capt. Halberstadt, from Hamburg to Baltimor , and not one of her crew survives her wreck. Her cargo is unknown, as the high seas have thus far prevented any attempt to reach her. It is thought she is leaking badly, and at sunset her masts were thought to be giving way. Of the life-saving crew the following were lost: Able Belanza, captain of No. 4, known as Little Island; J. W. Land, same station; Geo. W. Stone, same; J. A. Belanza, of Dam Neck Station, and the brother of Abel; Joseph Spartley, of Dam Neck. John Etheridge and Frank Belfore, of No. 4 Station, were washed ashore and resuscitated, but Etheridge is so badly injured that it is thought he cannot survive.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. — Latest particulars from the wreck of the ship Elizabeth put the number of the crew at 22 instead of 15, not a man of whom was saved. This fact is learned from the two men of the life-saving crew who survive, and who recovered consciousness to-day. The bodies of the five men of the life-saving crew and four of the ship's crew, which were recovered yesterday, were in life-preservers, and three more of the ship's crew without life-preservers were picked up lower down the coast this morning. A body, which has been identified as that of the captain, is among those recovered. This evening the masts of the ship were still standing, though the sea was breaking over her violently.

A Great Night at Sandringham.

A King's Lynn, Norfolk, cablegram says: The Prince of Wales' great dramatic fete has just ended. It presented a fair turn of the tables. His Royal Highness often visited the Criterion Theatre to see Charles Wyndham. Now Charles Wyndham has visited Sandringham with his whole company, working staff and scenery and performed in the play of "David Garrick." The great hall of the Prince's country seat, which has been so often described as overlooking three hundred acres of park, had been transformed by Mr. Wyndham into a theatre, with stall chairs and a stage three feet high. The Criterion orchestra was in an adjoining corridor. In an extemporized private box sat the royalties. The Prince had been entertaining a large company of celebrities for the whole week. Many had been specially invited for the evening, the auditors numbering about two hundred. When the curtain rose at the appointed time—two hours before midnight—the scene of magnificent toilets in the audience of celebrities must have to the performers outdazzled the brilliancy of the scenery surrounding them. The royal box was distinguished by crimson velvet chairs. Then came rows of chairs upholstered in blue. Next were long rows of fauteuils. The audience was generally seated when General Sir Dighton Probyn, Comptroller of the Household, entered as herald, followed by members of the royal family. The Princess of Wales walked in in a stately manner, dressed in a ruby velvet robe and wearing a diamond tiara. With her was the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), who wore white satin and pearls. The two young Princesses, daughters of the host and hostess, followed, both wearing pale blue silk. At the rear of the hall stood many of the servants, presenting a background of little white muslin caps worn by the women, alternating with the scarlet livery of the men retainers. All the guests stood until the Prince was seated. He wore the usual evening dress, but sported decorations.

After the close of the play, the orchestra having given the national anthem, Wyndham and the principal performers mingled with the audience, receiving the congratulations of the Prince and his guests. Then came cold drives through snow a foot deep to the Globe Hotel in this village—Lynn-Regis—where once Eugene Aram walked to his doom.

Two young men were hunting in Shade Township, Pa., when a deer jumped up in front of them and made for a narrow opening in a ledge of rocks. Here it paused long enough for one of the boys to grab it by the hind legs and then the other came up and killed it.

AN EXTRAORDINARY SECT.

How Many Persons Were Duped into Supporting a Couple of Adventurers.

A London cablegram says: A serious dispute took place this week among a remarkable sect of religious fanatics who have their headquarters at Rochester, a city midway between Canterbury and London, which is famed for its cathedral and ruined castle. It was at Rochester, by the bye, where Henry VIII., of polygamous memory, met his fourth bride, the unloved Ann of Cleves, and it was at Rochester, also, that the immortal Mr. Pickwick fought his memorable duel. The sect above mentioned call themselves the new and latter "House of Israel," and they claim to be the remnant of the people of Israel, the 14,400 spoken of in the book of Revelation. The doctrine which they teach is that the members of the sect never die in the ordinary sense of the term, but that the body is preserved alive, and after being ultimately cleansed of blood, passes into the enjoyment of a first resurrection. They have had large additions to their membership, and have organized a considerable fund for the building of an immense temple on Chatham Hill. The final cost of this was to amount to $250,000, and $80,000 of this has already been raised and spent on the building. Contributions to the fund have been coming in at the rate of $50,000 per annum, and the congregation was in a highly prosperous condition. The leader was one Jezreel, who, strange to relate, died the other day in the ordinary fashion. This naturally upset a good many of his followers, and though his wife, upon whom the mantle of her husband fell, attempted various explanations of his sudden and unexpected departure for another world, there was a large contingent who could not be convinced that there was a mistake somewhere. Mme. Jezreel then proceeded to expel these heretics from the sect on the ground that they were not pillars of the Church. The quarrel thus made public has revealed much misery in many families at Rochester, where fathers, mothers and children had been misled and led astray by this most ridiculous of absurdities. One man of some prominence in the community deserted his wife and children and threw up a good position to join the sect, in connection with which he submitted himself to all sorts of humiliating offices. Jezreel appears to have been a sort of Brigham Young, except in the matter of marriage, and as he had the handling of all the moneys paid in, he and his wife looked upon it as a lucky venture. It is almost beyond belief that such a considerable number of men and women could be found in England, outside of lunatic asylums, to be thus duped.

THE INFANTA LANDS IN A DITCH,

And all Spain Grows Hysterical Over the Event.

A Madrid cable says: For several hours on Saturday night the city was excited over sensational reports that the Infanta Isabella, sister of the late King Alfonso, had been kidnapped and killed. The infanta had gone out in a carriage to follow the royal huntsmen in the Grado. She occupied her carriage alone, and was escorted by three aides. In a remote part of the great park the carriage broke down, throwing the infanta into a ditch. She was not hurt, although it was feared she was. It was deemed prudent for her to remain at the scene of the accident until assistance could be procured, and for this a lackey was despatched. Much time was lost. In the meantime the huntsmen had gone on a great distance before they missed their royal mistress, and when they discovered she was no longer with them they became greatly frightened and started a general alarm and began a noisy search. The prolonged absence of the infanta from the castle caused uneasiness there, and finally the police and troops were sent out in search of her. They heard the report which had been scattered by the frightened huntsmen and the whole country was subjected to a scouring, alarming the people and producing the most sensational stories. The lackey sent for assistance was slow and it was 10 o'clock at night before the royal carriage was found and the truth heralded about town. What added to the general consternation during the search for the infanta was the recollection of the recent conspiracy attributed to stock gamblers for stealing the royal babe and leaving the throne without an heir.

FOR THE GOVERNOR.

Alleged Negotiations to Provide His Excellency With a Montreal Residence.

A Montreal despatch says: At a meeting of the City Council this afternoon Ald. White moved that a committee be appointed to consider the advisability of procuring a permanent residence for the Governor-General and hoped that His Excellency would be induced to spend two or three months of the year here. The Chairman of the Finance Committee said that all the city could do would be to give the site on the mountain brow near the mansion of Sir H. Allan and let the citizens or the Government erect the mansion. It was found that an offer had been made for the residence of Mr. Alex. Buntin on Sherbrooke street. Upon that gentleman being questioned by a reporter he admitted that he had been approached by parties who he believed represented the Government and who had made an offer for his house. They want it furnished, he said, and they can get it, provided they give my price, which is in the vicinity of $80,000. It has been rumored that His Excellency had been offered and accepted the residence of H. M. Allan, but Mr. Allan states there is no truth in the story.

We Owe No Man a Dollar.

Oh, do not envy, my own dear wife,
The wealth of our next door neighbor,
But bid me still be stout of heart,
And cheerfully follow my labor.
You must know, the last of those little debts
That have been our lingering sorrow
Is paid this night! So we'll both go forth
And shake hands with the world to-morrow!
Oh, the debtor is but a shame faced dog,
With the creditor's name on his collar;
While I am a king and you a queen,
For we owe no man a dollar!

Our neighbor you saw in his coach to-day,
With his wife and his flaunting daughter,
While we sat down, at our coverless board,
To a crust and a cup of water.
I saw that the tear drop stood in your eye,
Though you tried your best to conceal it;
I know that the contrast reached your heart,
And I could not help but feel it;
But knowing now, that our scanty fare
Has freed my neck from the collar,
You'll join in my laugh, and help me shout
That we owe no man a dollar!

This neighbor, whose show has dazzled your eyes,
In fact, is a wretched debtor;
I pity him oft, from my very heart,
And I wish that his lot were better.
Why, the man is the veriest slave alive,
For his dashing wife and daughter
Will live in style, though ruin should come,
So he goes like a lamb to the slaughter.
But he feels it the tighter every day,
That terrible debtor's collar;
Oh, what would he give could he say with us
That he owed no man a dollar!

You seem amazed, but I'll tell you more,
Within two hours I met him
Sneaking along with a frightened air,
As if a fiend had beset him.
Yet he fled from a very worthy man,
Whom I met with the grandest pleasure;
Whom I called by name and forced to stop,
Though he said he was not at leisure.
He held my last note, so I held him fast,
Till he freed my neck from the collar,
Then I shook his hand as I proudly said:
"Now, I owe no man a dollar!"

Ah! now you smile, for you feel the force
Of the truths I've been repeating;
I knew that a downright honest heart
In that gentle breast was beating!
To-morrow I'll rise with a giant's strength
To follow my daily labor;
But ere we sleep let us humbly pray
For our wretched next door neighbor;
And we pray for the time when all shall be free
From the weight of the debtor's collar;
When the poorest will lift his voice and cry:
"Now, I owe no man a dollar!"

Kissing in Church.

Worshippers at the German Baptist Church on Fourteenth street, between First and Second avenues, were treated to a sensation yesterday morning. In the middle of the service a tall, slender, sallow-faced man of about 30 years rose in a pew in the centre aisle, clasped a young lady who sat next him by the waist, drew her face to his, and frantically embraced her. They were the only occupants of that pew. Other members of the congregation looked on amazed and inactive. The young lady screamed, but the man, not relaxing his grasp in the least, sent forth a succession of earsplitting shouts. The pastor, Rev. G. A. Schulte, who had suspended his sermon at the first outcry, left the pulpit and came down the aisle. When he tried to take the young man out of the pew he found he had a big contract on his hands. Others came to his assistance, and the lady was released. She immediately fainted from excitement and terror.

The pastor walked the young man up and down the aisle, exhorting him in soothing tones to calm himself. This treatment was unsuccessful, the man becoming more violent each moment. He was taken to the Seventeenth precinct station house on a stretcher, but when he got there it took several policemen to hold him down. He was evidently dangerously insane, and was sent to Bellevue hospital, where the surgeons consigned him to a padded cell.

Dr. Schulte, pastor of the church, says the young man has been a regular attendant there for several years. He is Cornelius Hendrickson, a clerk out of employment, living with a relative at No. 138 Essex street. His mind has been affected for a number of years, softening of the brain having resulted from an old sickness. He was hitherto mild and harmless in his demeanor. He was from home all Christmas Day and attended the Christmas night service at the church. Nothing out of the way was then observable in his conduct.—New York Star.

After They Found Out.

A Detroiter who was driving out on the Holden road the other day came to a spot where the snow was badly drifted on each side of the track just as a woman driving a horse and "pung" entered the other end of the cut. As they both held to the road their horses soon came head on and stopped.

"Why didn't you turn out?" shouted the man.

"Why didn't you?" replied the woman.

"I've got seven miles to drive, but I'll stay here all winter before I'll turn out!"

"And I've got five dozen eggs here, and I'll let them freeze as hard as rocks before I'll give an inch!"

The man dropped the lines, lighted a cigar and leaned back on his seat. The woman dropped her lines, lighted her pipe and wrapped the old buffalo robe around her feet. Thus they sat for eight minutes, when the man grew impatient and called:

"What's the price of hogs out your way?"

"Oh, you've got all the pork you want in your sleigh," she replied.

"I'm glad I'm a widower!"

"And I'm glad I'm a widder!"

"Eh? Are you a widow?"

"Sartin, and I own 225 acres of the best land in Greenfield. So you are a widower?"

"Yes'm. Madam, pray excuse me. I'll cheerfully turn out."

"Oh, don't mention it. I'm perfectly willing to haul into the snowbank."

"Ah! madam, allow me to hope that you will overlook my——"

"Oh, certainly. Fine weather ut rather cold. Good-bye."

"Good-bye madam. Wish you a safe journey."—Detroit Free Press.

Peaches and Persimmons.

In the New York market peaches are quoted at "$2 a dozen and very scarce." Among persons of moderate means peaches at that rate are always scarce. There is more solid comfort in a quart of persimmons at 25 cents a quart than in a peck of $2-a-dozen peaches.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

GEN. BOULANGER, French Minister of War, though his popularity is more civil than military, is a cause of uneasiness to Germany. He has taken no step to alarm any one so far. But as he says nothing, while devoting all his energies to the reorganization of the armies of France, his very silence is suspicious and makes his enemies uneasy.

EDITORIAL writers in various parts of the country are making the mistake of calling the recent Chancellor of the English Exchequer Lord Churchill. There is a Lord Churchill in the English peerage, but Lord Randolph Churchill is an entirely different person. Lord Churchill is only 22 and has never held a higher office than a page of honor to the Queen.

One man has broken his leg on it, too.

THE difficulty of sighting rifles in the dark in warfare has been ingeniously overcome by the use of luminous paint. A small luminous bead is clipped on to the rifle over the fore sight and another over the rear sight when used at night in reply to an enemy's fire, forming two luminous sights. The English War Office authorities have had some of these sights under trial for the past six months, and have now given their first order for some.

NOT many years ago the seeds of the cotton boll were thrown away. Now olive oil is made of it that the chemists cannot tell from the best Italian product, save by the freezing test. Oil cake is made from the refuse, and the husk is employed as fuel in the above processes. Even the ashes are made into the finest quality of toilet soap. If cotton isn't king, it is royally connected.

IT is high time to settle the year's outstanding accounts. He is a wise man who opens the new year free of debt. The wisdom of Micawber—not his folly—is most pertinent at present: "Annual income, twenty pounds; annual expenditure, nineteen, nineteen six; result, happiness. Annual income, twenty pounds; annual expenditure, twenty pounds, nought and six; result, misery." If men would live within their incomes the United States and the prisons would see fewer of despairing faces.

THE usefulness of asphalt paper appears to be demonstrated by its constantly multiplying applications. In thin sheets it is found admirably adapted for wrapping silks or other fabrics that need protection from moisture, also for lining cases, packing boxes for pianos, etc., and, rolled up into pipes, for conveying water. Asphalt tubes are but one-fifth the weight of iron, will not rust, and are quite tough and strong; they are simply sheets of paper of a peculiar quality dipped in melted asphalt and then rolled upon a cylinder.

MADAGASCAR, until quite recently a barbarous country, whose dusky inhabitants displayed a taste for cannibalism and human sacrifices, is progressing with giant strides in the acquisition of what we are pleased to term civilization. Queen Ranavalo, having been given to understand that every respectable nation possesses a national debt, has just caused a Malagese loan of $3,000,000 to be floated at Paris, mortgaging the Customs revenue of six of her principal ports as security for the payment of the interest. The French are clever people, for it appears that of the $3,000,000, $2,000,000 are to be handed over to M. Grevy's Government in payment of the war indemnity; another half a million will probably be retained by the Paris financiers as commission and expenses incidental to the issue of the loan, and the National Treasury of Madagascar will obtain the balance—that is, if any remains.

AN interesting account is given by Mr. Richards, superintendent of the motive power of the Boston & Providence Railroad, of a visit made by him to the famous Krupp steel works at Essen. He saw a 10-ton crucible steel casting being poured, and an enormous 70-ton steel casting being very gradually cooled, the outside being warmed with coke fires until the inside has partly solidified, when the block is hammered into shape to form the main piece of an immense gun. The enormous array of furnaces in which the crucibles are heated and the perfect manner in which such a large number of men—in some cases as many as 800—all lift their 80-pound crucibles out of the furnaces and pour them into the mould in rapid succession is described as a wonderful sight. The scrupulous care bestowed upon the minutest detail was a noticeable feature about their manipulation of steel. If, after extended trials, a certain practice or proportion of ingredients has been found to give the best results, that practice is absolutely and exactly adhered to, nothing in the whole range of the vast operations of the establishment being left to mere possibilities.

MATTERS have been so arranged in connection with the restoration of the Scottish Parliament Hall, Edinburgh Castle—the cost of which is to be born by Mr. William Nelson—that the work will now be proceeded with. The building is a work of the fifteenth century—an entry in the Exchequer Rolls giving the date of construction as 1434—and is the same in which kings and nobles deliberated throughout the reigns of the Scottish Jameses and their successors, on to the time when in 1648 Cromwell was entertained there by the Earl of Leven. The works will comprise the cleaning and completion of the handsome hardwood roof, which is almost entire, the removal of the modern "garderobe" excresence on the south front, and the opening out and completion of the large windows on that elevation, where the original rybats are still visible. The private stair leading from the Hall to the kitchen on the lower floor, recently discovered by Major Gore Booth, constructed in the thickness of the west gable, will also be repaired; and it is understood that it is Mr. Nelson's intention to complete the Hall and fit it internally in a manner resembling what its original appearance must have been, so that when finished it will doubtless add much to the attractions of the venerable castle. The Hall, as is known, is at present occupied as a military hospital; but it is understood that an arrangement has been come to, under War Office sanction, whereby military patients from the castle—of whom at present there are only about a dozen—will be received into the Edinburgh Royal Asylum.

Clothes for Princess Beatrice's Baby.

For the exclusive benefit of lady readers, I publish the following details of the layette supplied for the infant prince. The bassinet is wicker, with the usual arched top, much the same as the one used for the Queen herself and her own children. It is covered with white satin, and over this is the finest book muslin, edged with a frilling of the same, bordered with Scotch embroidery worked on the muslin itself, with dots exquisitely embroidered in the centre of each. The under blankets are of the finest thick downy flannel, stitched all round and worked with a monogram that appears on everything, "R. N." (royal nursery), and the crown. The pillows and sheets are bordered with fluted muslin, edged with lace, and crisp bows of thick white satin ribbon are introduced on the bassinet here and there. The basket is of the new three-tier kind, most convenient for use, trimmed exactly to match, with satin and muslin and embroidered frilling. The tiny ivory brushes bear the "R. N." monogram and crown on black lettering on the back; the sponge bags are of white india-rubber cloth, drawn on white satin ribbon, the cushions trimmed with fine embroidery and lace. The bibs tied up in dozens with white satin ribbon, are of muslin completely covered with embroidery and edged with Valenciennes lace, and have the same monogram and crown finely wrought. There is not a space where a pin's point could be inserted that is not covered with embroidery. The lace veils are all of Honiton lace, of large size. The dresses made low, with long skirts, are of the finest muslin, with row upon row, reaching almost to the waist, of lace and work insertion, edged with Valenciennes, with robings down the front, just the same in form as the christening robe in which Her Majesty, as well as many of her own children, were christened. —London Figaro.

A Good Story Revamped.

"A country parson," in encountering a storm the past season in the voyage across the Atlantic, was reminded of the following:

A clergyman was so unfortunate as to be caught in a severe gale in the voyage out. The water was exceedingly rough and the ship persistently buried her nose in the sea. The rolling was constant, and at last the good man got thoroughly frightened. He believed they were destined for a watery grave. He asked the captain if he could not have prayers. The captain took him by the arm and led him down to the forecastle, where the tars were singing and swearing. "There," said he, "when you hear them swearing you may know there is no danger."

He went back feeling better; but the storm increased his alarm. Disconsolate and unassisted, he managed to stagger to the forecastle again. The ancient mariners were swearing as ever. "Mary," he said, as he crawled into his berth, to his sympathetic wife, after tacking across a wet deck, "Mary, thank God they're swearing yet."—Harper's Magazine for January.

Wanted Them at the Old Price.

A very aged man from the southern portion of the county stepped into the county clerk's office on Saturday for the purpose of getting a license to marry for the sixth time in his checkered career.

"What's marriage license worth, Billy?" he asked of Clerk Hill.

"A dollar and a half," replied Mr. Hill.

"That's mighty steep. This is the sixth time I have had occasion to ask this question here, and I have always heretofore got license for $1, and I don't think you ought to raise the price on me in my old age."

"If a man would take six marriage licenses at one time he could get them at reduced rates, but when he takes them at long intervals, like you do, it only amounts to a retail business, and I have to charge retail rates."

Without saying more the old gentleman produced $1.50, and was served with a license with a red seal and blue ribbon.—Dallas News.

He Understood.

"But, father," she protested as the old man ceased speaking, "you do not seem to understand the case."

"Oh, but I do. Yor shall never marry William, even if he is my confidential clerk."

"Father, you——"

"That is all, Helen—say no more."

Four days later she wrote him from Toronto, saying: "Will and I arrived here safely, and were married at once. We have $60,000 of your money. Is all forgiven, or shall we settle down here?"

He telegraphed his forgiveness.—N. Y. Wall Street News.

Precocious Wisdom.

From the earliest age the children of the poor are initiated into the mysteries of pawning, and they look upon it as a recognized feature of every day life, says a London News correspondent. In an infant school in South London the other day the teacher was explaining to the children the parable of the prodigal son.

Said the teacher—And now all the prodigal son's clothes are gone and he has no food. What must he do?

To which a little girl, 3½ years old, immediately responded: "Why, pawn his little gal's boots and fings."

For a Returning Sinner.

Wife—Yes, John.

He reads on it:

'While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.'

"Is it to be hung in the vestibule of the church, my dear?"

"No, John; I'll hang it on the chandelier in the hall."—Harper's Bazar.

While Patti was in Kansas City she visited the "points of interest." These consisted, commented the organ of a rival city, of three rendering establishments and a soap factory.

FASTER THAN THE WIND.

A Runaway Train on a Down Grade—Two Miles Per Minute.

Wm. Tillie, one of the men who were on board the train which met with the recent thrilling accident on the Canadian Pacific Railway, gives a graphic account of the disaster. Station Fields is at the bottom of Kicking Horse Pass grade. The track here ascends the mountain in a grade of four and one-half feet to the hundred for eight miles. Hector Station is at the top of the grade. The steepest part of the grade is about two miles from the top, where it is an inch to a foot. Each train has two engines, a small one going before and a large one behind. The large engine behind prevents any car becoming detached and rushing down the mountain side. As a further precaution there are, in the steepest part of the road, two miles apart, safety switches, which are left open, so that should any cars break loose they run off on to the switch, which slopes gradually up in the opposite direction. It was found necessary to divide the train, and the second section, composed of the second-class car and the baggage car, was being hauled to the top of the mountain when the coupling broke. There was no engine behind them and they went tearing down the mountain side at a fearful speed that was constantly increasing. It was very early in the morning and not yet daylight. There were about twenty passengers in the car. "It went through us like an electric shock," said Mr. Tillie, "when we felt that the train was detached, and every person on board supposed that his end had come. The conductor and brakemen in a second were at the brakes, but unfortunately for us the air-brakes were frozen stiff and the other brakes would not catch. It is impossible to describe the scene. There was hardly time to realize the awfulness of the danger which threatened us. Fear seemed to freeze every pulse. There was not a single cry or shout or any expression of emotion. The pace was terrific. It was like a flash of lightning. I can compare it to nothing else. One or two tried to rise, but the speed was so great that they could not stir off their seats. They seemed drawn to the seats, as a piece of steel to a huge magnet. Only one voice was heard to whisper, in a tone of absolute despair, "hang on," and each clung to his seat as a drowning man clings to a straw. The cars were swaying from side to side with a motion that felt like that of a cradle. It seemed an age, but it was in reality not a minute, from the time that the cars broke loose till they reached the switch upon which we had lain all night. Two miles in one minute! When we reached the switch it was half closed by the snow. Our car ran off on the switch, but the baggage car kept right on the main line. There was a 'crack!' we felt ourselves in mid-air, and then we were lying stunned and wounded in a mass of debris at the bottom of the hill among the rocks and stumps. It was not yet daylight, and darkness added to the horrors of our condition. The car was smashed to atoms."

Every person on board was more or less hurt, but only two died as a result of their injuries.

The Carpet Worm.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press says: "Last year I noticed inquiries innumerable for protection against the buffalo moth or carpet worm. Although my neighbors have suffered from its invasion to the extent of ruined carpets, clothing, etc., I have never, during my twenty years of house-keeping, had a moth of any description, and attribute my immunity entirely to the use of turpentine. After each of my carpets is well swept, it is at once gone over with the following mixture: To three quarts of pure, cold water, add three tablespoonfuls of turpentine. In this thoroughly saturate a sponge, squeeze about two-thirds dry, and go over each breadth separately and in all the corners. As soon as the water becomes soiled take a fresh supply. You will be surprised to see how beautifully it will clean your carpets, besides being one of the best disinfectants. My father, an eminent physician, had this always practiced in his family, and we were never troubled with fevers any more than with moths."

A Cautious Daughter.

Mrs. Peterby—Why did you cut an item out of the paper?

Miss Peterby—Because I want pa and the boys to swear off on New Year's.

Mrs. P—What's the item got to do with it?

Miss P—Its got a great deal to do with it. If they read that whisky is a sure remedy for the cholera they will never draw another sober breath.

Different.

Father (to rapid son)—My father never gave me money to spend for fast horses, opera tickets, late dinners, and the like.

Rapid Son—Oh, yes, but you forget that I come of a more aristocratic family than you did.—Life.

A train on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in charge of a new engineer and a new conductor, came to a place near Fulton, Ill., where several short tracks branched off from the main line. They wanted to go to Fulton, and did not know which track to take, so they hunted up a farmer and inquired.

The Duke of Westminster has sent £500 to a charitable institution in London. As the Duke receives over a million dollars a year in rents, and as the contribution was made up from the proceeds of the shilling entrance fees paid at Eaton Hall by strangers for the privilege of inspecting that new hall, the "Dook" is entitled to great credit for his generosity.

"Is it true that her father is so very wealthy?" said De Jones, referring to the daughter of a Wall street magnate. "I'm not sure, but I guess he must be," replied De Smithe, "for he has already failed three times."

Age cannot stale nor custom wither the infinite variety of Oliver Wendell Holmes' manner of handling the language of compliment. A Boston lady who sent him a bouquet of roses on Christmas received in return the following note: "Many thanks, dear Mrs. P——, for the beautiful roses; and if the gardens were as full of flowers as your heart is of kind feelings they would leave no room for sidewalks."

DIGESTION.

Is It Assisted by Chewing Gum and Sleeping After Meals?

The physiology of digestion, says a writer in "Science," has been so thoroughly investigated of late years that it would seem that there could be very little opportunity for difference of opinion on most of its leading principles, and yet we find that authorities are on some points very much at variance. We are told that nothing can be more prejudicial than the habit of chewing gum, supposed to be so common among school children. The salivary glands are unnaturally excited, and pour forth so much saliva in the act that when food is masticated they are not able to respond as fully as is necessary for the proper insalivation of the food. We are also informed that food should not be eaten just before retiring; that thoroughly refreshing sleep requires perfect repose of all the organs, and that, if we go to sleep with a more or less full stomach, sleep will be disturbed and unsatisfactory. The authorities of Amherst College evidently do not agree with these views. In the instructions which they give to their students to guide them in their gymnastic exercises, after specifying the kind and amount of physical exercise, they recommend sleeping for half an hour after dinner and supper, if possible, and if sleepless at night from brain work to eat a few graham crackers before retiring, to draw the excess of blood from the brain to the stomach. In reference to the practice of chewing gum, this statement is made: Chewing gum daily before eating and between meals increases the flow of saliva, and so aids the digestion of fat making foods. It also directly stimulates the secretion of the digestive juices of the stomach.

It Wasn't Tooth Powder.

I was told yesterday a rather amusing story at the expense of Mark Twain—and the same story is already a standing joke in society. Not long ago the humorist was travelling in the country, and stopped one evening at a house presided over by an elderly woman. He was shown to a room somewhat bare of ornament and furniture, yet slept until morning. When morning came and he rose he became mindful of the fact that, although he had provided himself with a tooth brush, he had forgotten his tooth powder. He consoled himself with the thought that there must be tooth powder lying somewhere about. After a brief search he discovered something in a small box on the mantel which certainly resembled tooth powder. At any rate he used it vigorously on his teeth, and found it satisfactory. When he got down stairs he apologized to this hostess for using her tooth powder. She appeared surprised. "What tooth powder?" she inquired, blandly. "It was on the mantel," Mark replied. "On the mantel?" she repeated. "Yes, in a small box. It was excellent," he declared. "Good gracious!" she ejaculated, "that wasn't tooth powder!" "What was it?" asked Mark, now slightly alarmed. "Why, that was auntie!" said she. It seems that "auntie" had been cremated.—Rochester Post.

"But your daughter married him——"

"Yes; he spends his evenings at the club now."—Omaha World.

DR. JAMISON.

Before the present year has closed the gentleman, whose name is at the head of this article, will have had an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with the good people of Artemesia than he is now. In the meantime it might not be out of place for us to tell our readers what we personally know of the worthy Doctor.

Dr. Jamison lives at Durham, and, although we cannot furnish our readers with his photograph, we can assure them that it is worthy to be placed side by side with those of the truest and best public men in the county of Grey. He is a conservative in politics, but right here let us say that he is a politician of the most liberal and advanced type—advocating what he believes to be in the interests of all, regardless of political complexion, creed or nationality. This was precisely the ground taken by him when one of the most enthusiastic conventions ever assembled in South Grey, unanimously selected him as their standard-bearer for the House of Commons. None could but admire his honest and manly conduct on that occasion; and when he goes to parliament as our representative, it will be with the full consciousness that he is not bound by cast-iron pledges to vote for measures contrary to his honest convictions, simply because they may happen to emanate from the party of his adoption. This is the kind of a representative we want in South Grey; and, alas! that there are not more such men within the borders of our great Dominion.

Dr. Jamison is a gentleman of broad and liberal views, and can speak with intelligence and force on the great and vital public questions of the day. He is young, possesses a large amount of sound vital energy, is well versed in politics, and gives expression to his views in that calm, logical manner, which carries weight with intelligent minds and commands the respect of friend and opponent. In every sense we consider him a man of the people, and one who will use all honest endeavors to promote their best and truest interests, without fear or favor. While he is courteous, kindly and warm in demeanor, he yet preserves that dignity which we all like to see in our public men. He has also enough "back bone" and decision of character to warrant steady and unwavering adherence to right principles, "through good and evil report."

Such a man is the coming representative of South Grey, in the House of Commons—Dr. Jamison.

"THERE IS BALM IN GILEAD."

"The Tories are thankful for small mercies these times. Mowat has not been defeated, on the contrary, he has come back from the people with an increased majority, the Quebec Ministry, having vainly tried to save itself by patching up a coalition, will have to go. Province after province has been swept by the Grits, but yet there is balm in Gilead. The School Trustees of Artemesia and Plattsville have forbidden the use of the Ross Bible in their schools!"—Brampton Times.

Thanks, friend Tye; but we're not greedy in Artemesia, and will generously reserve some of the balm for your own use on the evening of 22nd February next.

For lame, back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

MR. THOMAS ANDREWS.

We have received a letter from the above gentleman, in which he denies most emphatically that he supported Mr. McColman after the second convention. On the contrary, he says he worked faithfully to secure the return of Capt. Rorke. We are glad, and, no doubt our readers are equally pleased to know that Mr. Andrews is in a position to vindicate himself, and shew that he is as loyal as ever to his party. It would be a sorry spectacle indeed to see many of the best men of the party following in the wake of Mr. McColman.

We would publish Mr. Andrews letter in its entirety this week were it not that it came to us in a sealed envelope, and without instructions to insert in the ADVANCE. A post-card from Mr. Andrews is all that is necessary to ensure its insertion in next week's paper.

DOMINION ELECTIONS.

His Excellency the Governor-General has dissolved the Fifth Parliament of Canada. The writs will be issued at once for the forthcoming elections. Nomination day, Feb. 15th next, polling day, Feb. 22nd. The Toronto World, of Monday, says:—

"The dissolution was decided upon at a Cabinet Council on Saturday. The session was a lengthy one, lasting from 2 p. m. till 6. Sir John remained at the meeting till 4.25, when he went to Ernscliffe. Everything was settled, however, before he withdrew."

"The Ministers have their various duties in connection with the Campaign assigned them, and they will leave for their respective provinces at once. Hon. John Carling left for London on Saturday night."

"Sir Charles Tupper, whose arrival in the country is anxiously awaited by the Government, is spoken of as the new Minister of Finance."

"If the new House is called together shortly after the elections it will get to work about the usual time, towards the end of February."

"The new voters' lists are all now completed, and the dissolution is for the purpose of giving representation to the 250,000 newly enfranchised voters created by the late Franchise Act. The Administration waited until the lists were all ready."

Uses of Advertising.

Under the above heading Saturday's Globe, contained the following: "What do you think of the practical result of newspaper advertising?" asked a Globe reporter of Mr. Thos. Thompson, of the Mammoth House, and one of the largest advertisers in Toronto. "We believe in newspaper advertising as the best means of reaching the public. We think it gives character to a business man. One great desideratum in this connection is honest advertising—that is, never advertising what one does not possess. A very common custom is to write an advertisement in an office in a general sort of way. This is very absurd. A man ought to find out just what goods in a particular department he wants to put before the public, and he must take care that he has those goods on hand when he advertises them. There is nothing more annoying to a customer than to come into your place for an article that has just been advertised and to be told you are out of it, and that what he saw was merely an advertisement. Such advertising only causes advertisements to be discredited, and brings no result to the advertiser."

Frozen.

On Saturday night last Mr. Wm. McGorgan, of this town, a teamster in the employ of Mr. D. Fleming, was badly frozen. It appears that McGorgan had been drinking, and at a late hour started for his home on Ste Marie St. He got as far as the door nearly and then fell into a snow drift, where he must have remained for some time. Donald McKnight a neighbor, heard somebody making an out cry, and going out he found McGorgan lying in the snow with his hands and ears and feet badly frozen. Dr. Stephen attended to the case, and the victim is likely be around again in a short time.—Collingwood Enterprise.

A MORAL CYCLONE,

Eugenia Captured by the Temperance Army.

A moral cyclone swept over picturesque and historic Eugenia on Tuesday evening last with irresistable force. An army of Temperance workers from Flesherton and Kimberley moved rapidly on the pretty little town, and shortly after night-fall the place made a conditional surrender. The condition was carried out in the shape of a grand free entertainment in the Methodist church, in which some of the best talent of the places mentioned was brought into active service. It was one of the best entertainments ever given in Artemesia, and assuredly the best ever given in Eugenia. Prof. and Fairy Morgan were present and fairly carried the audience by storm with their grand singing Messrs. Russell, Barnhouse, Baskerville, Pickell, Watson, Milburn, Bunt, Moore, Gordon, and Misses Christoe, Damude, Armstrong, Mrs. Gjerdrum, and others from Flesherton, sustained their part of the program creditably. The Kimberley choir rendered efficient service, also Messrs. T. B. Carruthers, T. G. Thurston and Benjamin Carruthers from the same place. Miss Philp, of Toronto, aided very materially in the musical department Master Carr Messrs. Carruthers, Pickell and Miss Lizzie Fawcett recited and read. Rev. Mr. Corcoran occupied the chair in a most pleasing manner. Mr. F. T. Carr delivered an admirable address. At the close about forty persons signed the Temperance pledge, so that this great "moral cyclone" was not without its results. We think our Temperance societies might very profitably go more extensively into this mission work. And they will, now that the ice has been so successfully broken.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

The holiday season has come and gone again and 1886 is now one of the by-gone years.

At the annual school meeting M. D. Thompson, was elected Trustee in the room of Mr. A. Johnson, the retiring one. At the same meeting a resolution was passed, advising the Trustees to discontinue the use of the so called Ross Bible or Scripture selections, authorised by the Minister of Education, and use the old St. James Bible instead.

The Xmas tree of the Wesley church Sabbath School was held on Tuesday evening last and considering the state of the roads and extreme cold weather was very well attended. The proceeds amounted to $15.00.

The gifts were handsome and well appreciated by the pupils. Those having the choosing of the gifts evidently understood the art of pleasing.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. — Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff. — Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

HOME RULE.

Barney O'Hare's Eloquent "Discoorse" on the Subject.

Misther Edither,—I promised ye' a lether on the tapic av Home Rule an' here it is.

The other night I wint til me own domestic foireside an' comminced discoorsin' to Biddy an' the childher on Misther Gladstone and the Irish Home Rule question. As I prosaded I bekem quoite ilequent, and aphoke av Misther Parnell's splindid efforts for his counthry's good, and the grate spaches av that foine ould gintleman, Misther Gladstone, wid grate fervor an' persuasiveness.

"Fwhat does it all mane?" ses I—addhressin meself til me ouldest boy, Michael, who is quoite a politishun.—"Why, it manes that me down-throdden counthry is cryin' for aqual rights an' privileges wid the other depindencies av the British Impire. It manes an' Irish parliment at Dublin an' down wid high rints an' furren landlords, who spind their money out av the counthry. It manes—"

"But, father," ses Michael intherruptin' the iloquent flow av me discoorse, "why not give Scotland an' Wales Home Rule as well as Oirland?"

"Now, Michael," ses I, "ye' shudn't intherrupt a gentleman, much less yer ould father, when he's thryin' til insthruct ye' in what ye' don't undherstand. As I was sayin' Misther Gladstone has spint the whole av his loife in devoisin' ways an' manes til interojoose Home Rule intil Ireland. Av coorse Misther Parnell has helped the ould man a lot; but betwixt thim they're doin' purty well, an' who knows but I may yet see the day whin an O'Hare will sit on the throne av his ancisthors!"

"Faith, father, I'd loike that," ses Michael, "an' thin I'd be a prime minister or a jook or somethin' or other."

"Michael," ses I, yez are altogether too shmart for yer age an' exparience. Whin I was a lad av yer age I wasnt half as shmart as ye' in the way av intherruptin' an' divartin' the aqual current av me ould father's thought." I jist thought, sor, that a little bit av home rule in the way av saysonable and comprehinsive advice might do Michael good I was jist on the point av prosadin' wid me discoorse, whin Biddy comes over forninst me an' wid her arrums akimbo ses she:—

"Arrah, Barney, mauvorneen, don't ye' think now a little taste av home rule at yer own home wud be more insthructive an' iddifyin, than all the flowery spache yer givin' us about Misther Parnell aa' Misther Gladstone? Don't ye' think, now, wudint it be betther til lay in yer winter's wood than to be sittin' roastin' yer shins at the fire an' talkin' illegant nonsince about yer ancisthors an' a parliament at Dublin? Away wid yer furren Home Rule spaches an' let us have a little more private an' binificial domistic home rule. There's Patsy wants a new shute afore he can attind school; an' Bridget Ann wants a pair av brogues; an' Corney wants a dacint cap; an' I want some clothes pins an' hair pins an' I don't know fwhat. Wuddint it be a good iday, Misther O'Hare, for yez til lave alone matthers that dusint consarn ye; quit bildin' castles in the air on the ghosts av yer grate, grate granfather's ancisthors, an' give yer undivoided attintion to lagitimate home rule?"

Well, sor, til tell the truth I was dumberfoundered I cud hardly belave me siven sinses that it was me own wife Biddy that was addhressin' sich rayprehinsible spache til me. Til think that all me foine idays wor til be scatthered til the four winds av hiven, an' all me words av counsel an' advice til Michael losht entoirely? Wurra, wurra, wir-rusthrew!

But there was no use attimptin til contradict Bridget. She dosen't spake much but when she does—well, sor, the rosht av us hev til hould our pace. Ye' cuddint get a word in edgeways or any other way at all at all. Ye' might jist as well sthrive til kape back the wathers av the mighty Niagara as thry til put a sthop til the clatther av Bridget's tongue whin it gets started til wag in a scoientific an' business loike manner. Otherwise there's not the loike av her 'twixt ocean an' ocean. A frind av the frindless, an angel in sickness an' want an' disthress—God bless her! But, thin, ye undherstand, sor, that the besht av min an women are apt til misconsthrue an' misundherstand a man moved by lafty impulses. In fact, sor, they sometoimes do not aither undherstand or appraciate the glib uttherences av intilligint, high-minded an' advanced politishuns an' statesmin.

Obadiently Yours,
BARNEY O'HARE.

P. S.—Af ye' can't make out me wroitin' don't prent this lether, as I can wroite ye' another quite aisly.—B. O'H.

P. S. No. 2.—Correct all mistakes i any. But shure I don't think ye'll find any so it doesn't matter in the laste whether ye' correct it at all or not.—B. O'H.

WELL WRITTEN LETTER

Miss Edith Richardson's Letter in the "Christian Guardian."

[The following ably written letter, by Miss Edith Richardson, of Flesherton, appeared in the Christmas number of the Christian Guardian. It is certainly the ablest production on the subject of "Fiction" we have yet read.—ED. ADVANCE.]

FICTION.

There is one phase of this question which has been overlooked by your correspondents, namely, that which takes into account the imaginative side of man's mind. I have heard people deficient in the imagination say, "I never care to read any stories but true ones." My dear brothers, take no credit to yourself for that; it only shows that you are deficient in that which makes the poet, painter, musician, orator and actor, or at least without which they never could succeed.

And then they mistake as to the full meaning of the words true and truth. I apprehend there is a wider, fuller and deeper meaning of truth than that expressed in the word veracity. To my mind sheer fact is not neccessarily truth. Had Scott fabricated every incident in his novels and poems they would not have lost their value as works of art and real instructors, provided he was true to the spirit of the times delineated. On the other hand, he might have piled fact upon fact and yet leave his readers with no true conceptions of the life and spirit of the age. It is this which has made books purporting to be history, such barren productions. Without the play of his imagination Macaulay's History could never have been what it is.

But I go still farther. It is not necessary that a work of the imagination should be even true to nature in order to be a valuable literary production. As, for instance, Longfellow's sublime "Song of Hiawatha," no one needs to be told that this is not "true to nature," at least as far as his hero is concerned. But what is best of all, it is true to itself. The poet's imagination showed him a picture of the ideal—which after all is the true life—a picture which no one can contemplate and not be benefited. And further still, it is not necessary that a work should confine itself to the possible, in order to be truth. "Hans Anderson's Fairy Tales" are but beautiful fancies. No one will say that they belong to that which "loveth or maketh a lie," for a lie is always wicked, and there is nothing wicked about these tales. There will be found no one who would wish to rob childhood of the joy derived from them. They are poems in their simplicity, and the child who stores his mind with them is the better for it. To the romantic heart of childhood it leaves a rich legacy—a new beauty in every flower and shrub, a message from every bird, and even the meaner things of nature possess a new interest. The magic story-teller has given them all a personality which seems to speak of the good God who made them all. Schiller says:

"Then lived to me each flower and tree,
Sweet songs gave out each rippling brook,
A soul in all things seemed to be,
Life's echoes came from every nook."
Der Ideal.

Was it wrong for Victor Hugo to paint the good Bishop of D———before a Tolstoi had made such a creation true to nature? No, the great poet and novelist had seen his ideal with prophetic vision, and gave to fiction the finest character of all.

Poets of all times and peoples have sung of the ideal (Imagination) or lamented her loss, recognizing the truth that he who escapes from her sweet inspiration has lost the best of life.

"Extinguished are the suns that shone,
And all my youthful path illumed,
The bright ideals, all are gone,
That once my bursting heart consumed."
Der Ideal.

But again it is said that the reading of fiction saps the mind and unfits for more solid reading. This is true of a certain class. The person who will indulge in that kind, has not been trained in his childhood to despise it by having his attention called to the glorious banquet where he may indulge without injury. He must have food for his imagination, there is no use disguising the fact. And I say, deliver us from that abnormal creature—the child who does not want a story.

But there is another class which, instead of enervating the mind, stimulates it. George Eliot's novels beget a taste for philosophy and metaphysics in some who would not read works on those subjects, but are ready enough to take their medicine in sugar until it is no longer medicine. Scott certainly produces a hunger for history. Dickens teaches the lovely law of charity, or finding the best in every man however gruff his exterior. Thackeray shows up the fashionable follies and vices of society in a manner which no amount of pure fact could make so really true to the reader. McHarris Knight's notion that Scott, Shakespeare, etc., should have given their magnificent genius to history and biography is very like the farmer, who having bought the winged-horse Pegasus, harnessed him to a plough. But it was no use. Pegasus would not do the work horses without wings could do, but fretted and fumed until one day he flew away.

My brother, when a horse has wings you must let him fly.

EDITH RICHARDSON.

Flesherton, Dec. 11th.

The Weather.

FOR THE FIRST THREE MONTHS OF 1887.

From "The Prophet."

January. The year will open with keen cold weather. Slight snow falls during the first week with heavy snow storms on the 20th, 21st and 22nd. Thursday, the 13th, will be the coldest day of the month; children and aged people should not venture outdoors that day unless especial care is taken to prevent such parts as the ears and nose from becoming frost bitten January's annual thaw will occur during the closing week (on the 26th) and will be accompanied with rain. Only one blizzard will strike Ontario during the month and it will arrive on Sunday the 16th.

February. Cold stormy weather with blinding snow, will usher in the month of St. Valentine, lasting throughout the first week. This will be followed by clear, cold and bracing atmosphere until the 19th. On the 8th the thermometer will take a sudden dip away below the zeros. After the 19th, however, the weather will moderate and like January this month will exit amidst the slop and slush consequent upon a thaw and comparatively warm rains.

March. If wet weather can be called lamb-like March will come in sheepishly, for the first three days will bring a heavy down pour. No snow will fall from this until toward the 19th, when we may look for an "awful spell o' stormy weather." The second week of March will be fine and mild but cold winds will visit us almost continuously from the 19th to the end of the month. March's most frigid day will be the 15th.

The spring will be early but wet.

The summer of 1887 will also be characterised by a precipitation of the aqueous.

Artemesia Council.

The following is the personnae of Artemesia Township Council for the year 1887:—

Dr. Christee, Reeve.
John Boland, } Deputy Reeves.
John McArthur, }
Wm. Sharp, } Councillors.
Henry Cairns, }

It will thus be observed that we have no less than three representatives to the County Council this year.

Extra Tit-Bits.

We regret to learn that Mr. James Hopps is lying very ill at Mr. Holley's Meaford Road, where he had gone to do some work. He was taken down very suddenly.

For the first time this winter the C. P. R. morning train going South was a few hours late yesterday.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

A LIVING QUESTION.—Question—"Is this life worth living?" Answer—"It all depends upon the liver?" If torpid or inactive it causes a dull, tough, languid feeling. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure gives health and buoyancy. Sold by Dr. Christee.

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—F. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

What Cousin Amy Thinks.

(LOCKSLEY HALL II.—SIXTY MINUTES AFTER.)

From the Minneapolis Tribune.)

me rest a little from your well-worn
"Study tracks," crest; and for your fiction, summon up some sober facts.

ve had your say, and amply have set forth your thrice-told tale; have held my peace, and hardly venture now a theme so stale.

your earlier verse you call me names that scarcely were refined;
But I wrote no answering verses to disturb your peace of mind.

Now that well-nigh eighty winters whiten both our heads with snow,
Let me turn, a few brief moments, to those scenes of long ago.

When about the beach we wandered we were happy, you and I;
And you loved me, or you said so—that at least
I'll not deny.

'Twas the springtime, when the iris changes on the burnish'd dove,
And a young man's lively fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.

But it is not always spring time; youthful fancies soon are past;
And an April love, though ardent, may not stand
a wintry blast.

You were quick to think me fickle, though I knew your fears were wild;
For you thought yourself a man, and me a shallow-hearted child.

I was but a lesser You; and me you kindly did define
As to you like moon to sunlight, for as water unto wine.

Wiser than your fancy fathomed, wiser than your song hath sung—
I, a child, had even then a prudent dread of your sharp tongue.

Though subdued the chord of self when love took up the harp of life,
Yet I felt you loved yourself much better than you could your wife.

So said I, for both our sakes, 'twere better far that I retired;
Although a future baron, yet you were not one to be desired.

And you—you quickly eased your grief and took another to your breast,
As in spring the wanton lapwing gets himself
another crest.

And we went our separate ways, held our separate careers—
Toiled and struggled, failed or triumphed through the slowly lengthening years.

I, in simple cares and duties, led my quiet life apart,
All my griefs and my few triumphs folded close within my heart.

You have won a world's applause, have seen its trophies at your feet;
The laurel and the lordling's crown upon your ample forehead meet.

The grand old gardener and his wife, from yon
blue heavens above us bent,
Must smile to hear your sage conclusion: "There is something in descent."

Honors come, but wisdom lingers, and you hear a burdened breast,
Full of sad experience, moving toward the stillness of your rest.

Now I see you old and formal, fitted to your petty part,
With your little hoard of maxims preaching down a grandson's heart.

"They were dangerous guides, the feelings."
Youth is vain and age is wise—
Ah! that Love's pulse slacks at fourscore is no matter for surprise!

And the world, for whose advancement rang your bugle "Forward," then,
"Chaos, cosmos! Cosmos, chaos!" seems unto your later ken.

Ah, that he who ever foremost cheered the people's standards on Now would "hush this cry of forward till ten thousand years have gone."

Ah, that e'er the trumpet's voice that loudest cheered the brave assault,
'Gainst the hordes of wrong and error, now should sound a piping "Halt!"

I am but a simple woman; yet I feel a thrill of pain
As I catch those tremulous echoes of that old heroic strain.

Weakness that is born of weakness; phantasies that are but real
To an old man's failing faith that withers from his youth's ideal.

Not in vain the distance beacons. Forward let the great world range,
Sweeping on, and ever upward, through the ringing grooves of change.

Set the flag of Human Rights unfurled above
Wrong's dread abysm;
Trust the common sense of most to avert a social cataclysm.

Robber lords and despots tremble; they who have the people yoked
Well may dread the storm they've tempted, fear the wrath they have invoked.

If there comes a hungry people, like a lion creeping nigher,
Tyrants nod and wink no longer. Larum! Let them mend their fire.

But howsoever these things be, you scarcely now will care to know;
Enough we've had of Locksley Hall—now, Alfred,
let the subject go.

The Highest, the Best.

"Suchst du das Hoechste, das Groesste?
Die Pflanze kann es dich lehren.
Was sie willenlos ist, sei Du es wollend: das ist's!"

Seek'st thou the Highest, the Best:
The flower can to thee reveal it—
Man hath small power to express,
Nature no power to conceal it.
Cloudy the truth of man's preaching,
Sun clear the violet's teaching.

What, for his arduous pains,
That the philosopher gaineth?
Knowledge in composite grains,
Wisdom's pure gold ne'er attaineth
Only Doing—the dust on the shore;
Not Being—the sea to explore.

Not thus the violet's fate:
Springing—on going completion!
Reaching of perfect estate.
Being, to utmost repletion.
Earth laps it, sun warms it, wind blows;
Unaware of its friends or its foes,
Not refusing, nor choosing, it grows!

Learn of the flower, O Soul,
Way of the highest attaining!
Being, not Doing, the goal,
Growth to completion thus gaining,
O'er thee, as over the flower,
Elements diverse conspire,
Yet hath it naught of thy power
Of selection, rejection, desire!
Souls to like perfect condition
Grow by supremest volition.

—Revenge—She wasn't very young, but she had money. He didn't want the earth. "Dearest," he began, but she stopped him. "I anticipate what you are about to say, Mr. Sampson," she said, "and I would spare your feelings, for it can never, never be. I esteem you highly, and will be a sister to—" "I have four sisters already," he replied bitterly; "four grown sisters and life is a hideous burden. But, oh, Clara," he went on passionately, "if you cannot be my wife will you not give me a mother's protecting love? I'm an orphan.'

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

And so Ernest posted his letters, and then, partly to employ his thoughts, and partly because it was his nature to throw himself into whatever stream of life was flowing past him, he set himself to master the state of political affairs in the country in which he found himself.

This need not be entered into here, further than to say that it was such as might with advantage have employed wiser heads than his, and indeed did employ them. Suffice it to say that he contrived to make himself of considerable use to the English party, both before and after the annexation of the Transvaal to the dominions of the Crown.

Together with the proclamation by which the Transvaal was annexed to Her Majesty's dominions was issued another that was to have a considerable bearing upon our hero's fortunes. This was none other than a promise of Her Majesty's gracious pardon to all such as had been resident in the Transvaal for a period of six months previous to the date of annexation, being former British subjects and offenders against the English criminal law, who would register their name and offence within a given time. The object of this proclamation was to give immunity from prosecution to many individuals formerly deserters from the English army, and other people who had in some way transgressed the laws, but were now occupying respectable positions in their adopted country.

Mr. Alston read this proclamation attentively when it came out in a special number of the Gazette. Then, after thinking for a while, he handed it to Ernest.

"You have read this amnesty proclamation?" he said.

"Yes," answered Ernest; "what of it?"

"What of it? Ah, the stupidity of youth! Can't you very well see that it takes your neck out of the halter? Off with you and register your name and offence with the Secretary to Government, and you will be clear forever from any consequences that might ensue from the slight indiscretion of shooting your own first cousin."

"By Jove, Alston! you don't mean that?"

"Mean it? Of course I do. The proclamation does not specify any particular offence to which pardon is denied and you have lived more than six months on Transvaal territory. Off you go."

And Ernest went like an arrow.

CHAPTER XXVII.

FOUND WANTING.

Ernest reached the Government office and registered his name, and in due course received "Her Majesty's gracious pardon."

When this precious document was in his pocket, Ernest thought that he now for the first time realized what the feelings of a slave unexpectedly manumited must be. Had it not been for this fortunate accident, the consequences of that fatal duel must have continually overshadowed him. He would, had he returned to England, have been liable at any period of his life to a prosecution for murder.

His first idea on getting his pardon was to return straightway to England; but that silent fate which directs men's lives, driving them whither they would not, and forcing their bare and bleeding feet to stumble along the stony paths of its hidden purpose, came into his mind and made him see that it would be better to delay awhile. In a few weeks Eva's answer would surely reach him. If he were to go now it would be even possible that he might pass her in mid-ocean, for in his heart he never doubted but that she would come.

And indeed the very next mail there came a letter from Dorothy, written in answer to that which he had posted on the same day that he had written to Eva. It was only a short letter; the last post that could catch the mail was just going out, and his welcome letter had only just arrived; but she had twenty minutes, and she would send one line. She told them how grateful they were to hear that he was well and safe, and reproached him gently for not writing. Then she thanked him for making her his confidante about Eva Ceswick. She had guessed it long before, she said; and she thought they were both lucky in each other, and hoped and prayed that when the time came they would be as completely happy as it was possible for people to be. She had never spoken to Eva about him; but she should no longer feel any diffidence in doing so now. She would go and see her very soon and plead his cause; not that it wanted any pleading, however, she was sure of that. Eva looked sad now that he was gone. There had been some talk awhile back of Mr. Plowden, the new clergyman; but she supposed that Eva had given him his quietus, as she heard no more of it now; and so on, till the "postman is at the door waiting for this letter."

Little did Ernest guess what it cost poor Dorothy to write her congratulations and wishes of happiness. A man—the nobler animal, remember—could hardly have done it; only the inferior woman would show such unselfishness.

This letter filled Ernest with a sure and certain hope. Eva, he clearly saw, had not had time to write by that mail; by the next her answer would come. It can be imagined that he waited for its advent with some anxiety.

Mr. Alston, Ernest and Jeremy had taken a house in Pretoria, and for the past month or two had been living in it very comfortably.

One morning—it was a particularly lovely morning—Ernest was standing after breakfast on a garden path smoking and directing Mazooku as to the erection of his "parasols" over his favorite melons.

"Mazooku, you lazy hound," said the latter at last, "If you don't put that tuft right in two shakes, I'll break your head with your own kerrie!"

"Ow Inkoos," replied the Zulu, sulkily, again trying to prop up the tuft, and muttering to himself meanwhile.

"Do you catch what that fellow of yours is saying?" asked Mr. Alston. "He is saying that all Englishmen are mad, and that you are the maddest of the mad. He considers that nobody who was not a lunatic would bother his head with those 'weeds that stink' (flowers), or these fruits which, even if you succeed in growing them—and surely the things are bewitched or they would grow without 'hats'" (Ernest's parasols)—"must lie very cold on the stomach."

At that moment the particular "hat" which Mazooku was trying to arrange fell down again, whereupon the Zulu's patience gave out, and cursing it for a witch in the most vigorous language, he emphasized his words by bringing his fist straight down on the melon, smashing it to pieces. Whereupon Ernest made for him and he vanished swiftly.

Mr. Alston stood by laughing at the scene, and awaited Ernest's return. Presently he came strolling back, not having caught Mazooku. Indeed, it would not have greatly mattered if he had, for as that swarthy gentleman very well knew, great, indeed, must be the provocation that could induce Ernest to touch a native. It was a thing to which he had an unconquerable aversion, in the same way that he objected to the word "nigger" as applied to a people who, whatever their faults may be, are, as a rule, gentlemen in the truest sense of the word.

As he came strolling down the path toward him, his face a little flushed with the exertion, Mr. Alston thought to himself that Ernest was growing into a very handsome fellow. The tall frame, narrow at the waist and broad at the shoulders, the eloquent dark eyes, which so far surpass the loveliest gray or blue, the silken hair which curled over his head like that on a Grecian statue, the curved lips, the quick intelligence and kindly smile that lit the whole face, all these things helped to make his appearance not so much handsome as charming, and to women captivating to a dangerous extent. His dress, too, which consisted of riding-breeches, boots and spurs, a white waistcoat and linen coat, with a very broad, soft felt hat looped up at one side, so as to throw the face into alternate light and shadow, helped the general effect considerably. Altogether Ernest was a pretty fellow in those days.

Jeremy was lounging on an easy-chair in the veranda, in company with the boy Roger Alston, and intensely interested in watching a furious battle between two lines of ants, black and red, who had their homes somewhere in the stonework. For a long while the issue of the battle remained doubtful, victory inclining, if anything, to the side of the thin red line, when suddenly from the entrance to the nest of the black ants there emerged a battalion of giants, great fellows, at least six times the size of the others, who fell upon the red ants and routed them, taking many prisoners. Then followed the most curious spectacle, namely, the deliberate execution of the captive red ants, by having their heads bitten off by the great black soldiers. Jeremy and Roger knew what was coming very well, for these battles were of frequent occurrence, and the casualties among the red ants simply frightful. On this occasion they determined to save the prisoners, which was effected by dipping a match in some of the nicotine at the bottom of a pipe, and placing it in front of the black giants. The ferocious insects would thereupon abandon their captives, and rushing at the strange intruder, hang on like bulldogs till the poison did its work, and they dropped off senseless, to recover presently and stagger off home, holding their legs to their antennæ and exhibiting every other symptom of frightful headache.

Jeremy was sitting on a chair oiling the matches, and Roger, kneeling on the pavement, was employed in beguiling the giants into biting them, when suddenly they heard the sound of galloping horses and the rattle of wheels. The lad, lowering his head still more, looked out toward the market-square through a gap between the willow-stems.

"Hurrah, Mr. Jones!" he said, "here comes the mail."

Next minute, amid loud blasts from a bugle, and enveloped in a cloud of dust, the heavy cart, to the sides and seats of which the begrimed, worn-out passengers were clinging like drowning men to straws, came rattling along as fast as the six grays reserved for the last stage could gallop, and vanished toward the post office.

"There's the mail, Ernest," hallooed Jeremy; "she will bring the English letters."

Ernest nodded, turned a little pale, and nervously knocked out his pipe. No wonder; that mail-cart carried his destiny and he knew it. Presently he walked across the square to the post-office. The letters were not sorted, and he was the first person there. Very soon one of His Excellency's staff came riding down to get the Government-house bag. It was the same gentleman with whom he had sung "Auld Lang Syne" so enthusiastically on the day of Jeremy's encounter with the giant, and had afterward been wheeled home in a wheelbarrow.

"Hullo, Kershaw, here we are, 'primos inter omnes,' 'primos primi primores,' which is it? Come, Kershaw, you are the last from school—which is it? I don't believe you know, ha! ha! ha! What are you doing down here so soon? Does the 'expectant swain await the postman's knock?' Why, my dear fellow, you look pale; you must be in love, or thirsty. So am I—the latter, not the former. Love, I do abjure thee. 'Quis separabit,' who will have a split? I think that the sun can't be far from the line. Shall we, my dear Kershaw, shall we take an observation? Ha! ha! ha!"

"No, thank you, I never drink anything between meals."

"Ah, my boy, a bad habit; give it up before it is too late. Break it off, my dear Kershaw, and always wet your whistle in the strictest moderation, or you will die young. What says the poet?

'He who drinks strong beer and goes to bed mellow,
Lives as he ought to live, lives as he ought to live,
Lives as he ought to live, and dies a jolly good fellow.

Byron, I think, is it not? ha! ha! ha!"

Just then some others came up, and somewhat to Ernest's relief, his friend turned the light of his kindly countenance to shine elsewhere and left him to his thoughts.

At last the little shutter of the post-office was thrown up, and Ernest got his own letters, together with those of Mr. Alston and Jeremy. He turned into the shade of a neighboring veranda, and rapidly sorted the pile. There was no letter in Eva's handwriting. But there was one in that of her sister Florence. Ernest knew the writing well; there was no mistaking its peculiar upright, powerful-looking characters. This he opened hurriedly. Inclosed in the letter was a note, which was in the writing he had expected to see. He rapidly unfolded it, and as he did so a flash of fear passed through his brain.

"Why did she write in this way?"

The note could not have been a long one, for in another minute it was lying on the ground, and Ernest, pale-faced, and with catching breath, was clinging to the veranda-post with both hands to save himself from falling. In a few seconds he recovered, and picking up the note, walked quickly across the square to his house. Halfway across he was overtaken by his friend on the staff cantering gayly along on a particularly wooden-looking pony, from the sides of which his legs projected widely, and waving in one hand the Colonial Office bag addressed to the Administrator of the Government.

"Hullo, my abstemious friend," he hallooed, as he pulled up the wooden pony with a jerk that sent each of its stiff legs sprawling in a different direction. "Was patience rewarded? Is Chloe over the water kind? If not, take my advice, and don't trouble your head about her. Quand on a pas ce qu'on aime, the wise man aimes ce qu'il a, Kershaw. I have conceived a great affection for you, and I will let you into a secret. Come with me this afternoon, and I will introduce you to two charming specimens of indigenous beauty. Like roses they bloom upon the veldt and waste their sweetness on the desert air. Mater pulchra, puella pulcherrima, as Virgil says. I, as befits my years, will attach myself to the matter, for your sweet youth shall be reserved the puella. Ha! ha! ha!" and he brought the dispatch-bag down with a sounding whack between the ears of the wooden pony, with the result that he was nearly sent flying into the sluit, being landed by a sudden plunge well on to the animal's crupper.

"Woho! Bucephalus, whoho! or your mealies shall be cut off." Just then he for the first time caught sight of the face of his companion, who was plodding along in silence by his side.

"Hullo! what's up, Kershaw?" he said, in an altered tone; "you don't look well. Nothing wrong, I hope?"

"Nothing, nothing," answered Ernest, quietly; "that is, I have got some bad news, that is all. Nothing to speak of, nothing."

"My dear fellow, I am so sorry, and I have been troubling you with my nonsense. Forgive me. There, you wish to be alone. Good-by."

A few seconds later Mr. Alston and Jeremy, from their point of vantage on the veranda, saw Ernest coming with swift strides up the garden path. His face was drawn with pain, and there was a fleck of blood upon his lip. He passed them without a word, and, entering the house, slammed the door of his own room. Mr. Alston and Jeremy looked at one another.

"What's up?" said the laconic Jeremy.

Mr. Alston thought awhile before he answered, as was his fashion.

"Something gone wrong with 'the ideal,' I should say," he said at length; "that is the way of ideals."

"Shall we go and see?" said Jeremy uneasily.

"No, give him a minute or two to pull himself together. Lots of time for consolation afterward."

Meanwhile Ernest, having got into his room, sat down upon the bed, and again read the note which was inclosed in Florence's letter. Then he folded it up and put it down, slowly and methodically. Next he opened the other letter, which he had not yet looked at, and read that too. After he had done it he threw himself face downward on the pillow and thought awhile. Presently he arose, and going to the other side of the room, took down a revolver-case which hung to a nail and drew out the revolver which was loaded. Returning, he again sat down upon the bed and cocked it. So he remained for a minute or two, and then slowly lifted the pistol toward his head. At that moment he heard footsteps approaching, and with a quick movement threw the weapon under the bed. As he did so Mr. Alston and Jeremy entered.

"Any letters, Ernest?" asked the former.

"Letters! Oh, yes, I beg your pardon; here they are," and he took a packet from the pocket of his white coat and handed them to him.

Mr. Alston took them, looking all the while fixedly at Ernest, who avoided his glance.

"What is the matter, my boy?" he said kindly at last; "nothing wrong, I hope?"

Ernest looked at him blankly.

"What is it, old chap?" said Jeremy, seating himself on the bed beside him, and laying his hand on his arm.

Then Ernest broke out into a paroxyism of grief painful to behold. Fortunately for all concerned, it was brief. Had it lasted much longer, something must have given way. Suddenly his mood changed and he grew hard and bitter.

"Nothing, my dear fellows, nothing," he said; "that is, only the sequel to a pretty little idyl. You may remember a letter I wrote—to a woman—some months back. There, you both of you know the story. Now you shall hear the answer or to be more correct the answers.

"That—woman has a sister. Both she and her sister have written to me. My—her sister's letter is the longest. We will take it first. I think that we may skip the first page, there is nothing particular in it, and I do not wish to—waste your time. Now listen:

"'By-the-way, I have a piece of news for you which will interest you, and which you will I am sure be glad to hear; for, of course, you will have by this time got over any little tendresse you may have had in that direction. Eva' (that is the woman to whom I wrote, and to whom I thought I was engaged) 'is going to be married to a Mr. Plowden, a gentleman who has been acting as locum tenens for Mr. Halford.'"

Here Jeremy sprang up and used strong language. Ernest motioned him down and went on: "'I say I am certain that you will be glad to hear this, because the match is in every respect a satisfactory one, and will, I am sure, bring dear Eva happiness. Mr. Plowden is well off and, of course, a clergyman, two great guarantees for the success of their matrimonial venture. Eva tells me that she had a letter from you last mail' (the letter I read you, gentlemen), 'and asks me to thank you for it. If she can find time she will send you a line shortly; but, as you will understand, she has her hands very full just at present. The wedding is to take place at Kesterwick Church on the 17th of May' (that is to-morrow, gentlemen), 'and, if this letter reaches you in time, I am sure that you will think of us all on that day. It will be very quiet, owing to our dear aunt's death being still so comparatively recent. Indeed, the engagement has, in obedience to Mr. Plowden's wishes, for he is very retiring, been kept quite secret, and you are absolutely the first person to whom it has been announced. I hope that you will feel duly flattered, sir. We are very busy about the trousseau, and just now the burning question is, of what color the dress in which Eva is to go away in after the wedding shall be. Eva and I are all for gray. Mr. Plowden is for olive-green, and, as is natural under the circumstances, I expect that he will carry the day. They are together in the drawing-room settling it now. You always admired Eva (rather wrrmly once; do you remember how cut up you both were when you went away? alas for the fickleness of human nature!); you should see her now. Her happiness makes her look lovely; but I hear her calling me. No doubt they have settled the momentous question. Good-by. I am not clever at writing, but I hope that my news will make up for my want of skill.—Always yours, "'FLORENCE CESWICK.'"

"Now for the inclosure," said Ernest:

"'DEAR ERNEST: I got your letter. Florence will tell you what there is to tell. I am going to be married. Think what you will of me; I cannot help my mayself. Believe me, this has cost me great suffering, but my duty seems clear. I hope that you will forget me, Ernest, as henceforth it will be my duty to forget you. Good-by, my dear Ernest, oh, good-bye. E."

"Humph!" murmured Mr. Alston beneath his breath, "as I thought, clay, and extremely bad clay, too!"

Slowly Ernest tore the letter into small fragments, threw them down, and stamped upon them with his foot as though they were a living thing.

"I wish that I had shaken the life out of that parson!" groaned Jeremy, who was in his way as much affected by the news as his friend.

"Curse you!" said Ernest, turning on him fiercely, "why didn't you stop where you were and look after her, instead of coming humbugging after me?"

Jeremy only groaned by way of answer. Mr. Alston, as was his way when perplexed, filled his pipe and lit it. Ernest paced swiftly up and down the little room, the white walls of which he had decorated with pictures cut from illustrated papers, Christmas cards and photographs. Over the head of the bed was a photograph of Eva herself, which he had framed in some beautiful native wood. He reached it down.

"Look," he said, "that is the lady herself. Handsome, isn't she, and pleasant to look on? Who would have thought that she was such a devil? Tells me to forget her, and talks about 'her duty'! Women love a little joke!"

He hurled the photograph on to the floor, and tread it as he had treaded the letter, grinding it to pieces with his heel.

"They say," he went on, "that a man's curses are sometimes heard wherever it is they arrange these pleasant surprises for us. Now you fellows bear witness to what I say, and watch that woman's life. May she lay down her head in sorrow night by night, and year by year! May her—"

"Stop, Ernest," said Mr. Alston, with a shrug, "you may be taken at your word, and you wouldn't like that, you know. Besides, it is cowardly to go on cursing at a woman."

He paused, standing for a moment with his clinched fist still raised above his head, his pale lips quivering with intense excitement, and his dark eyes flashing and blazing like stars.

"You are right," he said, dropping his fist on the table. "It is with the man that I have to deal."

"What man?"

"This Plowden. I feel that I shall disturb his honeymoon."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that I am going to kill him or he is going to kill me, it does not matter which."

"Why, what quarrel have you with the man? Of course he looked after himself. You could not expect him to consider your interests, could you?"

"If he had cut me out fairly, I should not have a word to say. Every man for himself in this pleasant world. But, mark my words, this parson and Florence have forced her into this unholy business, and I will have his life in payment. If you don't believe me, ask Jeremy. He saw something of the game before he left."

"Look here, Kershaw, the man's a parson. He will take shelter behind his cloth, he won't fight. What shall you do then?"

"I shall shoot him," was the cool reply.

"Ernest, you are mad; it won't do, you shall not go, and that is all about it. You shall not ruin yourself over this woman, who is not fit to black an honest man's shoes."

"Shall not! shall not! Alston, you use strong language. Who will prevent me?"

"I will prevent you. I am your superior officer, and the corps you belong to is not disbanded. If you try to leave this place you shall be arrested as a deserter. Now don't be a fool, lad; you have killed one man, and got out of the mess. If you kill another, you will not get out of it. Besides, what will the satisfaction be? If you want revenge, be patient. It will come. I have seen something of life; at least I am old enough to be your father, and I know you think me a cynic because I laugh at your 'high-faluting' about women. How justly, I warned you, you see now. But, cynic or no, I believe in the God above us, and I believe, too, that there is a rough justice in this world. It is in the world principally that people expiate the sins of the world, and if this marriage is such a wicked thing, as you think, it will bring its own trouble with it, without any help from you. Time will avenge you. Everything comes to him who can wait."

Ernest's eyes glittered coldly as he answered:

"I cannot wait. I am a ruined man already, all my life is laid waste. I wish to die, but I wish to kill him before I die."

"So sure as my name is Alston you shall not go!"

"So sure as my name is Kershaw I will go!"

"The boy means business," he thought to himself. "He will try and bolt. How can I stop him? Ah, I have it," and he set off briskly toward Government House, saying aloud as he went, "I love that lad too well to let him destroy himself over a jilt."

LATE SPORTING NOTES.

Fresh Gleanings From the Field of Sport.

Baseball.

The annual meeting of the directors of the Hamilton Baseball Association was held at the Brunswick Hotel last evening. All the old directors were present. A very important step was taken in reducing the number of directors from seven to three. The wisdom of this step is sure to show itself during the coming season. The directors elected were Messrs. Thomas Crooks, Wm. Stroud and John Cummer, and these, at a subsequent meeting, elected Mr. Crooks President. The directors will meet shortly and elect a Manager and Secretary.

New York is making a strong effort to secure Mike Kelly, of the Chicagos. Kelly says he will never play with Chicago again, although he has been reserved by that team and the management can prevent him from playing with any other.

The League has signed an even 100 players; American Association, 76; International, 106; Northwestern, 49; Western, 44; Southern, 29; Eastern, 10; New England, 27—a total of 441 for the principal professional organizations.

Hanlon will captain the Detroits during the coming season.

The New York World says: "It is probable that New York will have both Kelly, of Chicago, and Denny, of St. Louis, on its League team next season. Little is known of the Kelly deal, but Denny is almost certain to be on the third bag for the Giants."

Muldoon has asked Manager Barnie for his release from the Baltimores.

The Newark men explain that Knowlton was the "luckiest" pitcher in the business, but Smith was the most skilful.

The Ring.

Charles Mitchell has been empowered to make all arrangements for Smith, for the fight with Sullivan. Mitchell has engaged to box Smith on January 13th and will meet Alf Greenfield on January 14th. He writes to the New York Clipper thus: I have never seen Smith with his hands up, but the sporting men of this country consider him invincible. I think Sullivan would act wisely by coming over here. If he can defeat Smith he can win a lot of money and make much more afterward. I know Smith's backers well and have had a talk with them in regard to matching him against John L. They said they would make a match for £1,000, or, if that was not enough, they would make it for £2,000 and give Sullivan the choice of battle ground in this country. Or they would make the same match to be decided in America, Smith to have choice of fighting ground; give or take £100 for expenses. They are very sweet on Smith, who certainly is a very likely looking young fellow for any job. His fighting weight is about 182 pounds, and he is very powerfully built, while he is abstemious and takes most excellent care of himself. I have been authorized by the Smith party to make such arrangement with Sullivan's backers as I may deem advisable.

Mike Walsh and Harry Gilmore are to have a boxing match in Ottawa during the time of the winter races there.

Sam. Bittle and Hial Stoddard are to have an eight-hour sparring match in St. Thomas on Thursday evening next.

Jack Farrell offers to fight any man living who weighs not over 122 pounds for $1,000 a side.

The Turf.

Prescott is credited with being the horsiest place in the Dominion. Any and every day you can see half-a-dozen trotters hitched to speeding sleighs taking their exercise on the highroad. J. P. Wiser has a score of promising youngsters, Dr. Monaghan has half-a-dozen speedy colts, and there are many others who own from one to three.

The dates for some of the leading American meetings are: The Brooklyn Jockey Club's meeting will extend from May 14th to the 28th. The American Jockey Club will begin its meeting on Decoration Day, and will last till June 12th. The Coney Island Jockey Club's dates are from June 12th until July 2nd. Monmouth Park will begin on the 4th of July. Washington race meetings will begin on the 3rd of May, and Baltimore will begin on the 7th or 8th of May

The Bicycle.

W. S. Maltby, who is in Austria with Fred. S. Rollinson, is astonishing the natives with his fancy bicycle riding.

G. P. Mills, of Liverpool, the bicyclist, has covered 6,157 miles in 82 rides, from January 1st to October 9th.

An English racer has just had a machine built which weighs only 15¾ pounds.

Hillier was the champion bicycle rider at all distances in 1881. Rowe is champion of all distances, amateur, proamateur and professional, 1886.

Alfred McCurdy, the bicyclist who holds the 24-hour road record of the world, is not much more than a boy. He weighs 160 pounds, is 21 years of age and is 5 feet 10½ inches in height.

The members of the Nashville Bicycle Club are contemplating a tour by wheel to Niagara Falls the coming season. The party will probably consist of ten or twelve of the best riders in the club, and want to start some time in June.

General Notes.

The horseshoe turning contest between Dunn, of Detroit, and Campbell, of Buffalo, is attracting considerable attention in the latter city, and it is expected that about 300 Buffalonians will attend the match.

The annual meeting of the Toronto Log Sports Club was held Friday. It was decided to hold the inaugural race meeting at Eglinton on Friday next.

The first of a serious of chess club matches took place in the rooms of the Toronto Chess Club, Public Library buildings, on Thursday evening, when the President's side defeated the Vice-President's.

The Toronto Draught Club is anxious to play any club on the continent.

A CREW FALL IN LOVE.

Sailors Completely Overpowered by the Beauty of South American Women.

We read in scenes from the life of Hobart Pacha that, after receiving his "baptism of fire" in Spain, while serving with the naval brigade against Don Carlos, Hobart, while still a midshipman, was sent to the South American station, where he was engaged in putting down the slave trade. Our adventurer's first love experience in Buenos Ayres, that paradise of pretty women, is delightfully told. Within forty-eight hours of arriving every man of the crew was deeply in love. My respectable captain, who had been for many years living as a confirmed bachelor with his only relative, an old sister, with whom he chummed, and I fancy had hardly been known to speak to another woman, was suddenly perceived walking about the street with a large bouquet in his hand, his hair well oiled, his coat (generally so loose and comfortable-looking) buttoned tight to show his figure, and then he took to sporting beautiful kid gloves and even to dancing. He could not be persuaded to go on board at any cost; while he had never left his ship before except for an occasional day's shooting. In short, he had fallen hopelessly in love with a buxom Spanish lady, with lustrous eyes as black as her hair. Our first and second lieutenants followed suit, both were furiously in love; and all my messmates fell down and worshipped the lovely (and lovely they were and no mistake) Spanish girls of Buenos Ayres, whose type of beauty is that which only the blue blood of Spain can boast of. Now, reader, don't be shocked; I fell in love myself, and my love affair proved of a more serious nature, at least in its results, than that of the others. To make a long story short, the girl and I, like two fools as we were, decided to run away together, and run away we did. I should have been married if the mother hadn't run after us. She didn't object to our being married; but in the meantime she remained with us, and she managed to make the country home we had escaped to, with the intention of settling down there, so unbearable that, luckily for me as regards my future, I contrived to get away, and went as fast as I could on board my ship for refuge, never landing again during our stay at Buenos Ayres. Fortunately, shortly afterward, we were ordered away, and so ended my love affair. I shall never forget the melancholy, woebegone faces of my captain and brother officers on our reassembling on board. It was really most ludicrous. However, a sea voyage, which included several sharp gales of wind, soon erased all sad memories; things gradually "brightened," and ere many weeks passed all on board H. M. S. —— resumed their usual appearance.—From a London Exchange.

A Misunderstanding.

A fashionably dressed lady entered a bobtail car the other day, and as she accepted a seat an obliging passenger vacated for her accommodation, she noticed that a gentlemanly appearing man, who sat directly across the aisle, was extending his hand toward her cordially. Without taking the trouble to determine who the supposed acquaintance might be by a closer scrutiny of his features, the lady grasped the extended hand and shook it vigorously, at the same time going right along settling her draperies to her critical satisfaction. When this was accomplished, she glanced up with a beaming smile to 'greet the owner of the well-shaken hand. To her astonishment and horror she gazed into the face of a total stranger. The hand was dropped with startling velocity.

"Why, sir," she exclaimed, crimson with anger, "I never saw you before in all my life."

"I am aware of the fact, madam," was the cool reply; "I only wished to accommodate you by passing up your fare."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Some Social Nuisances.

The fellow at the club who whacks the table every time he makes a point in conversation, and then curses because he has hurt his fist.

The chap who tells you why he has his clothes made in London, how much they cost, and what lord has a suit from the same piece.

The impecune who not only borrows your money, but insists on telling you what he needs it for, though you know he is lying all the time.

The fervent individual who, when he is introduced to you, immediately tells you how well he knows all the members of your family whom you hate, and what a good sort they all are.

The elderly person who trumps every remark you may make by observations of his own commencing with, "When you have had my experience——"

The young man with the vacant eye who, if he meets you twenty-four times in every twelve hours, always asks, "Haw, old fellow, what's new, hay?"

Buffalo Infancy.

"Is my sleigh here?" said a 10-year-old boy to Sergt. Kennedy, in station house No. 1 yesterday afternoon. "Your sleigh," replied the officer, "what would bring your sleigh here?" "Why, don't you know," said the juvenile, "me and Kinney and Mary Ann was caught stealin' iron down at de Howard Iron Works and got pulled in." "Were you fined?" asked the sergeant. "Cert," said the boy, "tree dollars apiece. Why, dere's my sleigh, over dere; I know it by that chip out os de top." It was his sleigh all right enough, and this lad seemed to take a sort of pride that he and Kinney and Mary Ann were far enough advanced to be fined.—Buffalo Courier.

LONDON World: The Canadian Remount Commission has handed in a sort of preliminary report, for the information of the military authorities, pending the completion of the more detailed document, which is to go exhaustively into the question of the Dominion horse supply. It is satisfactory to know, in view of certain rumors that are abroad, that both the Duke of Cambridge and Lord Wolseley express themselves sensible of the good work done by Colonels Ravenhill and Philips, and it is believed that the inquiry will result in much benefit alike to the army and the Canadian colonists. The latter have a grand field of enterprise open to them, if they have but the good sense to develop it; and they owe the discovery to the Army Commissioners.

How to Have a Dress Made.

(Mrs. Bowser, in Detroit Free Press.)

What Mr. Bowser didn't know about dressmaking up to a week ago wasn't worth knowing. What he doesn't know now would fill a large sized book. I was fretting about the delay on the part of my dressmaker, when he suddenly turned on me with:

"Mrs. Bowser, it's all infernal nonsense. When I order a suit of clothes they are ready for me at the date set, and if there is any reason why a dressmaker can't do business on business principles, I want to know it."

"But I can't help it," I protested.

"No; you can't! You women are fools to be imposed upon as you are! I'd like to see one of these dressmakers bamboozle me around the way they do you!"

"But you don't wear dresses."

"For which thank heaven! There is more nonsense about selecting a dress and having it made up than is seen in an idiot asylum in a year. I tell you, it's all bosh!"

"You might select my dress goods for me."

"Oh! I might! Well, hang me if I don't! Yes, sir, I'll go down this very afternoon and buy you a new dress, and I'll follow the cloth until you have it on your back! I'll show you, Mrs. Bowser, that business is business."

He began operations after dinner. Mr. Powser has an alarm clock which goes off to the minute. He, therefore, argues that everybody else ought to go off with the same promptness and dispatch. He jumped off the car and rushed into a dry goods store and said:

"Give me twelve yards of stuff or a dress—quick?"

"Calico or silk?" queried the clerk.

"Why, silk, of course. You may give me two shades—six yards in a shade. I'll take green and blue."

"But no one can get a dress out of twelve yards of silk, and as for the colors—"

"They can't, eh?" howled Bowser; "my mother never had over twelve yards for a dress, and twelve has got to make one for my wife. The colors are all right."

The clerk gave him what he asked for, and Bowser rushed home and flung the package in my lap with:

"Been gone just thirty-seven minutes by the watch, while you would have been fooling around three afternoons. There's twelve full yards, and if you have any pieces left you can line my overcoat sleeves."

"Twelve yards! Why, I never got less than twenty-three! Don't you see how narrow the silk is?"

"Um! I thought it was sheeting-width, of course. That's another fraud I'm going to look to."

"And the shades—I can't wear 'em—no one could."

"You can't! Well, you will, all the same! This talk about matching the complexion with dress goods is the twaddle of idiots! If green and blue won't hit you, then let her miss! It's my taste, and I think I know what belongs to harmony. We'll go down after supper and get the dressmaker to begin work."

"But I know what she will say."

"Oh! you do! Well, you leave that to me. I'm bossing this job, Mrs. Bowser, and I'll learn you a thing or two before you get through."

After supper we drove down-town to a dressmaker's. As we got out of the carriage Bowser charged me to keep my mouth shut and let him do the talking, and I cheerfully promised obedience. He carried the bundle under his arm, and as we entered the shop he asked:

"Will you take a contract to build Mrs. Bowser a dress and have it finished at a certain date?"

"Let me see the goods," she replied; but no sooner had she opened the package than she asked:

"Is it some fancy skirt for the circus ring?"

"Circus ring!" he whooped; "what is there about these goods to remind you of a circus ring?"

"The colors."

"Mrs. Bowser," he said, as he turned to me, "we will go elsewhere. It is evident that this person has come out of some door-knob factory to take up dressmaking."

At the second place the dressmaker smiled as she saw the colors, and replied that she wouldn't think of beginning work without twenty-four yards of silk at hand.

"Then you'll never begin!" exclaimed Bowser. "It's high time the long-suffering public kicked against this dressmaking robbery. When I buy twelve yards of silk for a dressmaker to steal you can expect I'm going to die the next week."

The third dressmaker seemed to understand the situation at a glance. She opened the silk, rolled it up again and calmly but firmly said:

"I am very busy just now. You'd better take it to some blacksmith shop."

Then we went home for the night. Bowser was mad and wouldn't speak to me, and as he slept he dreamed of dressmakers, and I overheard him saying:

"Colors! I tell you it's all bosh! How many horses and cows do we see of four or five colors!"

The next day we visited twelve other dressmakers. Two of them called Mr. Bowser an old fool, and four others laughed in his face, while the other six refused to have anything to do with the dress. When we left the last place he said:

"Mrs. Bowser, I'm a man who can't be bulldozed. Those dressmakers have formed a ring to steal cloth and keep up prices, I'll beat 'em at their own game. We'll wait until we go to New York and then buy a ready-made dress."

When we got home he called the cook into the sitting-room and gave her the silk, and she thanked him kindly and added:

"It comes in very handy, Mr. Bowser, for my sister is a tight-rope performer and wants a new pair of silk tights."

I couldn't help laughing, and Mr. Bowser hasn't spoken to me since.

KISSES AND KISSERS.

Little Incidents, Actual and Imaginative, About Billing and Cooing.

Petruchio gave his bride a kiss of enormous calibre. We are told that he "kist her lips with such a clamorous smack that at the parting all the church echoed." The kiss given by the Duchess of Devonshire to a butcher for his vote has almost a world-wide reputation. The butcher was bold and ingenious enough to demand a kiss for the price of his vote. It was gracefully given, and the kissee became known as the Butcher Steele who kissed the Duchess. He thus increased his trade and gained historic fame. I should like to know the opinion of the Duchess as to the difference in flavor of a duke's kiss and a butcher's. It is stated that Voltaire was once kissed in a theatre by the beautiful Countess de Villars. The pitites, in their enthusiasm for the great writer, compelled her to give him a salute. Almost every one has heard of the first kiss given by Dominie Brown to his sweetheart, Janet, after a courtship of seven years. One evening, as they sat together in the customary solemn silence, Mr. Brown summoned courage and said: "We've been acquainted now for seven years, and I've never gotten a kiss yet. D'ye think I might tak' wan, my bonnie girl?

"Just as you like, John; only be becoming wi' it."

"Surely, Janet, we'll ask a blessing. For what we are about to receive, Lord make us truly thankful."

The kiss was taken, and the worthy divine, overpowered by the blissful sensation, rapturously exclaimed: "Oh, Janet, it is gude. We'll return thanks." Six months afterward they were married.

Every one remembers the famous kiss imprinted by Mr. Bumble on the "chaste nose" of Mrs. Corney, and the still more famous kiss applied to the lips of Mary, the pretty housemaid, by Sam Weller. The latter event is thus amusingly described in "Pickwick:"

"Get your hat, Sam," said Mr. Pickwick.

"It's below stairs, sir," said Sam, and he ran down after it. Now, there was nobody in the kitchen but the pretty housemaid, and as Sam's hat was mislaid he had to look for it, and the pretty housemaid lighted him. They had to look all over the place for the hat. The pretty housemaid, in her anxiety to find it, went down on her knees and turned over all the things that were heaped together in a little corner by the door. It was an awkward corner. You couldn't get at it without shutting the door first.

"Here it is," said the pretty housemaid; "this is it, ain't it?"

"Let me look," said Sam.

The pretty housemaid had stood the candle on the floor. As it gave a very dim light Sam was obliged to go down on his knees before he could see whether it was really his hat or not. It was a remarkably small corner, and so—it was nobody's fault but the man's who built the house—Sam and the pretty housemaid were necessarily very close together.

"Yes, this is it," said Sam; "good-by."

"Good-by," said the pretty housemaid.

"Good-by," said Sam; and as he said it he dropped the hat that had cost so much trouble in looking for.

"How awkward you are," said the pretty housemaid; "you'll lose it again if you don't take care."

So, just to prevent his losing it again, she put it on for him. Whether it was that the pretty housemaid's face looked prettier still when it was raised toward Sam's, or whether it was the accidental consequence of their being so near to each other, is a matter of uncertainty to this day; but Sam kissed her.

"You don't mean to say you did that on purpose?" said the pretty housemaid, blushing.

"No, I didn't, then," said Sam, "but I will now." So he kissed her again.

"Sam!" said Mr. Pickwick, calling over the banisters.

"Coming, sir," replied Sam, running upstairs.

"How long you have been!" said Mr. Pickwick.

"There was something behind the door which perwented our getting it open for ever so long, sir," replied Sam.

And this was the first passage of Mr. Weller's first love.—From London Tid-Bits.

OUR TOWNSHIP FATHERS

First Meeting of the New Township Council of Artemesia.

Flesherton, Jan. 17, 1887.

Precisely at 11:20 to-day, Monday, the following gentlemen took their seats in the Town Hall, around the Council Board:—

Dr. Christoe, Reeve, at the head of table; Messrs. John Boland, John McArthur, Wm. Sharpe, and Arch. Cairns, Councillors for Wards, 2, 1, 3, and 4 respectively. On the left of the Reeve sat the genial Township Clerk, with a formidable batch of correspondence and papers piled up "forninst" him. On the right of the Reeve, at a table prepared specially for him sat the Agricultural Editor of the FLESHERTON ADVANCE "alone in his glory."

Minutes of last meeting in 1886 read and approved.

Messrs. John Boland and John McArthur were appointed Deputy-Reeves of Artemesia for the year 1887.

Moved by Mr. McArthur seconded by Mr. Sharpe that the Clerk be instructed to receive applications for the office of Assessor up till 10 o'clock a. m., Feb. 7th next.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Boland seconded by Mr. McArthur, that the Collectors for the past year be paid $26.00 each, being the amount of their salary and expenses. —Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Boland, that the petition of George Binnie and three others be not entertained now as it does not meet the requirement of the Statute.—Carried.

The following By-laws were carried through the various stages and passed, viz., By-law 407, to appoint Auditors; and By-law 408, to appoint Health Officers.

On motion by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, the following accounts were ordered paid, viz., M. Riley for use of hall for polling, $4. A. R. Fawcett, printing, $12.75. H. Meldrum, for services in Ward 4, services of Constable and firewood, $5.75. Thos. Boland, for services of self, poll clerk and constable in Ward 2, $7.50. Alex. Brown, for services of self, poll clerk and constable, and rent of polling booth, Ward 4, $11.50. W. J. Bellamy, services of self, poll clerk and constable in Ward 2, also delivering ballot boxes to D. R. officers, $14.50. W. J .Bellamy quarter salary as Clerk, $37.50; also $6.80 for stationery, &c. John Rutherford, stationery, &c., $16.24.

Auditors.—Messrs. Thos. Boland and Henry Meldrum were appointed Auditors for current year.

Health Officers.—Messrs. S. Damude, G. Buskin, Wm. Suggitt, Dr. Christoe, and W, J. Bellamy were appointed Health Officers.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharpe, that the Reeve and Mr. Boland be a Committee to inquire into the sufficiency of the Treasurer's securities.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Cairns, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that Mrs. Hanley's taxes for 1886 be refunded.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Boland, seconded by Mr. McArthur, that Robt. Whitten be refunded $6.20, James Beecroft $3.77, on D. S. Munro's personal property, taxes 1886 —Carried.

Moved by Mr. Sharpe, seconded by Mr. Cairns, that the Council meetings be held on the first Monday of every month commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. sharp this year, unless otherwise directed.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharpe, that the Reeve issue his order for this days session of Council and Indigent monthly allowance.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Boland, that Messrs. Cairns and Sharp be appointed Commissioners re Valley Road in lieu of Messrs. Pickle and McKee.—Carried.

Petition of J. W. Bates and others, re Pheobe and Norman Boyles, referred to Reeve and Mr. Sharpe.

Acct. from B. Colman, for use of schoolhouse 1886-7, $8, was laid over.

[The following resolution was unanimously carried and the Clerk instructed to forward a copy to the deceased gentleman's relict, Mrs. A. Elliott.—Ed.]

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE:

RESOLVED, That this Council, at this, its first opportunity, desire to express their heartfelt sorrow at the sudden and unexpected death of your husband. His general urbanity and integrity, pertaining to matters of the Township, make us feel that the Township has suffered a very great loss, and the institutions therein a firm and constant friend. This inscrutable providence leaves us only the privilege to tender you our warmest sympathy in your severe loss; and we earnestly recommend you to the care of the Husband of the widow and Father of the fatherless, who will most assuredly support and guide you in this your sore affliction if you lean on his arm for wisdom and strength.

Council adjourned.

Military.

Colonel Otter, Deputy Adjutant General of Military District No. 2, accompanied by Captain Campbell, arrived by Monday evening's train for the purpose of inspecting the arms and accoutrements of No. 6 company, 31st Batt. Lieut. Field was at the drill shed to receive them and the inspection was at once proceeded with. The arms and accoutrements, which are under Lieut. Field's special care, were found to be in first-class order; and, at the conclusion, Col. Otter expressed his satisfaction at result of his first inspection of the armory of No. 6 Company. The D. A. G. left on Tuesday morning for Durham to inspect the Armory of No. 4 Company at that place.

Priceville Heard From.

Letter from Prowler.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—Having just returned from what Josiah Allan's wife call a "tower," my best friend thrust a copy of the ADVANCE into my hand, exclaiming as I thought—"The Dickens is in you!" "The Dickens in me," I said. "No," said he "Dixon is into you fellers!" And lo! and behold! nearly two columns taken up to tell what a man with average intelligence could put in a few small paragraphs. In the language of Goldsmith,

"Still I gazed and still the wonder grow,
That one small head could carry all he knew!"

The inhabitants of Priceville are quite capable of looking into their own interests, especially when they have a shoddy school teacher to deal with. When driven to it, they use strong tests.

Mr. Dixon insinuates that the whole thing was got up by two or three for spite. Now, Mr. Editor, the petition asking his removal was presented by about forty ratepayers and signed by thirty-five —a large percentage was it not? The fact is, Mr. D. finds himself cornered and beaten by those "pigmy-souled little growlers," and we are not surprised at the expressions he uses of "lie" and "falsehood," as those are pet phrases of his, when beaten in debate, or cornered in argument, and he was always beaten by the Priceville boys.

Mr. Dixon speaks of the opinion of Christian gentlemen. Was it the one who drew up the first petition for his removal in an underhanded manner? And when his confreres wanted everything done openly and above board, he then went over to the "anti-clique."

The Prowler is pleased to learn that Mr. Dixon is ashamed of his skeptical views, so long held and so often expressed; and while he does not want to pay a market value for anything he may require, as an example he tramped the village and country for three days, looking for cheap board and lodging—not being willing to pay more than $39 per year for accomodation. At the same time he was drawing a salary of $420 per year. I think if Mr. D. gets curried down in this vigorous manner by a few more of the shop-keepers, as Mr. Riley has handled him, he will not only wish his head in that lion's mouth, but will feel small enough to crawl in, body and boots!

PROWLER.

Letter from Mr. Brander.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Sir,—I noticed recently a communication over the signature of W. L. Dixon, re Priceville School, in which he makes some low insinuations and casts uncalled for reflections on Priceville shop-keepers. I would inform him, in his ignorance, that there are just as reliable, staunch, and intelligent men and women shopkeepers as there are teachers in this county; and Mr. Dixon is not the model we care to copy. He takes exception to "Prowler," re his religious opinions, or, rather, the want of them. Why, before Mr. Dixon was in the school three months, I had it from an unquestionable source, that he held such skeptic views; and have since heard the same from other sources. Have also myself heard Mr. Dixon express the same opinions. If the statement be false, he himself must be the father of it.

Thanking, you, Mr. Editor, for this space, I remain,

Yours truly,
JAMES BRANDER.

[An opportunity will now be afforded Mr. Dixon to reply to the above letters, after which we shall close our columns to any further discussion of the subject—the matter having now been, we think, thoroughly ventilated.—ED. ADVANCE.]

Forcible, But Expressive.

On a recent occasion a minister was reviewing the quarterly work of the Sunday school. Desiring to illustrate the soul to his little hearers, he held up his watch and explained its workings.

"Now," he said "what is it in you that tells you to work, or study, or play, as the case may be?"

One little hand went up.

"Well, what is it?"

"The brain."

"Right. Now tell what it is back of the brain that makes it work?" expecting some one to answer the soul.

The same little hand waved anxiously in the air.

"I see you are a studious little fellow," said the minister with an encouraging smile. "Now tell your less fortunate companions what it is back of the brain that makes the brain act. That is, what it is that thinks through the brain."

"Guts!" was the shrill reply.

The preacher sat down greatly discomfited, amidst a perfect roar of laughter.

That "Ungentlemanly" Reply.

To the Editor of The Advance.

DEAR SIR,—I must beg your patience once more for a short reply to your Manitoba correspondent. I am sorry indeed to find that I was guilty of an "ungentlemanly act in pronouncing adverse judgement upon the parody emanating from that gentleman. My "reply" was written, not alone with the idea of calling in question the veracity of your correspondent, but as a satire upon our own country as well, which he extolls so highly. He sees very little that is good in the South. Now, I hold that, owing to physical suffering, of which he has been a victim for many years, he was incapacitated for acquiring an impartial and "unbiased" opinion of Southern climate and Southern capabilities. Although I have not had the good fortune to personally visit the Southern states, I have had the perseverance to read a number of standard writers on the subject, who could have no possible object in magnifying the good features of the country; and I must say that when I read your correspondent's parody I was struck with the conviction that his was simply a local observation, if not exaggerated— based upon no wide experience—and applied to all the Southern States. For instance: were a man dropped from a baloon upon the alkaline plains of Nevada he would not be in a position to pronounce an assay upon the mineral ore contained elsewhere in that state, nor even swear that there was a silver lode within a thousand miles. He would be fully convinced that it was solely a desert land, wholly unfit for human occupation. We could not blame him for stating his convictions, but we might be pardoned for swallowing his statements cum granum salis, and, if he were a reasonably man, without having it considered an "ungentlemanly" act to take the salt.

From a critical point of view I cannot accept the statements in that parody except as a "parody" upon the truth. I will give just one reason for my skepticism and then my case is completed. The sunshine, he states distinctly, is "seven times hotter than the heat of a midsummer in the middle or the Northern States."

The medium heat of our hottest weather is not below 85 degrees; that multiplied by 7 makes 595 of heat! Now, I leave it to the Agricultural Editor of THE ADVANCE if that information isn't a little hard to take without a grain of salt—or ice? It may be for the good of mankind in general to know that a country has been found thrice as hot as any Humboldt came across in his journey to the equatorial regions of South America, or Baker to the Albert Nyanza, but that wouldn't deter me from visiting it, if, as I remarked before, the country had not developed earthquakes to such an alarming extent as it has during the past year, even as far north as Virginia.

We understand that the annual meeting of South Grey Conservative Association was held in Durham week before last. We only ascertained this fact on Tuesday. It would be much better if such meetings were more widely advertised.

Why and how is it that Russell's noted jewelry store, Flesherton, does the best trade in this section? Because their goods are bought for cash and the goods are sold at lower prices than elsewhere, and the people know it now.

Mr. Sample maintains that what he said about Washington Territory was substantially correct. Mr. Moore might not be losing money in a way, but assuredly he was not making any at present. Mr. Sample says he is prepared to prove all his other statements by persons who have been in that country, Mr. Duncan to the contrary notwithstanding.

The recent freshet, or "January thaw," as some call it, struck the town of Collingwood with great force, and for the time being the place might have been likened unto Venice, were it not for the absence of the orthodox "gondolas." In our mind's eye we fancy we see Messrs, Chislett, Brady and Ward paddling along the streets in wash-tubs, pails, &c. Collingwood ought to be moved over to Flesherton, where a chance would be afforded it to get the water out of its ears!

Accident.

While playing foot-ball one day last week, George Cruickshank—a lad about 15 years of age—had his leg broken by another boy. The accident occurred at the Heathcote school. One of young Cruickshank's comrades made a terrific kick at the ball which missed its aim and came with full force in contact with Cruickshank's leg, breaking the latter and dislocating the ancle as well.

"Queen of Elocutionists."

Miss Jennie McGarry, of Montreal, who is generally acknowledged to be the queen of Canadian elocutionists, will furnish the people of Flesherton and neighborhood with a grand "Literary Evening," under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of this place, in the Town Hall, Wednesday evening of next week, Feb. 2nd,

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

Miss McGarry, as an elocutionist, has no superior in Montreal.—Daily Witness.

The Dramatic Reading of Miss McGarry at the William Molson Hall, was touchingly and faithfully rendered.—Montreal Herald.

Miss McGarry read with spirit and effect, giving to her words an intense reality, which carries the minds of the vast assemblies over time and space to the actual scene.—Montreal Gazette.

She can bring tears or roars of laughter from her audience at will. No one ever pleased a St. Thomas audience better.—St. Thomas Times.

Miss McGarry, of Montreal, is an elocutionist of ability, and possesses a rich mellow voice, which enhances the charm of her naive manner. Her imitation of church bells in the "Creed of the Bells" was cleverly done. In the courtship scene of Shakespeare's "Henry V.," between the Plantagenet King and Queen Catherine of France, she displayed a thorough mastery of the French language.—Toronto Globe.

Speaking of Miss McGarry—whom he very warmly eulogizes—the distinguished pastor of the Metropolitan church, Toronto, Rev. E. A. Stafford, says:—"I have heard her favorably compared with Mrs. Scott-Siddons as an artiste, and there is nothing in her entertainments unsuitable to be employed by Church Societies."

Tickets of admission: adults, 20 cents; children, 10 cents; lady and gentleman, 30 cents. Tickets can be procured in Flesherton at Wright's store, Russell's jewelry store, the Post Office, Gordon's harness shop, the ADVANCE Office, or from members of the W.C.T.U.

Supper in Oddfellow's Hall.

The oyster supper given in their beautifully furnished hall last Monday evening, by the members of Dufferin Lodge, I. O.O.F., was assuredly a very grand affair. It was found necessary to use the Masonic hall, as well as their own, in order to accommodate the large gathering which had assembled to do honor to the Oddfellows spread. The oysters, coffee and other refreshments were served in the dining room connected with the Masonic hall, which gives an idea of the good feeling that exists between these societies. Among those of the brethren who were most courteous and attentive to guests, we might mention Messrs. Joseph Blackburne, John Whitten, A. S. VanDusen, C. J. Leitch, R. J. Hannah and James Sullivan. The I. O. O. F. occupies a front rank among the charitable institutions of this country. Long may it flourish.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Miss Young, of Thornbury, is visiting friends here.

Miss Bell, of Meaford, is the guest of Mrs Wm. McConnell.

Miss Thurston, of Guelph, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Aldons.

Miss S. E. McQuilkin, of Kimberley, is visiting friends in Mono.

Rev. Torthing, of Durham, preached in the Orange Hall here on the 7th inst. He gave a very interesting discourse.

The Orange soiree came off on the 14th inst. and was a success. Addresses were given by Rev. J. S. Corcoran and Mr. F. T. Carr, of Eugenia. Instrumental music by Miss Aldons, which was good. The song, "An' sae wull we yet," by T. B. Gaudin and R. D. Carruthers, was encored by the audience. Song, "Wouldn't you like to know," by Miss Thurston, of Guelph, received with great applause.

Mr. Thos. Gilray, District Master, occupied the chair and gave a short but interesting address.

On Friday evening, 21st inst., a number of friends from Thornbury gave a grand concert in the Methodist church here, proceeds applied to the Union Sabbath School. Those friends have the hearty thanks of the school.

DEATH'S HARVEST.

Sudden Death of James Carnahan, Sr., James Hopps, and David Grier.

Scarcely had the excitement, caused by the startling announcement of the death of Archibald Elliott, subsided, when news reached us in rapid succession of the death of our life-long old friend, James Carnahan, Sr., of Thornbury, of our friend and townsman James Hopps, and of our young friend, David Grier, of Priceville. Swiftly has the angel of death passed over this section of our county—warning all of the near approach to the eternal world, ushering many "through the valley and the shadow of death," from whose bourne no traveller e'er returns."

JAMES CARNAHAN, SR.

The manly form and genial countenance of the subject of this sketch has been familiar to the Editor of THE ADVANCE since his earliest recollection. He was one of the grand and sturdy old pioneers of the county of Grey, who will be held in grateful remembrance by the first settlers of the Township of Euphrasia, and the memory of whom will ever be fondly cherished by their children. James Carnahan, sr., was an honest man, a good neighbor, a true friend, a loyal citizen and an unostentatious but zealous Christian gentleman. And, although the material body is no more, he leaves behind him in this world that which is more desirable than great riches—a good name. Sunday morning, the 16th inst. he appeared to be in his usual good health. He was out in his barnyard, giving some instructions to one of his sons, when he suddenly fell and almost instantly expired. Thus, at a good old age—seldom reached by the majority of the human family—James Carnahan passed suddenly into the kingdom of Heaven. He leaves behind him a wife and large family to mourn his loss.

JAMES HOPPS.

Deceased was a resident of our town, and although he labored under the most adverse circumstances, we believe he tried to live as a good Christian should. He overheated himself while doing some work for the Editor of this journal, and then walked some distance out into the country in the teeth of a piercingly cold wind. He became thoroughly chilled, went into the house of his brother-in-law, Mr. Holley, and after some time was obliged to go to bed. Inflammation of the lungs, accompained by a high fever, set in and notwithstanding all the efforts of his physician, Dr. Christoe, he only lingered a few days. On Thursday, 20th inst., shortly after dinner, he breathed his last. He was unconscious for many hours before his death. On Sunday last his remains were followed to the Flesherton cemetery by a very large concourse of citizens and others. Deceased having been an Orangeman was buried by the brotherhood, a goodly number of whom were present in full regalia. The casket was borne on the shoulders of four members of the lodge of which deceased had been a member. Rev. W. Ayers officiated at the late residence of deceased and also during the preliminary ceremony at the grave. Flesherton Band preceded the cortege, and played some very beautiful and solemn airs. In the evening the Methodist church here was crowded with people—the Orangemen occupying front seats in full regalia—when Rev. Mr. Ayers preached a practical and interesting funeral sermon from the words "Prepare to meet thy God."

Deceased leaves a wife and family who should receive the substantial sympathy of the community in this dark hour of their affliction.

DAVID GRIER.

The subject of this notice was very suddenly stricken down by an unusually severe attack of bilious fever. He lived only a few days after the first attack. Deceased was the eldest son of the late N. B. Grier, Esq., merchant of Priceville, and possessed many sterling qualities of mind and heart. He was one of the most popular young men in the community and will be much missed by a large number of friends and acquaintances. His remains were conveyed to Mount Forest on Sunday and laid to rest beside those of his father. Had it not been for the terrible condition of the roads, quite a number of members of the Sons of Temperance Division in this town would have attended in order to pay the last tribute of respect to their late worthy brother.

OTHER DEATHS.

We learn that there were two very sudden deaths in the neighborhood of Markdale, but have not been able to glean particulars.

MODERN MIRACLES.

Dr. Charcot's Experiments on Nervous Patients.

EXTRAORDINARY RESULTS.

Complete Cures Obtained by Means of Hypnotism.

A Paris despatch says: A series of the most extraordinary experiments in hypnotism, made, under the direction of Dr. Charcot, by his assistant, Dr. Babinski, of the Salpetriere Hospital, surpass all hitherto conceived possibilities in medical science and causes a profound sensation in Parisian society. These experiments prove as perfectly practicable the transmission by magnetism from one person to another of certain nervous phenomena, such as dumbness, paralysis of the legs and arms, violent pains and coxalgia, and the final elimination of the evil from the original sufferer. These cures seem at first sight to be nothing short of miracles, and certainly they equal in dramatic intensity many cases narrated in the New Testament. As many fantastic and more or less exaggerated accounts of these experiments have appeared in the Parisian papers, I resolved to go at once to the fountainhead authority, and called upon the famous Dr. Charcot himself at his magnificent mansion, on the Boulevard Saint-Germain.

Passing through the hall, worthy the artistic taste of a Medici, I entered the large waiting-room. It was decorated with historic relics from the most ancient cathedrals of Europe. In this room on the floor was spread an Oriental carpet. There were forty or fifty patients waiting their turn to be summoned into the great man's sanctum. Many of the patients were violently afflicted with nervous diseases, and some of them jerked their heads about and contracted their muscles in the most startling manner.

Dr. Charcot said—"All sorts of exaggerated accounts have appeared about the experiments in transmission by hypnotism. In fact, unless the public are provided with precise information in matters of scientific discovery, they naturally mistake the North Pole for the South Pole, and error and confusion become widely disseminated."

"Will you give me," I asked, "a statement making clear to the public mind the exact state of medical science concerning hypnotic discoveries?"

"Certainly," replied Dr. Charcot. "These experiments are conducted under my general direction by Dr. Babinski. This is how Dr. Babinski carries them on: The subjects are seated back to back and a magnet is held to the side of one of them. It is not necessary that there should be actual contact between the subjects, but if there is the transmission is more rapid than when they are at a certain distance from one another.

TRIAL OF GIRL PATIENTS.

"The experiments of Dr. Babinski must be divided into several categories. To the first category belong experiments made on two young girls who suffered from hysterical epilepsy and exhibited all the phenomena of extreme hypnotism as they have been described by me. The patients were first hypnotized. Then Dr. Babinski produced, first in one and then in the other, different apparent hysterical symptoms of paralysis of the arm and of the leg, coxalgia, dumbness, etc. The patient thus attacked by an artificial hysterical affection is brought into rapport with his companion, near whom the magnet has been placed. In a few moments a transfer takes place—the symptoms disappear in No. 1 patient and reappear at the same instant in No. 2. They pass thus from one to the other. Moreover, it is easy, by suggestion, to rid No. 2 patient of the affection.

HOW MALADIES MAY BE CURED.

"In a second category of experiments M. Babinski took male or female patients presenting different phases of hysteria, not artificially induced in this case, but manifested spontaneously—that is to say, independently of all suggestions—such, in fact, as led to the admission of the patients in question into the hospital. He then placed them in rapport with one or the other of the subjects of experiment referred to above. These he hypnotized preliminarily, and at their side put the magnet. The hypnotized subject thereupon at once displayed the same manifestations of hysteria as those of the patient at whose side he had been placed. But the latter retains his malady at the end of the experiment.

"M. Babinski then, by suggestion, relieves the hypnotized subject of the affection that has been transmited to him, and resumes the experiment. By repeating the manœuvres a number of times more or less considerable he has succeeded in several cases in bringing about an attenuation and even a complete cure of the malady."

OTHER CASES OF SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT.

"Here, for instance, are a few of the observations made by M. Babinski: In two cases he obtained a complete cure of hysteric dumbness; one of them was of eight days' and the other of two months' standing. He succeeded in causing the disappearance in a few days of hysteric paralysis in the right side of the body of a year's standing. In a quarter of an hour, and after four successive experiments he cured a case of hemiplegy that had arisen ten hours previously. The attempt must be the oftener repeated the older the affection happens to be.

"In a third category of experiments M. Babinski obtained the transmission to a hypnotized subject of certain phenomena associated with organic affections of the nervous system, such as softening of the brain and cerebral hemianthropia in children. These last experiments yet need completing.

M. CHARCOT'S CONCLUSIONS.

"The different experiments here discussed will be seen to have interest for psychology on the one hand and for therapeutics on the other. But M. Babinski thinks that they are not yet numerous enough to make possible the construction of any theory on the subject, and it is his intention to continue his researches. In the present state of science it is impossible to explain in any way the mechanism of the transmission in question from one subject to another. But what of that? Facts must always be accepted when they are rigorously observed, even if their inner meaning be unintelligible. Now, as the facts stated above have been ascertained with all the method and vigor that ought to be employed in scientific researches: as every cause of error—notably, the possibility of pretence—has been carefully avoided, M. Babinski has deemed it his duty from this moment to make such facts known to the medical public."

These experiments have awakened renewed interest in neurypnology, or the science of nerve sleep, and on the tables of the most fashionable salons in Paris are to be found James Braid's treatise on the subject, with the preface written by Brown-Sequard. In fact, hypnotism is the great sensation of the day.

WRECK AND EXPLOSION.

Strange Catastrophe on Board a Wrecked Schooner.

A San Francisco despatch says: The schooner Parallel, which sailed from this port for Astoria, Oregon, on Friday, was compelled to return owing to strong head winds. She reached the entrance to the Golden Gate yesterday evening, the wind had died out, and being caught by a strong tide the vessel was swept ashore at the southern end of Point Lobos, inside the famous Seal rocks and opposite the Cliff House. The life station is near by, and the crew were promptly notified and hastened to the scene of the wreck. The captain and all hands on board the schooner had taken to boats, but as it was impossible for them to make a landing on the heavy surf running they stood away for the entrance to the harbor. After being abandoned the vessel drifted in a northerly direction and into a small cove where she pounded against the rocks, and at midnight was rapidly breaking up. It was known that the vessel had a large quantity of giant powder on board, but no danger was apprehended. The men from the life-saving station, seeing that nothing could be done, and knowing that the schooner had been abandoned by the officers and crew, withdrew from the scene. They had hardly reached the station building when a fearful explosion occurred, scattering destruction on all sides. The schooner beating against the rocks had caused the powder to ignite, and the entire quantity on board, nearly 100,000 pounds, had exploded. To those living in the neighborhood the effect was frightful. The signal station was completely demolished. The life-saving station was wrecked and the west side of the Cliff House, notwithstanding its elevation, was blown out and every window pane in the building broken. The large concert room on the beach and other buildings lower down all had their windows broken and were otherwise more or less damaged. The long carriage shed adjoining the Cliff House was tumbled into a mass of ruins. Adolphe Sulros' conservatory on the heights above was shattered to atoms and all the windows in his house were broken. Three members of the life-saving crew, who had built a fire on the beach and had decided to remain near the wreck, were hurled into the air by the concussion, and were severely injured by being dashed to the earth. The remaining members of the crew who had returned to the station rushed to the rescue of their injured companions. They carried them to the station, where medical aid was procured and all else was done to relieve their sufferings.

THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

To be Founded as a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee.

A London cable says: A meeting was held in St. James' Palace yesterday of gentlemen interested in the promotion of the establishment of the Imperial Institute. The Prince of Wales presided. Explaining the object of the meeting, he said the general feeling of the people of the Empire favored the giving of some signal proof of love and loyalty to the Queen on the occasion of the jubilee of her reign. The Imperial Institute was the fittest memorial that could be erected. This would form a practical means of communicating with the colonies. He commended the idea of such an institute, which, he said, would be regarded as a centre from which the knowledge of England's commerce and industry would be extended. He relied upon assistance being found to support the institute, and predicte that it would be a lasting benefit to this and future generations.

A resolution was passed that the Imperial Institute would be a fitting memorial of the Queen's Jubilee, and directing that the people of the Queen's dominions shall be appealed to for funds to support and maintain such an institute.

John Bright and Federation.

A London cable says: Mr. John Bright, in a letter declining an invitation to attend a meeting of the advocates of Imperial Federation, on the ground that he had no sympathy with the objects and purpose thereof, asks the projectors of the movement how the proposed federation would deal with the fisheries dispute between Canada and the United States. If Canada was independent, he asserts, she would yield to the arguments of her powerful neighbor, and if there were no Dominion of Canada the dispute would soon have been settled by English concession of America's reasonable claims. The federation project, he says, is mainly the offspring of the Jingo spirit, which clamors for vast and continually widening empire, and seems almost ready to boast that the Empire can fight the world outside of its own limits. Mr. Bright says he would recommend sensible men to let the question rest.

Among the stories told at the New England dinner in New York last week was the annexed: "There was an old preacher once who told some boys of the bible lesson he was to read in the morning. The boys, finding the place, glued together the connecting pages. The next morning he read on the bottom of one page: 'When Noah was 120 years old he took unto himself a wife, who was'—then turning the page—'140 cubits long, 40 cubits wide, built of gopher wood and covered with pitch inside and out.' He was naturally puzzled at this. He read it again, verified it, and then said: 'My friends, this is the first time I ever read this in the bible, but I accept it as evidence of the assertion that we are fearfully and wonderfully made.'"

CLUVERIUS HANGED.

The Young Richmond Lawyer Pays the Penalty.

HE MURDERED HIS SWEETHEART COUSIN.

At Richmond, Va., Thos. Cluverius, the youthful lawyer, whose execution for the murder of his cousin had twice been postponed, was hanged. He died protesting his innocence.

The Cluverius-Madison case excited the greatest interest not only in Virginia, but throughout the country. The accused was a collateral descendant of President Tyler, a lawyer of good repute in King and Queen's county, and superintendent of a Sunday school. His victim, Miss Madison, was also a collateral descendant of President Madison. On the 14th day of March, 1885, her body was found in the city reservoir. Investigation showed that she arrived in the city early on the morning of the previous day and registered at the American Hotel as Miss F. L. Merton. Cluverius arrived in Richmond on the same day and registered at the Davis House in his own name. He called on "Miss Merton" at the American, but found her out. On her return she sent him a note by a small negro boy. The latter could not find Cluverius and returned the note to the clerk at the American Hotel, who kept it. The envelope was not addressed, but another was found later in the room occupied by "Miss Merton" addressed to Cluverius. It was this that led to his arrest. The note read: "I will be there as soon as possible, so please do not wait for me." After the discovery of the body and the arrest of Cluverius, who was positively identified as the man who had called upon Miss Merton twice on the 13th, it was developed that she was Cluverius' first cousin. They had lived in adjoining counties and were about the same age. She had mentioned him to some of her female friends as her sweetheart, and said that she expected to marry him. An examination of the body also developed the fact that she was in a delicate condition. There were evidences of a struggle near the reservoir embankment, and male and female footprints were clearly traceable. The dead woman's hat was found near a small-pox hospital a few hundred yards off. Her shawl was found hanging on a fence in an entirely different locality, and a bag containing her clothing was fished out of the river a mile from the place of her death. But the most important and significant find was a watch key which was positively identified by a watchmaker as the one he had made for Cluverius, while it was recognised as having belonged to him by numerous of his acquaintances. The trial was lengthy and hotly contested. It was proven that Cluverius and Miss Madison were in the neighborhood of the reservoir on the night of the murder. The suicide theory was advanced, but this was disproved by the evidences of a struggle, and the claim of the accused that he had not seen the deceased for several months was clearly shown to be false. A motive for the crime was shown in the fact that he was engaged to an heiress. The evidence was purely circumstantial. The accused's previous good character was in his favor, but it took the jury but a few moments to return a verdict of guilty. He had numerous believers in his innocence who manifested their sympathy in many ways.

SINGULARLY STRANGLED.

A Deformed Girl Meets Her Death While Exercising.

A New York despatch says: Rebecca, the 16-year-old daughter of Rev. J. R. Paxton, of the 42nd street Presbyterian Church, was strangled to death in a most singular manner on Sunday night. She suffered from curvature of the spine, and used every night an apparatus of ropes and pulleys, attached to the wall of her room, for the purpose of straightening her back. A maid servant usually assisted her in the treatment. On Sunday night the servant being absent, the girl attempted to operate the contrivance alone. Through some false movement, a brace intended to support the chin slipped and caught the young girl by the throat. She was unable to relieve the pressure, or to make any outcry, and must have died very quickly. Her body was found by her father an hour after he had bidden her goodnight, and who, seeing a light in her room later than usual, entered after calling without response, and found his daughter dead.

SWEPT DOWN A MOUNTAIN SIDE.

Two Victims of the Awful Avalanche in Montana Territory.

A Fort Keogh, Mont., despatch says: On Jan. 2nd, Tony Wise and a Swede named Martin were at work on the side of Sheep Mountain, near Cooke City, developing some mining property. A huge slide swept down the mountain and buried the two unfortunate men into eternity without a moment's notice. They were carried thousands of feet below and their bodies will not be found until the snow melts next summer.

Snow-Blocked in Montana.

A Fort Keogh, Mont., despatch says: Many stage coaches are blocked in Western Montana and numerous casualties reported. The snow is terribly deep in the mountain roads, which are impassable. On January 2nd Tony Wise and a Swede named Martin were at work on Sheep Mountain, near Cooke City, when a huge slide swept the men to eternity.

Getting Drunk in Mexico.

Mescal resembles Holland gin, and is no more intoxicating than that liquor would be. Tequila is a product of the same plant as mescal, and is made after a method that gives it the smoky taste of Scotch whiskey. As for pulque, its intoxicating qualities are not greater than those of beer.—Springfield Republican.

Two months ago young Tatro, a mere boy, was caught by a shaft in a mill in Grosvenordale, Conn. He was whirled around, his right arm was torn from the socket with such force as to send it a distance of fifteen feet, his left leg suffered a compound fracture, his right knee was dislocated and fractured, and he was otherwise fearfully bruised, and yet to-day he is alive and well.

THE DEAD STATESMAN.

Particulars of Lord Iddesleigh's Sudden Death.

TRIBUTES TO HIS WORTH.

A last (Wednesday) night's London cable says: Mr. Manners, Lord Salisbury's private secretary, says: "The moment Lord Iddesleigh came in the side anteroom he sank down upon a chair. I was in the next room. Hearing groans I went into the ante-room and lifted him to the sofa. Doctors were in immediate attendance and remedies were applied, but he never spoke. He died twenty minutes after he was taken ill." His son, Hon. Henry Stafford Northcote, was sent for, but did not reach his father until ten minutes after all was over. He left later for the Pynes, in Exeter, the family seat, to tell his mother of her husband's death. The body has been removed to the family residence in St. James' Place. There will be no inquest, the doctors certifying that death resulted from failure of the heart's action.

The Queen was deeply affected by the news of the Earl's death, and immediately sent a telegram expressing her sympathy with the widow and family. Mr. Gladstone, who always highly esteemed Lord Iddesleigh, was much affected, and, with Mrs. Gladstone, sent the following telegram: "We are sorely grieved by the news of the death of one so eminent, respected and beloved. We must reserve a more particular expression of our feelings until later."

In an interview this evening Dr. Langston said: "I was summoned to Downing street at about 3.15 p. m. On arrival I found Lord Salisbury and several gentlemen in a room with the Earl of Iddesleigh. The Earl was lying on a sofa. He was in a semi-conscious condition, and excessively pale. His eyes were closed, his pulse was scarcely perceptible and his heart was still. The pallor was that of death. I applied restoratives directly, but they were without effect. I cannot say precisely when he died. If he was not dead when I arrived he passed away soon after without a struggle. The Earl was older physically than he was in years. In his condition the cold journey from Exeter yesterday was very injurious. Without a post mortem examination I cannot say positively, but think the deceased suffered from fatty degeneration of the heart. He might bear much fatigue and excitement without ill results. There was nothing unusual in his sudden collapse. It by no means follows that the Earl was laboring under excitement."

Dr. Mortimer Granville, Lord Iddesleigh's physician, has issued a bulletin, which says: "Lord Iddesleigh for many years past suffered with cardiac affections, which, while not placing his life in immediate peril, rendered the prospect of its sudden termination only too possible. He died of syncope. The melancholy event, although startling to those around him, has not been unforeseen by his immediate friends, and it has been anticipated by his medical attendants."

Sir James Fergusson, the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in an interview said: "Lord Iddesleigh, a moment before leaving the Foreign Office, spoke to me very calmly about quitting office. He expressed the hope that our separation would not be permanent. Stanley, the explorer, was waiting to see him about the Emin Bey expedition. Lord Iddesleigh asked me to see Stanley and make another appointment for late in the evening. Lord Iddesleigh was looking well, in fact better than usual. He conversed with me very pleasantly, and when we parted he was in good spirits."

It is intended that Lord Iddesleigh's remains shall be honored by a public funeral. It is probable that on account of his death Parliament will be still further prorogued. Next to Lord Salisbury, Lord Iddesleigh was the most prominent man in the Conservative party. He was greatly trusted and highly respected by all parties. As leader of the House of Commons he was always courteous and never gave pain to an enemy. His death is not only a great loss to the Conservative party but also to the country.

TRAGEDY IN A CHURCH.

Mrs. Susan Brown Falls Dead at a Religious Revival.

An Adrian, Mich., despatch says: A religious revival has been going on for some days at the Second Baptist Church, conducted by Rev. Mr. Green, with successful results. On Tuesday night Mrs. Susan Brown, an influential member of the church, was taken with the "power," and, jumping to her feet, she shouted "Glory! Hallelujah!" and fell to the floor dead. Some minutes elapsed before the congregation realized the tragedy, and then a scene of great excitement ensued. The deceased was aged 65 years and was a slave up to the time of the Emancipation Proclamation. She has a number of children in the South, and was a worthy woman, well-known among the best families.

Brilliant Social Event at Washington.

A Washington despatch says Mrs. Cleveland's luncheon to-day in honor of the President's niece, Miss Hastings, was one of the most brilliant social events of the season. The floral decorations were beautiful. At each cover there were large corsage bouquets of pansies, some deep purple, others white and yellow. Only water goblets and others for appollinaris were at each plate. There were dainty china cups of fine ware filled with bon-bons for each lady, the cup and saucer tied together with gold or purple satin ribbon, these colors alternating, which these ladies carried away as souvenirs. Miss Hastings, who wore a pretty dress of pale blue crepe and lace, sat at the foot of the table with Miss Vilas on her right and Miss Lamont on her left. Mrs. Cleveland at the head of the table, had Miss Manning on her right and Miss Endicott on her left.

An Oxford University man insisted on keeping bees. One day a local clerical dignitary told him plainly that his bees must be sent away because a gentleman commoner had just been stung. He replied instantly: "Mr. Dean, I assure you that you are doing us a great injustice. I know the bee well. He is not mine at all, but belongs to Mr. Bigg, of Merton."

KEPT HER POST AT THE HELM.

A Brave Sailor Lass Meets Death with Spartan Heroism—The Romantic Story of a Daughter of the Sea and Her Tragic Fate.

A Victoria, B.C., despatch says: The sealing schooner Maggie Darling went ashore on Pebaloff Island last Monday night. A fierce storm was raging at the time, and when the wreck was boarded next morning her captain, who was a daring young woman, was found dead at the wheel, to which she had clung till the last. The name of this heroine was Calin Macdonald, and the story of her life was a curious one. Capt. McDonald, Calin's father, spent all his life in the seal industry. He was the owner of the Maggie Darling, and seventeen years ago Calin was born in the schooner's snug little cabin. Four years later, it is said, Mrs. McDonald eloped with a Government agent and nothing more was heard of her. Calin, therefore, spent the rest of her life on board the schooner with her father, her knowledge of the world outside its wooden walls consisting only of what she gathered on brief visits to the shores along which her father coasted. She was truly a daughter of the sea—bright, pretty and brave as a man. A thorough seaman she was, with a full knowledge of navigation, and she stood her watch with the rest of the crew, consisting of two men. About six months ago Capt. McDonald died and Calin took command of the schooner. She pursued the seal industry with an enthusiasm that surprised even the old hunters, and the sailors obeyed her even with alacrity. A gale was raging last Monday night, and heavy seas made rough weather for the schooner. With difficulty she was put about and headed for Pebaloff Islands. The seas ran higher and higher, and as night came on, H. Jackson, one of the sailors, was washed overboard. Calin stood firmly at the wheel, while Hine, the only remaining sailor, tried vainly to keep control of the sails. About midnight, in spite of the endeavors of the hapless pair, the schooner was blown on a reef and firmly wedged. At the moment, the mainmast went by the board and Hine was carried into the sea by the wreckage. He succeeded, however, in reaching the shore, after hours of exposure in the freezing waters. When morning broke the wreck was sighted and a boat's crew put out to save the skipper. As they approached the wreck it was noticed that the foremast had fallen and lay extended across the deck and over the stern. They called loudly for Calin, but no answer came and it was feared that she also had been washed overboard. Two of the crew voluntered to board the vessel, and with difficulty they succeeded, only to find the form of Calin hanging over the wheel, crushed to death. The body of the girl captain was taken on shore as carefully as the circumstances would permit, and the old salts mourned a brave lass.

A CHILD'S TERRIBLE FALL.

Dropping Sixty-five Feet and Escaping Death.

A Newburg, N. Y., despatch says: A frightful fall of 65 feet and miraculous escape from instant death occurred here at noon to-day, the victim being little Annie Barrett, the 5 years old daughter of Alfred Barrett, janitor of the post office building. Little Annie, with a still younger brother, was playing in the hall at the top of the post office building, where the family resides. From that floor to the basement a line of stairways descend with a six-foot square well hole in the centre. The stairway is protected by ballusters 2½ feet high, and, there being no one present but the child's 2-year old brother, it is conjectured she climbed upon the railing, lost her balance, fell over, and, clearing everything in her downward course, struck on the hard basement floor, 65 feet below. Her fall was heard and assistance quickly reached her. When picked up she was dazed, but in a short time she was able to speak. Her injuries consist of a broken right thigh and a lacerated head and face. Her teeth were driven through her lips and four of them were knocked out. One cut on the head measured three inches. Blood came from the nostrils in considerable quantity, but for all this if not nternally injured she may recover. Her ymptoms are favorable to-night.

A NOVEL BARRICADE.

An Eviction Stopped by a Priest in Chains.

A Dublin cable says: At Rossmanagher, County Limerick, a landlord named Desterre attempted to evict a tenant named Frost, who owed him more than £700 for rent. The police, followed by a large crowd of people, upon arriving at Frost's house found it barricaded, and outside the front entrance a huge pile of stones. In front of this pile, and securely bound to it by chains, was Father Little, the parish priest. The police surveyed the scene, and found that the priest had been chained in such a manner that an entrance to the house could not be forced without disturbing him. This they were disposed to do, but the crowd threatened to assault the police if they laid hands on the priest, and finally became so demonstrative that the police drew their batons and charged upon the people. The priest, still chained to a pile of stones, vehemently denounced the landlord, who had accompanied the police to the house, and Desterre finally agreed to settle the matter by allowing Frost to purchase his holding on the basis of an 18 years' rental.

Buried in a Snow-Slide.

A Winnipeg despatch gives the following particulars of the recent disaster to a C. P. R. train through a snow-slide in the Rockies: The train was delayed by a snow-slide east of Donald. Fortunately for the passengers the slide was not a great one, but while the majority of them remained under but a few minutes, the rest did not escape so lightly. One of the men was buried entirely out of sight for one hour and thirty-five minutes before the gang of searchers came across him. He was removed in a very weak and semi-frozen condition to a car, and with proper attention soon revived from the shock.

E. Cooper, of Santa Barbara, has proved that olive culture can be made to pay in California. He has a grove of 6,000 trees which yearly yield 50,000 bottles of excellent oil, which he sells for $1 a bottle.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Latest Fashionable and Purely Domestic Gossip.

(Cousin Kate's Weekly Budget.)

Fashion Notes.

Dark brown felt hats with flat brims are trimmed with a fold of brown velvet about the crown. A loop and loose knot of the velvet and an owl's wing in front complete the trimming.

The plaid and fancy velvets have not been a success this season, despite the many efforts made to popularize them. Striped ones, with alternate silk stripes of a little lighter shade, are much more popular.

The favorite dress for afternoon receptions is made of gray silk; one of the soft silvery shades of French gray. This is combined with plush of the same shade or brocaded silk with tones of pale blue. Scarlet is also a popular combination with these grays, and one handsome dress of gray silk had a waist of poppy-red crape.

The fawn-colored cover coats that appeared in the autumn are still seen upon the avenues on fine days and are extremely becoming, particularly when the muff and long boa are of black fur, either lynx or marten. These cover coats, however, must be made by a skilful tailor, fit accurately and be made with what are known as "tailor seams." that is, lapping over each other.

Waists which are open in the front, or low in the neck, have either long points front and back or a small point in front, and cut up over the hips with very small basques. The lower part of the basque is often concealed under a wide belt of ribbon or soft crape, which is tied on the side. When waists are low in the neck there are no sleeves, but only epaulets, with a bow or bunch of flowers on the outside.

The Russian bang, nearly straight, but slightly curled at the end, is the fashionable arrangement for the front hair; this is curved or pointed in the middle, is very short on the sides and discloses about half of the forehead. This is becoming to long faces, as it makes them look shorter and is worn alike with a low braided coil at the back or with the double eight twist high on the crown of the head.

Costumes of woollen fabrics, and even those of silk and wool, are often either perfectly plain or have only a flat band on the lower part. Dressy toilets of light material have several rows of narrow gathered silk, alternating with tulle, gauze or lace flounces to match the dress. There are two or four of these flounces, according to their width. The drapery is so arranged that these flounces are not entirely concealed.

Women receive early lady visitors in loose dominoes of wood-colored silk, with close inner sleeves of lace and long, square ones, falling to the knee, of the silk, lined with pale blue Touisine. A thick scarf of lace is tied around the throat and a "Nell Gwynne" cap of lace, copied from the portraits of that famous beauty, complete the costume. On the feet are worn brown velvet slippers embroidered with gold.

Very large plaids of blue and brown wool are combined with golden-brown velvet for warm frocks for little girls. The gathered hemmed skirt is of two breadths of wide wool, the waist is worn over a guimpe of the same material, which shows above an open square of golden-brown velvet in yoke shape, and the long sleeves of the guimpe puff out below the short elbow sleeves of the waist. For dances and children's parties are pink, pale blue cashmere frocks trimmed with moss-green velvet.

Little Tidies about the House.

A dainty spread for a baby's bed is of cream serge with pink clover blossoms strewn over it. The border is edged with pink and white cord.

A table-cover of gray-blue satin sheeting has a flight of swallows embroidered across it. The birds are worked in the natural colors and form an effective decoration.

A pretty bag for holding dusters is of cream linen, embroidered with disks in various colors. The top of the bag is faced with turkey-red, and the drawing-strings are of pink and green ribbon.

A cream plush table-cover has the border and the centre of Indian embroidery applied with gold thread in tapestry stitch. The lining is pale-blue satin, and a tassel fringe with all the tints that are found in the embroidery finishes this rich cover.

Every-Day Cooking.

None but the best butter will do in pastry.

A cake should not be moved while baking.

Never use fresh and old milk in the same cake.

It is hard to whip the white of eggs in a warm room.

Both pudding and custard should be baked as soon as mixed.

Stir butter and sugar to a cream before adding the other ingredients.

As a rule, eggs with a dark shell beat up nicer than those with a light one.

All kinds of cake are better for having the whites and yolks beaten separately.

To keep fruit cake, change it occasionally from a dry to a damp and from a damp to a dry place.

In making pastry everything should be kept as cool as possible. If the shortening is soft the crust will be heavy and solid.

Cake without butter should never be beaten, as it is sure to make it tough and leathery. Put the material together as lightly as possible, stirring it on the top, not from the bottom.

Ginger Cakes.—One cup of molasses, one cup brown sugar one cup warm water, one cup lard, two tablespoonfuls ginger, one tablespoonful soda (dissolved in water), one teaspoonful powdered alum, put in last. Mix soft; bake quickly.

Beefsteak Smothered with Onions.—Cut up six onions very fine; put them in a saucepan with two cupfuls of hot water, about two ounces of good butter, some pepper and salt; dredge in flour. Let it stew until the onions are quite soft, then have the steak broiled; put into the saucepan with onions; then simmer about ten minutes and send to the table very hot.

Soft Molasses Gingerbread.—A cupful of molasses, a cupful of sour cream, two cupfuls of flour, an egg, a large teaspoonful of ginger, two level teaspoonfuls of soda and half a teaspoonful of salt are blended to produce soft gingerbread. Put the molasses, cream, salt and ginger into a bowl. Beat the egg well. Dissolve the soda in one teaspoonful of cold water and stir the liquid into the mixture in the bowl. Add the beaten egg and then the flour, and after beating the batter vigorously for one minute pour it into two buttered shallow pans, and bake for twenty minutes in a rather hot oven.

Corned Beef Hash.—Take tender boiled corned beef, entirely free from fat or gristle; chop it fine, and mix with it chopped boiled potatoes in the proportion of one cup of beef to three of potatoes. Add enough salt to season the potatoes; pepper to your taste; mix very thoroughly together, and let it stand over night. Half an hour before the time to serve place it on the fire in an iron frying-pan, with one tablespoonful of cold water and a teaspoonful of butter to each cup of the mixture. Let this cook slowly on the back of the range, stirring frequently, if it becomes too dry, add boiling water. Taste it, and if not sufficiently seasoned throw in some pepper and salt, but very cautiously. Serve very hot.

The Irreproachable Way to Broil a Steak.—First see that the fire is clear and not too much of it; open wide all the draughts, to carry off all the smoke that is made during the process of broiling; then see that the gridiron is smooth and quite clean, rub it well with whiting or chalk, lay on your steak. Do not pound it, nor after it is on the fire stick a fork into it, or the juice will escape. Neither salt or pepper it; do that on the dish. Throw a little salt on the fire, and put over the steak; place the gridiron close on the range for the first few minutes to carbonize the surface; then turn it over quickly, to carbonize the other side. Now it should be exposed to a slower fire, to do which place two bricks on their edges, and rest the gridiron on them. The steak should be turned repeatedly and carefully, and when it feels rather firm to the touch it is rare, and if so liked it should be taken off, laid on a hot dish, on which one and a half ounces of butter have been melted, less than one-half tablespoonful of salt, a pinch of white pepper and one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, well mixed; lay the steak on one side, and then on the other. Serve immediately.

The Victims of Bothwell Brig.

At a public meeting at Kirkwall, the other day, presided over by Provost Reid, a committee was appointed to draw up an appeal for subscriptions for the erection of a monument at Moul Head, Deerness, Orkney, in memory of over two hundred Covenanters who perished there in December, 1679. The Covenanters referred to were taken prisoners after the Battle of Bothwell Brig, and on the 15th of November, 1679, were put on board the ship Crown of Leith. The vessel was overtaken in a gale off Orkney, and was wrecked. As the hatches were fastened down on the Covenanters, over two hundred of them perished, and were buried in Scarvating, Deerness, where it is proposed to place the monument. Provost Reid stated that Dr. Gunning had promised to subscribe to the extent of £50, whilst the Rev. John Henderson Thomson, author of "The Martyrs' Graves of Scotland," and others, were taking a warm interest in the movement. A suggestion made by the Rev. John H. Thomson, that an obelisk or pillar, on the base of which the names of all the sufferers could be inscribed, should be placed at a point where it could be seen from passing vessels, was very favorably received.

A Charming New Toy.

We copy from an advertisement in the London Queen an interesting account of the charms of this gladsome Japan monster: "Will go into a watch-pocket, yet blow out four feet long and as thick as a man's arm. Immediately it is released from the hand it flies all over the room, causing the greatest consternation and horror among ladies. Stroked the right way it purs with pleasure; stroked the wrong way it sends forth blood-curdling screams. This snake is always ready for mischief, and will cause more fun in five minutes than ordinary mortals deserve in a lifetime. Invaluable for parties, the most bashful young ladies invariably clutching the nearest gentleman for protection and refusing to release them until the 'monster' is removed from the room."

An Exacting Thief.

Mr. Ballam, who lately reported that he had been robbed of $115 in cash as well as other articles, says he found a note lying on his front doorstep some nights ago, written in a large straggling hand, containing the following: "Beware! I took your money. If you don't leave the town, I'll burn you out." A few nights ago another note was found on the back doorstep, which was to the effect that it would be the final warning, and advising him to leave at once. Mr. Ballam says he cannot account for such strange proceedings.—Charlottetown Patriot.

The Devil's Leaf.

At Timor, near the island of Java, there is a plant called the devil's leaf, whose petals, being of a thorny nature, possess a fatal sting when penetrating the flesh. I once met a gentleman in Honolulu who had been stung by this plant who barely escaped death, and who had a great raw sore—like that sometimes made by the stingaree of southern Pacific waters—on his left arm. He alluded to it facetiously as his strawberry mark.—New York Times.

Bismarck Sends His Autograph.

Prince Bismarck, in response to a request from the Royal Library at Munich, has sent the following autograph; "I fulfill with pleasure your wish; glad to have another opportunity of expressing the gratitude which Germany will ever feel for your magnanimous King and for Bavarian bravery, in remembering the restoration of the unity and security of Germany."—Berlin Despatch in the London Times.

It is now understood that the dudes are not wearing overcoats this winter because they have found that their corsets keep them sufficiently warm.

CURRENT TOPICS.

The people of British Columbia are complaining to the Government that notwithstanding the Chinese Restrictive Act passed two sessions ago, Chinese are still pouring into the Province. The recent census of the town of Vancouver, so states the News of that place, shows that over 50 per cent. of the adult population of that town are Chinamen. An agitation is on foot now to discourage the employment of Chinese labor as the only remedy, by boycotting the merchants and others who employ the Celestials, and thus starve them out. There appears to be, from all accounts, a floating Chinese population which drifts between Washington Territory and British Columbia, going and coming as the demand for their services may fluctuate.

Dr. William H. Gray, of West Falls, Md., is quite sure that he has at last discovered the secret of perpetual motion, and has constructed a wheel which he thinks will run forever. It derives its motion from the attraction of gravitation, a mechanical movement being placed on the wheel in such a way that the descending side is the heaviest. By the force of its action it keeps the wheel steadily in motion. The wheel is twenty-six inches in diameter by eight inches in thickness, and is mounted on a wooden frame resembling a grindstone frame. The wheel is keyed to a steel axle, which rests on brass bearings. Dr. Gray has had one of the machines at his house working steadily for the past three months. He labored twenty years over his invention.

M. Grevy receives as President of the French Republic a yearly salary of $240,000, besides the following allowances: $20,000 for heating and lighting, servants and washing, $60,000 for his entertainments and journeys, and $25,000 for the maintenance of his game preserves. With respect to the latter, it is worth while noting that the game is no longer sent to hospitals and barracks as in former times, but is sold, exempt from the octrol duty, for the private benefit of the President. The cost of his travels is always defrayed by the railway companies over whose lines he travels as a deadhead, and he has a free box at the Opera and all the theatres. The most perfect of official residences is provided for him in the beautiful and commodious Palace of the Elysee.

Not many of our readers probably are aware that the famous "Stars and Stripes" of the United States are of English origin. The East and West Junction Railway Company have published a novel guide, illustrated by photographs, under the title of "Shakspeare's Country and the Ancestral Home of the Washingtons," which speaks of Sulgrave as "the ancestral home of the Washington family, from whom sprang the renowned 'Father of his Country,' George Washington, first President of the United States, and from whose coat of arms, still to be seen in the village, the American banner—the famous 'Stars and Stripes,' took its origin * * * * lies about three miles to the southwest of Morton Pinkney, in a secluded valley on the left hand side of the road leading to Banbury. * * * * Just outside the village, standing about two fields back from the road, is the ancient manor house erected by Laurence Washington about the year 1560, still bearing on the spandrils of the outer porch his coat of arms, the 'Stars and Stripes,' inscribed on a shield with his crest, a raven, above it."

The newly-discovered goldfield at Tulpa, Tasmania, is the most exciting topic in the colony at present. The special correspondent of the South Australian Register reports on a recent date as follows: "A number of men have left the Teetulpa diggings, but the field is still thickly populated, the tents numbering from 400 to 500, and the men upwards of 1,800. Work has gone on more steadily and systematically to-day than before, and there are not so many gangs of loafers hanging about. In addition to the results from the washings, rough gold is still found in small nuggets. In different claims I have seen quantities of 9dwt., 10dwt. and 15dwt. obtained. Good prospects are being obtained from claims lying on the west bank of the creek, and not in the watercourse." The following telegram has been received by the Colonial Secretary of Western Australia from Mr. Hare, Government resident at Wyndham, dated October 14th, and despatched via Port Darwin: "Tweed, an old Queensland digger, brings news that a 40oz. nugget has been found at the Kimberley goldfields. He reports that the diggers are getting more gold than is generally supposed; £500 worth of gold was brought in last Saturday. Prospecting parties have gone up the Ord, Forrest and King Rivers in boats. A lode, supposed to be of cinnabar, 300 feet wide has been discovered. Later reports are very encouraging. A party of men have found gold six and nine miles from Wyndham, but not as yet in payable quantities. The country is being well prospected. Mr. Carr-Boyd has brought in 11cwt. of magnificent quartz, in which gold is plainly visible. The reef is about 120 miles from Wyndham. Boyd is proceeding south by the Perth."

The Belgian Government offers a prize of $5,000, to be awarded in 1889, to the author of the best work on the progress of electricity in its uses as a motor and for lighting purposes, with all applications that can be made of it for such purposes, and the economy and advantages which its use may offer. The prize is open to all nationalities, and the manuscript may be written in English, French, Flemish, German, Italian or Spanish.

At the meeting of the Eastern Dairymen's Association in Brockville recently, Mr. Blue, of the Ontario Bureau of the Statistics, brought out the curious fact that the Eastern part of Ontario gets the better of the Western part, on the score of a larger quantity of cheese to a given quantity of milk, to the extent of an aggregate of $315,000. On the other hand, the Western part of the Province, by virtue of a better average price for the whole make of cheese, gets the better of the Eastern part to the extent of about $500,000.

The Religious Tract Society has just received copies of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," which has been produced at its cost in the Japanese language. The illustrations are the work of a native artist, and are of remarkable interest as showing how well the spirit of the various characters and scenes has been caught. The Japanese makes the eighty-first language into which it is known that Bunyan's immortal work has been translated. The society is also contributing towards the cost of an edition in the Fanti tongue, spoken on the West Coast of Africa.

A decision of wide interest to travellers was rendered by the Massachusetts Supreme Court the other day. When passengers are robbed at night in a sleeping car the court holds that the sleeping car company is liable for the loss. "The company," says Chief Justice Morton, "holds itself out to the world as furnishing safe and comfortable cars, and when it sells a ticket it implicitly stipulates to do so. It is its duty to use reasonable means to guard the passenger against theft; and if through want of care the personal effects of a passenger, such as he might reasonably carry with him, are stolen, the company is liable. Such a rule is required by public policy and by the interests of both the passenger and the company."

It is likely to be long before Germany makes much headway in the three large islands of the Solomon group which she has just annexed. We know very little more about these islands than the Spaniards who discovered them. Labor ships have made terrible savages of the natives by kidnapping them to work on Queensland plantations. No white men have ever lived on the three islands except two unfortunate captives. The sufferings of one made an idiot of him, and no one knows what became of the other except that he was sold as a slave to an inland tribe. The missionaries, who have spread all over the Pacific, have never dared to live on these islands. Many of the natives are professed head hunters, an occupation that is not likely to become popular among visitors, especially as a white man's head is regarded as a gem for the finest collections.

Lord Randolph Churchill's resignation was announced in the London Times exclusively, and this is how the "Thunderer" managed to retain its "scoop:" Lord Randolph drove into Printing House Square shortly after 11 at night, and asked to see the editor. He was lodged with him for nearly an hour. As soon as Lord Randolph had been seen off the premises an order was issued to lock every door, back and front, and take the keys to the editor's room. Despatches, as they arrived through the night, were taken in at a window in the courtyard. Not a soul was permitted to leave the premises on any pretext whatever. The secret was till 2 o'clock in the morning locked in the breasts of the editor and two leader writers. The paragraph announcing the resignation and the articles commenting thereon were written and held back to the last moment. But even then, the hour being one at which other papers had gone to press, the doors were still locked, and it was not till the paper had gone to press that the doors were unlocked.

A baby and a cradle figure among the goods and chattels recently seized for non-payment of rent in Portree, Scotland. The thing seems incredible, but it is a cold fact. Here is the official list of articles seized by Alexander Macdonald, Sheriff of Inverness, on account of non-payment of rent by William McRae, a tenant of Lord Macdonald. It appeared in the Glasgow Mail:

Dresser and crockery	£0 1 6
Wooden seats	0 2 0
Cradle and child	0 0 6
Spinning wheel	0 1 0
Two beds and blankets	1 0 0
Dog (puppy)	0 1 0
Chair	0 1 0
Churn and top	0 1 0
Graip	0 2 0
In yard, quantity of corn	1 0 0
In stable, and other effects	18 0 0

All these articles were to be sold at auction after forty-eight hours. When this famous seizure was made the man McRae was at the point of death. His wife and seven children were living on potatoes alone. They were clad in rags and there was not a penny in the house.

Thirteen different religious denominations in Philadelphia have united in a movement for the evangelization of the city by means of a house to house visitation. The rector of a Protestant Episcopal church is chairman of the committee having the undertaking in charge, and a Reformed (German) Church pastor is the Secretary, while some 400 congregations are engaged in the work. The plan involves special services in each church nightly and subsequently union meetings in convenient neighborhoods. It is proposed, as far as possible, to visit every house in the city and extend a personal invitation to the inmates to attend the services at such church as they may prefer. The volunteers who do the visiting will take the names and addresses of those on whom they call, the number of children not attending Sunday School, the church attended, or, if none, the one preferred. These returns will be turned in at the end of the week to the Chairmen of the six districts into which the city has been divided, who will notify the pastors of the churches for which preference has been expressed. Those who express no preference will be considered the charge of the district chairman himself. When it seems to be required, the visitation will be repeated as often as appears advisable.

Worse Off than the Tramp.

"Gittin' pay for that?" he asked as he came along to where a man was shovelling snow.

"Not a red."

"Then you're a fool!'

"Yes, I know it, but as I own the house and lot I don't see how I'm to get around it."—Detroit Free Press.

Proof Positive.

"The teacher wanted to box my ears this morning," remarked Johnny Fizzletop.

"How do you know that he wanted to box your ears?" asked his mother.

"If he hadn't wanted to box my ears he wouldn't have done it, would he, eh?"

Mrs. Eunice Darling, of Hersey, Me., who was 101 years old a few days ago, is credited by a local newspaper with the ability to knit a pair of woollen socks in a day besides attending to her household work. She has never worn a pair of glasses in her life. The knitting part of this story will not be readily believed by practical persons who know what knitting is.

Paris Gaulois: Mr. Calino has just engaged a maidservant lately arrived from Brittany. Yesterday he asked her for some hot water. "But, sir, you have some," she replied. "I took some up to you last evening."

THE UNWELCOME BABY.

A Pathetic Little Sketch with a Moral Attached.

"Another mouth to feed," said John Allen when the new baby came.

"God never sends mouths unless he sends bread to fill them," said his employer piously.

"Aye. Only He sends the mouths to me and the bread to you," asserted John Allen.

"I guess God made a mistake when He sent that baby here," remarked John Allen, jun., aged 8, the baby himself until now.

"God never makes mistakes," answered his pale, tearful mother, the baby's only friend.

It is sad enough to many people to have to come into the world at all, but to come into a world where no one wants you; to be in everybody's way; to have your food and drink and wherewithal you shall be clothed reckoned up and grudged to you, you, poor little unwelcome babe, who would be in your place?

They christened the Allen baby by the quaint and pretty name of Barbara. Mrs. Allen hoped it would bring good luck, because it had been the name of a sweet woman who was dead—her own mother. And it reminded her of that other Barbara Allen, and the song she oftenest crooned to the baby was that old love song with its sad refrain.

I suppose the unwelcome baby ought to have been a pale, pensive child, who never smiled, if there is anything in antenatal theories. But truth compels me to say that she was not. She grew and thrived, and looked pretty in the only clothes that were hers, the cast-off and out-grown wardrobe of John Allen, jun. And she just bubbled over with laughter and cooings, and would be noted and petted, as if she had come to stay.

"You'll be late for work, John," his wife would say to John Allen.

"One more romp with little Bab," would be the answer, as he tossed her high up in his strong arms, and he kissed her again and yet again. And when the man went to his work there were smiles mixed with the crows' feet of care on his face, as he thought of the baby that at last had found its welcome. So with them all. The big sister "wasted her time" as she expressed it—as if time could ever be wasted in that way—getting down on her knees to worship that baby. And her voice grew low and soft, because of the new love in her heart. And when little Bab could toddle about you would have thought them a family of lunatics. She was their darling, their queen, their idol. Ah, it has been well said that

God in cursing
Gives better gifts than men in benediction.

When the unwelcome baby had won its crown of consecration, a voice called, and it went home through the open arms of God into the New Home, where no child is ever unwelcome.

And that was all—quite all! No surely! But
The children cried so when her eyes were shut.

Courting With a Club.

The accomplished Hottentot has a very effective way of proposing marriage. When he takes a fancy to a girl he knocks her down with a club and pops the question. If she says yes he carries her off and marries her. If she says no he picks up his club and goes off to woo somebody else.—Burlington Free Press.

Avoiding Temptation.

Woman (to tramp)—"You might saw a little wood for that nice dinner." Tramp (reproachfully)—"Madam, you ought not to throw temptation in the way of a poor man." Woman—"Temptation?" Tramp—"Yes, madam. QUESTIONABLE TACTICS.

The Grey Review has resorted to very questionable tactics in connection with the election campaign in South Grey—tactics which are not in keeping with those adopted by the founder of that journal. Surely it is a sorry spectacle when journals of any political stripe resort to unwarranted and baseless ridicule in order to bolster up the cause of a gentleman—however worthy he may be as a private citizen—whose parliamentary record has been dimmed by unpardonable blunders. If the Review seeks to add lustre to the career of Dr. Landerkin it will have to go outside the political arena for its material. Crediting an opponent with sins he never committed, and giving him "virtues" he never possessed, will not have a tendency to elevate its own candidate, or cause the people of South Grey to bury out of sight the political misdeeds of their late representative.

Dr. Jamison is quite above and beyond the criticism of the Review; and while the latter is shooting off its little pop-gun and hugging itself with the delusion that every shot is taking effect, the former moves serenely along, unconscious of the puny assaults of his journalistic opponent. It will be time for the Review to criticise Dr. Jamison when the latter has done something to merit such treatment: but not otherwise, unless it is governed by other rules than those which obtain among gentlemen of position and respectability.

The "Probable Address to the Electors of South Grey" applies with far greater force to Dr. Landerkin than to Dr. Jamison: but we would be sorry indeed to attribute all the motives, hinted at and plainly stated therein, to either of the gentlemen. In this respect the Review writer exhibits bad taste and a very large stock of that article which some call presumption, but which is designated by others by the more common and forcible appelation, "cheek." The "Address" is supposed to convey idea that the Conservative nominee is a political weathercock—ready to face whichever way the wind blows; in other words that he is "all things to all men." Never did artist paint a picture so unreal and utterly inconsistent with the "original." Dr. Jamison had the "backbone" and the manliness to boldly and emphatically inform the members of the Conservative association of South Grey, that he would support only those measures which were in the interests of all classes and conditions of his countrymen, no matter from what party they might emanate. And he had the honesty to state this before the ballot was taken. He also stated that he would never go to Ottawa bound by "cast-iron" pledges to support the party, right or wrong. Will the Review kindly contrast Dr. Jamison's position with that of Dr. Landerkin—the gentleman who felt bound to follow in the footsteps of Mr. Blake, although Sir Richard Cartwright and other illustrious gentlemen were patriotic enough, and possessed of sufficient "back-bone" to vote with the government on the Reil question, regardless of sneer or menace. In conclusion, let us suggest that the Review get up another "address" containing a full account of the speeches and voting of Dr. Landerkin on the hanging of the Metis traitor, Louis Riel, and on the "Scott Act amendment." It would form quite an interesting chapter in current literature.

Flesherton Cheese Factory.

The annual meeting of the patrons of this factory for the purpose of winding up the years business, was held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Tuesday 18th inst. The report read by the Secretary, stated that there had been delivered at the factory during the past season 668,998 lbs. of milk, from which there was manufactured 62,817 lbs of cheese which was sold for $6106.37. The total cost of running the factory was $1530.11, leaving for the benefit of the Patrons, $4576.26.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

The Annual Meeting of the Grand Division at Brampton.

The annual convention of the Grand Division of Ontario Sons of Temperance was opened Tuesday in Brampton, with a large attendance of delegates from all parts of the Province. The Grand Scribe reported that during the year 153 divisions reported, and the number of members reported was 7217. The aggregate of the year's work is as follows:

Number of new members admitted.	3580
Number of members reinstated	166
Number of members withdrawn	991
Number of members suspended	934
Number expel'd for violat'n of pledge	109
Number expelled for other causes	215
Number died	34
Number violated the pledge	131

The G. W. Treasurer's report states that the total cash receipts of the year, including $115 from the National Division for propagation purposes, was $1100, and the total payments $963, leaving a balance of cash in hand of $137. There are some outstanding accounts, however, of $594, which have to be met.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: G.W.P., Thos. Webster, of Paris, by acclamation; G.W. A., S. Holland, Bradford; G. Scribe, W. H. Bewell, Whitby; G.T., Geo.M. Rose, Toronto, by acclamation; G. Chaplain, Rev. H. S. Matthews, Pickering; G. C., L. W. Tye, Brampton; G.S., J. S. Johnston, Kingston.—Toronto World.

Artemesia Agricultural Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held in Flesherton on Thursday the 13th inst. Although the day was cold and stormy, there was a fair turn out of the members. The Auditors' Report shewed the total receipts during the past year to be $415.76, disbursements $322.63, leaving a balance on hand of $92.93. Of the total receipts, $75.75 was collected for a plowing match, of which $65.94 was expended for that purpose, leaving $9.81 as a start for another year.

The following were elected officers for 1887:—

President, R. Oliver; Vice-President, D. McMillan.

Directors:—A. Stewart, M. Reiley, J. Stewart, J. Brodie, G. Stewart, T. Conkey, D. Harrow, G. Swanton, J. Gowland Auditors:—J. Gordon, J. W. Bates.

At a meeting of the Directors, which followed, J. Brodie was re-elected Secretary Treasurer.

From our own Correspondent.

For the last three weeks, the weather has been very stormy and cold. The roads were almost impassable. Our mails have been delayed. We had only two mails from the east last week, on account of the trains being snowed up. But our January thaw has taken away the greater part of snow, and trafic is now difficult on account of the roads being too rough.

The death of D. Heron has cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood as he was a man respected by all who knew him, as a consistant Christian, a kind father and a good neighbor. His remains were laid in the Methodist cemetery, on Wednesday. The funeral sermon will be preached by Rev. W Farrier on Sunday next.

Two fires occured in our village last week, one at Mr. J. Kertons and one at the Methodist Parsonage. But they proved to be only the chimneys burning. And yet they caused quite an excitement.

The dwelling of Mr. Sanford Tuck, was flooded on Sunday and some snow shoveling had to be done to allow the family to remain in the house.

Dr. Kerr's house was also threatened with a flood, but there too, some exertions were used, to let the water off. The floods were caused by the heavy rains of Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Thomas Maxwell who went to Michigan some time ago, was expected home last week but has not yet arrived, and his friends are very anxious about him.

Our school teacher Mr. Drummond, appears to be given general satistaction and we wish him every success.

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

School Matters at Maxwell.

To the Editor of The Advance.

As Mr. James Buckingham has failed to make a reply to my letter of three weeks ago, I, as well as many others, have come to the conclusion that he has no reply to make or else he is trying to escape in the same cowardly manner that he exhibited on the day of our annual school meeting That is by having his little say on the sly.

Well if the Board of School Trustees here are a nest of rotton eggs and full of corruption why does he not expose the matter and have those guilty of such practices exposed. Surely such men as Mr. Field and Mr. Preston whose names and reputation. are above suspicion in other matters would not stoop to anything low or mean in school matters, and even if they did, would not our Secretary Treasurer and Auditors, get some hint of the transactions and check them. But no, only Mr. Buchingham and a few other seemingly ill-disposed persons have found anything wrong and they do not know what it is.

"And then the peoples money has been squandered!" Wonderful accusation. Then why did he not shew the ratepayers at the annual meeting that their money was wasted. The Auditors report was submitted and passed without a murmer. Even Mr. B. was silent. But perhaps he was afraid to speak in public and I think his actions in this matter have proved him to be a coward.

"The ratepayers are oppressed with taxes!" This too is a very serious affair. But perhaps it is music in Mr. B's. ears. There are twelve school sections in this Township and for the last year there was one section that raiseda lower rate on the dollar than we did in this section. Is it not a wonder that nearly all the ratepayers in the Township do not raise a Rebellion, But the secret of the matter is this. Mr. B. would not support a school at all, if he could help it. He thinks anything that can be passed off as a Teacher, is good enough. Or perhaps get one that would board around among the Scholars and flo up the chores night and morning, and not ask for anything else, matters might go more smoothly. Mr. B. may probably have got his education in that manner.

But the Trustees came to the conclusion that to employ a good Teacher and pay him a fair salary, was the best way of managing for the best interests of the section and I think the majority of the ratepayers will join with me in saying, our late Teacher, Mr. C. A. Chant, proved to be one of the best, and if Mr. B. had been quite anxious to receive value for the amount paid by him as a school tax, he should have attended our village school, and he would then learn that it is wrong to bear false witness against his neighbors, as morality was taught as well as other branches of Education.

But I do not suppose Mr. B will be satisfied with this, any more than our other transactions. His purpose has been to raise a disturbance and if the underhand slanderous manner which he has chosen, is any solace to his contracted mind we, will not envy him the rest he may enjoy. But it is useless to prolong this letter as the Trustees are not at all ashamed of any transactions during their terms of office, and I will now allow Mr. B. to ponder over his actions until he is entirely satisfied.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed a night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers', there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

One at a Time.

One step at a time, and that well placed,
  We reach the grandest height;
One stroke at a time, earth's hidden stores
  Will slowly come to light;
One seed at a time, and the forest grows;
One drop at a time, and the river flows
  Into the boundless sea.

One word at a time, and the greatest book
  Is written and is read!
One stone at a time, and the palace rears
  Aloft its stately head;
One blow at a time, the tree's cleft through,
And a city will stand where the forest grew
  A few short years before.

One foe at a time, and he subdued,
  And the conflict will be won;
One grain at a time, and the sand of life
  Will slowly all be run;
One minute, another, the hours fly;
One day at a time our lives speed by
  Into eternity.

One grain of knowledge, and that well stored,
  Another and more on them,
And as time rolls on your mind will shine
  With many a garnered gem
Of thought and wisdom. And time will tell,
"One thing at a time, and that done well,"
  Is wisdom's proven rule.

"Too Many of We?"

A TRUE STORY.

"Mamma, is there too many of we?"
  The little girl asked with a sigh.
"Perhaps you wouldn't be tired, you see,
  If a few of your childs should die."

She was only three years old—the one
  Who spoke in that strange, sad way,
As she saw her mother's impatient frown
  At the children's boisterous play.

There were half-a-dozen who round her stood,
  And the mother was sick and poor,
Worn out with the care of the noisy brood
  And the fight with the wolf at the door.

For a smile or a kiss, no time, no place;
  For the little one least of all;
And the shadow that darkened the mother's face
  O'er the young life seemed to fall.

More thoughtful than any, she felt more care,
  And pondered in childish way
How to lighten the burden she could not share,
  Growing heavier day by day.

Only a week, and the little Clare
  In her tiny white trundle-bed
Lay with blue eyes closed, and the sunny hair
  Cut close from the golden head.

"Don't cry," she said—and the words were low,
  Feeling tears that she could not see—
"You won't have to work and be tired so
  When there ain't so many of we."

But the dear little daughter who went away
  From the home that for once was stilled,
Showed the mother's heart, from that dreary day,
  What a place she had always filled.

The World.

The world is a queer old fellow,
  As you journey along by his side
You had better conceal any trouble you feel,
  If you want to tickle his pride
No matter how heavy your burden—
  Don't tell him about it, prey;
He will only grow colder and shrug his shoulder
  And hurriedly walk away.

But carefully cover your sorrow,
  And the world will be your friend.
If only you'll bury your woes and be merry
  He'll cling to you close to the end.
Don't ask him to lift one finger
  To lighten your burden, because
He never will share it; but silently bear it
  And he will be loud with applause.

The world is a vain old fellow:
  You must laugh at his sallies of wit.
No matter how brutal, remonstrance is futile,
  And frowns will not change him one whit.
And since you must journey together
  Down paths where all mortal feet go,
Why, life holds more savor to keep in his favor,
  For he's an unmerciful foe.

This Is All.

ROSIE CHURCHILL.

Just a saunter in the twilight,
Just a whisper in the hall,
Just a sail on sea or river,
Just a dance at rout or ball,
Just a glance that hearts enthrall—
This is all—and this is all.

Just a few harsh words of doubting,
Just a silence proud and cold,
Just a spiteful breath of slander,
Just a wrong that is not told,
Just a word beyond recall—
This is all—and this is all.

Just a life robbed of its brightness,
Just a heart by sorrow filled,
Just a faith that trusts no longer,
Just a love by doubting chilled,
Just a few hot tears that fall—
This is all—ah! this is all.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

ERNEST RUNS AWAY.

When Alston left the room, Ernest sat down on the bed again.

"I am not going to be domineered over by Alston," he said excitedly; "he presumes upon his friendship."

Jeremy came and sat beside him, and took hold of his arm.

"My dear fellow, don't talk like that. You know he means kindly by you. You are not yourself just yet. By-and-bye you will see things in a different light."

"Not myself, indeed! Would you be yourself, I wonder, if you knew that the woman who had pinned all your soul to her bosom as though it were a ribbon, was going to marry another man to-morrow?"

"Old fellow, you forget, though I can't talk of it in as pretty words as you can, I loved her too. I could bear to give her up to you, especially as she didn't care a brass farthing about me; but when I think about the other fellow, with his cold gray eye and that mark on his confounded forehead—ah, Ernest, it makes me sick!"

And they sat on the bed together and groaned in chorus, looking, to tell the truth, rather absurd.

"I tell you what it is, Jeremy," said Ernest, when he had finished groaning at the vision of his successful rival as painted by Jeremy, "you are a good fellow, and I am a selfish beast. Here have I been kicking up all this black gentleman's delight, and you haven't said a word. You are a more decent chap than I am, Jeremy, by a long chalk. And I dare say you are as fond of her as I am. No, I don't think you can be that, though."

"My dear fellow, there is no parallel between our cases. I never expected to marry her. You did, and had every right to do so. Besides, we are differently made. You feel things three times as much as I do.'

Ernest laughed bitterly.

"I don't think that I shall ever feel anything again," he said. "My capacities for suffering will be pretty nearly used up. Oh, what a sublime fool is the man who gives all his life and heart to one woman! No man would have done it; but what could you expect of a couple of boys like we were? That is why women like boys; it is so easy to take them in—like puppies going to be drowned, in love and faith they lick the hand that will destroy them. It must be amusing—to the destroyers. By Jove, Alston was right about his ideals? Do you know I am beginning to see all these things in quite a different light? I used to believe in women, Jeremy—actually I used to believe in them—I thought they were better than we are," and he laughed hysterically. "Well, we buy our experience; I shan't make the mistake again."

"Come, come, Ernest, don't go on talking like that. You have got a blow as bad as death, and the only thing to do is to meet it as you would death—in silence. You will not go after that fellow, will you? It will only make things worse, you see. You won't have time to kill him before he marries her, and it really would not be worth while getting hung about it when the mischief is done. There is literally nothing to be done except grin and bear it. We won't go back to England at all, but right up to the Zambesi, and hunt elephant; and as things have turned out, if you should get knocked on the head, why, you won't mind it so much, you know."

Ernest made no answer to this consolatory address, and Jeremy left him alone, thinking that he had convinced him. But the Ernest of mid-day was a very different man from the Ernest of the morning, directing the erection of "parasols" over melons. The cruel news that the mail had brought him, and which from force of association caused him for years afterward to hate the sight of a letter, had figuratively speaking, destroyed him. He could never recover from it, though he would certainly survive it. Sharp, indeed, must be the grief which kills. But all the bloom and beauty had gone from his life; the gentle faith which he had placed in women was gone (for so narrow-minded are we all, that we cannot help judging a class by our salient experiences of individuals), and he was from that day forward, for many years, handed over to a long-drawn-out pain, which never quite ceased, though it frequently culminated in paroxysms, and to which death itself would have been almost preferable.

But as yet he did not quite realize all these things; what he did realize was an intense and savage thirst for revenge, so intense, indeed, that he felt as though he must put himself in a way to gratify it, or his brain would go. To-morrow, he thought was to see the final act of his betrayal. To-day was the eve of her marriage, and he as powerless to avert it as a child. O great God! And yet through it all he knew she loved him.

Ernest, like many other pleasant, kindly-tempered men, was, if once stung into action by the sense of overpowering wrong, extremely dangerous. Ill, indeed, would it have fared with Mr. Plowden if he could have come across him at that moment. And he honestly meant that it should fare ill with that reverend gentleman. So much did he mean it, that before he left his room he wrote his resignation of membership of the volunteer corps to which he belonged, and took it up to the Government office. Then, remembering that the Potchefstroom post-cart left Pretoria at dawn on the following morning, he made his way to the office, and ascertained that there were no passengers booked to leave by it. But he did not take a place; he was too clever to do that. Leaving the office, he went to the bank, and drew one hundred and fifty pounds in gold. Then he went home again. Here he found a Kafir messenger dressed in the Government white uniform, waiting for him with an official letter.

The letter acknowledged receipt of his resignation, but "regretted that in the present unsettled state of affairs His Excellency was, in the interest of the public service, unable to dispense with his services."

Ernest dismissed the messenger and tore the letter across. If the Government could not dispense with him, he would dispense with the Government. His aim was to go to Potchefstroom and thence to the Diamond Fields. Once there, he could take the post-cart to Cape Town, where he would meet the English mail-steamer, and in one month from the present date be once more in England.

That evening he dined with Mr. Alston, Jeremy and Roger as usual, and no allusion was made to the events of the morning. About 11 o'clock he went to bed, but not to sleep. The post-cart left at 4. At 3 he rose very quietly, and put a few things into a leather saddle-bag, extracted his revolver from under the bed where he had thrown it when, in the first burst of his agony, he had been interrupted in his contemplated act of self-destruction, and buckled it round his waist. Then he slipped out through the window of his room, crept stealthily down the garden-path, and struck out for the Potchefstroom road. But silently and secretly as he went, there went behind him one more silent and secret than he—one to whose race through long generations of tracking foes, silence and secrecy had become an instinct. It was the Hottentot boy, Aasvogel.

The Hottentot followed him in the dim light, never more than fifty paces behind him, sometimes not more than ten, and yet totally invisible. Now he was behind a bush or a tuft of rank grass; now he was running down a ditch; and now again creeping over the open on his belly like a two-legged snake. As soon as Ernest got out of the town, and began to loiter around the Potchefstroom road, the Hottentot halted, uttering to himself a guttural expression of satisfaction. Then watching his opportunity, he turned and ran swiftly back to Pretoria. In ten minutes he was at Ernest's house.

In front of the door were five horses, three with white riders, two being held by Kafirs. On the veranda, as usual smoking, was Mr. Alston and with him Jeremy, the latter armed and spurred.

The Hottentot made his report and vanished.

Mr. Alston turned and addressed Jeremy in the tone of one giving an order.

"Now go," he said at last, handing him a paper, and Jeremy went, and mounting one of the led horses, a powerful cream-colored animal with a snow-white mane and tail, galloped off into the twilight, followed by the three white men.

Meanwhile Ernest walked quietly along the road. Once he paused, thinking that he heard the sound of galloping horses, half a mile or so to the left. It passed, and he went on again. Presently the mist began to lift, and the glorious sun came out; then came a rumble of wheels running along the silent road, and the post-cart with six fresh horses was hard upon him. He halted, and held up his hand to the native driver. The man knew him and stopped the team at once.

"I am going with you to Potchefstroom, Apollo," he said.

"All right, sar; plenty of room inside, sar. No passenger this trip, sar, and a good job too."

Ernest got up and off they went. He was safe now. There was no telegraph to Potchefstroom, and nothing could catch the post-cart if it had an hour's start.

A mile farther on there was a hill, up which the unlovely Apollo walked his horses. At the top of the hill was a clump of mimosa-bush, out of which, to the intense astonishment of both Ernest and Apollo, there emerged four mounted men with a led horse. One of these men was Jeremy; it was impossible to mistake his powerful form, sitting on his horse with the grip of a centaur.

They rode up to the post-cart in silence. Jeremy motioned to Apollo to pull up. He obeyed, and one of the men dismounted and seized the horse's head.

"Tricked, by Heaven!" said Ernest

"You must come back with me, Ernest," said Jeremy, quietly. "I have a warrant for your arrest as a deserter, signed by the Governor."

"And if I refuse?"

"Then my orders are to take you back."

Ernest drew his revolver.

"This is a trick," he said, "and I shall not go back."

"Then I must take you," was the reply; and Jeremy cooly dismounted.

Ernest's eyes flashed dangerously, and he lifted the pistol.

"Oh, yes, you can shoot me if you like; but if you do, the others will take you;" and he continued to walk toward him.

Ernest cocked his revolver and pointed it.

"At your peril!" he said.

"So be it," said Jeremy, and he walked up to the cart.

Ernest dropped his weapon.

"It is mean of you, Jeremy," he said. "You know I can't fire at you."

"Of course you can't, old fellow. Come, skip out of that; you are keeping the mail. I have a horse ready for you, a slow one; you won't be able to run away on him."

Ernest obeyed, feeling rather small, and in half an hour was back at his own house.

Mr. Alston was waiting for him.

"Good-morning, Ernest," he said, cheerfully. "Went out driving and come back riding, eh?"

Ernest looked at him, and his brown cheek flushed.

"You have played me a dirty trick," he said.

"Look here, my boy," answered Mr. Alston, sternly, "I am slow at making a friend; but when once I take his hand I hold it till one of the two grows cold. I should have been no true friend to you if I had let you go on this fool's errand, this wicked errand. Will you give me your word that you will not attempt to escape, or must I put you under arrest?"

"I give you my word," answered Ernest, humbled; "and I ask your forgiveness."

Thus it was that, for the first time in his life, Ernest tried to run away.

That morning Jeremy, missing Ernest, went into his room to see what he was doing. The room was shuttered to keep out the glare of the sun; but when he got used to the light he discovered Ernest sitting at the table, and staring straight before him with a wild look in his eyes.

"Come in, old fellow, come in," he called out with bitter jocularity, "and assist at this happy ceremony. Rather dark, isn't it? but lovers like the dark. Look!" he went on, pointing to his watch which lay upon the table before him, "by English time it is now about twenty minutes past 11. They are being married now, Jeremy, my boy, I can feel it. By Heaven! I have only to shut my eyes and I can see it."

"Come, come, Ernest," said Jeremy, "don't go on like that. You are not yourself, man."

He laughed, and answered:

"I am sure I wish I wasn't. I tell you I can see it all. I can see Kesterwick church full of people, and before the altar, in her white dress is Eva; but her face is whiter than her dress, Jeremy, and her eyes are very much afraid. And there is Florence, with her dark smile, and your friend, Mr. Plowden, too, with his cold eyes and the cross upon his forehead, Oh, I assure you, I can see them all. It is a pretty wedding, very. There, it is over now, and I think I will go away before the kissing."

"Oh, hang it all, Ernest, wake up," said Jeremy, shaking him by the shoulder. "You will drive yourself mad if you give your imagination so much rein."

"Wake up, my boy? I feel more inclined to sleep. Have some grog. Won't you? Well, I will."

He rose and went to the mantel-piece on which stood a square bottle of Hollands and a tumbler. Rapidly filling the tumbler with raw spirit, he drank it as fast as the contractions of his throat would allow. He filled it again, and drank that too. Then he fell insensible upon the bed.

It was a strange scene, and in some ways a coarse one, but yet not without a pathos of its own.

"Ernest," said Mr. Alston, three weeks later, "you are strong enough to travel now; what do you say to six months or a year among the elephants? The oxen are in first-rate condition, and we ought to get to our ground in six or seven weeks."

Ernest, who was lying back in a low cane-chair, looking very thin and pale, thought for a moment before he answered:

"All right, I'm your man; only let's get off soon. I am tired of this place, and want something to think about."

"You have given up the idea of returning to England?"

"Yes, quite."

"And what do you say, Jeremy?"

"Where Ernest goes, there will I go also. Besides to shoot an elephant is the one ambition of my life."

"Good! then we will consider that settled. We shall want to pick up another eight-bore; but I know of one a fellow wants to sell, a beauty, by Riley. I will begin to make arrangements at once."

CHAPTER XXIX.

MR. PLOWDEN ASSERTS HIS RIGHTS.

When last we saw Eva she had just become privately engaged to the Rev. James Plowden. But the marriage was not to take place till the following spring, and the following spring was a long way off. Vaguely she hoped something might occur to prevent it, forgetting that, as a rule, in real life it is only happy things that accidents occur to prevent. Mr. Plowden did not object, he was too wary a hunter to do so. So when Eva made her little stipulations, he acquiesced in them after only just so much hesitation as he thought would seem lover-like. "Life, Eva," he said, sententiously, "is a compromise. I yield to your wishes." But in his heart he thought that a time would come when she would have to yield to his, and his cold eye gleamed. Eva saw the gleam and shuddered prophetically.

The Rev. Mr. Plowden did not suffer much distress at the coldness with which he was treated. He knew that his day would come, and was content to wait for it like a wise man. He was not in love with Eva. A nature like his is scarcely capable of any such feeling as that, for instance, which Eva and Ernest bore to each other. True love, crowned with immortality, veils his shining face from such men as Mr. Plowden. He was fascinated by her beauty, that was all. But his cunning was of a superior order and he was quite content to wait. So he contrived to extract a letter from Eva, in which she talked of "our engagement," and alluded to "our forthcoming marriage," and waited.

And thus the time went on all too quickly for Eva. She was quietly miserable, but she was not acutely unhappy. That was yet to come, with other evil things. Christmas came and went, the spring came, too, and with the daffodils and violets came Ernest's letter.

Eva was down the first one morning, and was engaged in making the tea in the Cottage dining-room, when that modern Minister to the decrees of Fate, the postman, brought the letter. She recognized the writing in a moment, and the tea caddy fell with a crash on to the floor. Seizing it, she tore open the sealed envelope and read it swiftly. Oh, what a wave of love surged up in her heart as she read! Pressing the senseless paper to her lips, she kissed it again and again.

"O Ernest!" she murmured; "O my love, my darling!"

Just then Florence came down, looking cool and composed, and giving that idea of quiet strength which is the natural attribute of some women.

Eva pushed the letter into her bosom.

"What is the matter, Eva?" she said quietly, noting her flushed face, "and why have you upset the tea?"

"Matter!" she answered, laughing happily—she had not laughed so for months; "oh, nothing—I have heard from Ernest, that is all."

"Indeed!" answered her sister with a troubled smile on her dark face; "and what has our runaway to say for himself?"

"Say! oh, he has a great deal to say, and I have something to say too. I am going to marry him."

"Indeed! And Mr. Plowden?"

Eva turned pale.

"Mr. Plowden! I have done with Mr. Plowden."

"Indeed!" said Florence again; "really this is quite romantic. But please pick up that tea. Whoever you marry, let us have some breakfast in the meanwhile. Excuse me for one moment, I have forgotten my handkerchief."

Eva did as she was bid, and made the tea after a fashion.

Meanwhile Florence went to her room and scribbled a note, inclosed in an envelope, and rang the bell.

The servant answered.

"Tell John to take this to Mr. Plowden's lodgings at once, and if he should be out to follow him till he finds him and deliver it."

"Yes, miss."

Ten minutes later Mr. Plowden got the following note:

"Come here at once. Eva has heard from Ernest Kershaw, and announces her intention of throwing you over and marrying him. Be prepared for a struggle, but do not show you have heard from me. You must find means to hold your own. Burn this."

Mr. Plowden whistled as he laid the paper down. Going to his desk he unlocked it and extracted the letter he had received from Eva, in which she acknowledged her engagement to him, and then seizing his hat walked swiftly toward the Cottage.

Meanwhile Florence made her way downstairs again, saying to herself as she went: "An unlucky chance. If I had seen the letter first, I would have burned it. But we shall win yet. She has not the stamina to stand out against that man."

As soon as she reached the dining-room Eva began to say something more about her letter, but her sister stopped her quickly.

"Let me have my breakfast in peace, Eva. We will talk of the letter afterward. He does not interest me, your Ernest, and it takes away my appetite to talk business at meals."

Eva ceased and sat silent; breakfast had no charms for her that morning.

Presently there was a knock at the door, and Mr. Plowden entered with a smile of forced gayety on his face.

"How do you do, Florence?" he said; "how do you do, dear Eva? You see I have come to see you early this morning. I want a little refreshment to enable me to get through my day's duty. The early suitor has come to pick up the worm of his affections," and he laughed at his joke.

Florence shuddered at the simile, and thought to herself that there was a fair chance of the affectionate worm disagreeing with the early suitor.

Eva said nothing. She was still and pale.

"Why, what is the matter with you both? Have you seen a ghost?"

"Not exactly; but I think that Eva has received a message from the dead," said Florence with a nervous laugh.

Eva rose. "I think, Mr. Plowden," she said, "that I had better be frank with you at once. I ask you to listen to me for a few moments."

"Am I not always at your service, dear Eva?"

"I wish," began Eva, and broke down—"I wish," she went on again, "to appeal to your generosity and to your feelings as a gentleman."

Florence smiled.

Mr. Plowden bowed with mock humility and smiled too—a very ugly smile.

"You are aware that, before I became engaged to you, I had had a previous affair."

"With the boy who committed a murder," put in Mr. Plowden.

"With the gentleman who had the misfortune to kill a man in a duel," explained Eva.

"The Church and the law call it murder."

"Excuse me, Mr. Plowden, we are dealing with neither the Church nor the law; we are dealing with the thing as it is called among gentlemen and ladies."

"Go on," said Mr. Plowden.

"Well, misunderstandings, which I need not enter into, arose with reference to that affair, though, as I told you, I loved the man. To-day I have heard from him, and his letter puts everything straight in my mind, and I see how wrong and unjust has been my behavior to him, and I know that I love him more than ever."

"Curse the fellow's impudence!" said the clergyman, furiously; "if he were here, I would give him a bit of my mind!"

Eva's spirit rose, and she turned on him with flashing eyes, looking like a queen in her imperial beauty.

"If he were here, Mr. Plowden, you would not dare to look him in the face. Men like you only take advantage of the absent."

The clergyman ground his teeth. He felt his furious temper rising and did not dare to answer, though he was a bold man in face of a woman. He feared lest it should get beyond him; but beneath his breath he muttered, "You shall pay for that, my lady!"

"Under these circumstances," went on Eva, "I appeal to you as a gentleman to release me from an engagement into which, as you know, I have been drawn more by force of circumstances than by my own wish. Surely, it is not necessary for me to say any more."

Mr. Plowden rose and came and stood quite close to her, so that his face was within a few inches of her eyes.

"Eva," he said, "I am not going to be trifled with like this. You have promised to marry me, and I shall keep you to your promise. You laid yourself out to win my affection, the affection of an honest man."

Again Florence smiled and Eva made a faint motion of dissent.

"Yes, but you did, you encouraged me. It is very well for you to deny it now, when it suits your purpose, but you did, and you know it, and your sister there knows it."

Florence bowed her head in assent.

"And now you wish, in order to gratify an unlawful passion for a shedder of blood—you wish to throw me over, to trample upon my holiest feelings, and to rob me of the prize which I have won. No, Eva, I will not release you."

"Surely, surely, Mr. Plowden," said Eva, faintly, for she was a gentle creature, and the man's violence overwhelmed her, "you will not force me into a marriage which I tell you is repugnant to me? I appeal to your generosity to release me. You can never oblige me to marry you when I tell you that I do not love you, and that my whole heart is given to another man."

Mr. Plowden saw that his violence was doing its work, and determined to follow it up. He raised his voice till it was almost a shout.

"Yes," he said, "I will; I will not submit to such wickedness. Love! that will come. I am quite willing to take my chance of it. No, I tell you fairly that I will not let you off; and if you try to avoid fulfilling your engagement to me I will do more: I will proclaim you all over the country as a jilt; I will bring an action for breach of promise of marriage against you—perhaps you did not know that men can do that as well as women—and cover your name with disgrace! "Look, I have your written promise of marriage," and he produced her letter.

Eva turned to her sister.

"Florence," she said, "cannot you say a word to help me? I am overwhelmed."

"I wish I could, Eva dear," answered her sister, kindly; "but how can I? What Mr. Plowden says is just and right. You are engaged to him, and are in honor bound to marry him. O Eva, do not bring trouble and disgrace upon us all by your obstinacy! You owe something to your name as well as to yourself, and something to me too. I am sure that Mr. Plowden will be willing to forget all about this if you will undertake never to allude to it again."

"Oh, yes, certainly, Miss Florence. I am not revengeful; I only want my rights."

She Practiced Economy.

This story is told of the wife of an eminent benefactor of the town, whose residence was on the "Hill." One day while the lady was in the midst of preparations for the midday meal (this was in the olden time when people got up in the morning and had dinner at the proper time) a caller was announced. Hastily leaving the kitchen where she was overseeing operations she entered the next room where the visitor was. The door between the two was open, and pretty soon the lady broke off the conversation and called to the "help" in the kitchen.

"Nancy, does the kettle boil?"

"No, ma'am."

Then the conversation was renewed, to be broken again in a few minutes by the inquiry:

"Nancy, does the kettle boil?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then take the pine stick in the corner and put it on the fire." This was presumably done, for shortly after, when "ma'am" repeated her question:

"Nancy, does the kettle boil now?"

"Yes, ma'am," was the answer.

"Then take off the pine stick and put it in the corner."

This shows a spirit of saving hardly to be surpassed.—Boston Record.

Mrs. Gladstone's Waist.

Not long ago, says Harper's Bazar, Mrs. Gladstone was visiting a country house, and the first evening at dinner wore a black lace scarf wrapped around and around her body in the most extraordinary style. Everybody wondered at this amazing costume. Going up to the drawing-room after dinner something struck sharply against the stairs at every step she took. "I know what it is," she calmly remarked. "When I dressed I could not find the waist of my gown, so I wrapped this scarf around me instead. My maid in packing sometimes pins the waist inside the skirt." And stooping down, sure enough it was the missing link of the costume. Mrs. Gladstone retired and reappeared, having laid aside the grotesque substitute in favor of the conventional waist, and all with the most complete nonchalance.

The servant girl question—"May I go out to-night, mum?"

A Baby's Faith.

(Mrs. Clara P. Boss in the South Boston Recorder.)

"Only a handbill! Prosaic!"
And the lady's fingers slight
Took from the waiting servant's hand
The tiny missive white.
One careless glance at its contents,
And she tossed it in the air;
It slipped through the open casement
Without her thought or care.

Circling, floating, fluttering down,
It sought the dusty street,
And dropped, as soft as a snowflake,
At a baby's pattering feet.
The little one caught the paper,
With a cry of glad surprise,
And lifted to the blue of heaven
A pair of heavenly eyes.

"'Tis a letter from my mamma,
I know," the baby said,
"God has sent it down from heaven
Where she went when she was dead.
Read it, nurse," the boy commanded;
But the nurse's eyes were dim,
Not for her to read the message
That his mother sent to him.

But the baby kissed his treasure;
He could "read between the lines,"
And the coarse and common paper
Bore a word from fairer climes.
So the baby's careless fingers
Tossed a message to his heart
Which, in all the years of childhood,
Bore a not forgotten part.

A FOUR-LEGGED THIEF.

"My dear, what do you think?" said the wife of Rev. Mr. Vivian, almost in tears. "Jane, whom we thought so much of, is a thief."

"Impossible, my love," was the answer. "Jane, our chambermaid? Whom we have known so long? Whose probity we have seen tried so often?"

"It seems incredible, I know," replied Mrs. Vivian, excitedly. "But there is no doubt of it——"

"No doubt of it?"

"Yes. You remember giving me, as usual, the marriage fee after pretty Miss Howard's wedding—don't you?" Her husband nodded. "Well, my dear, I was tired and sleepy, for we came home very late, and, instead of locking up the money as I ought to have done, I pinned it by one corner to the pin-cushion on the dressing-table. Yesterday morning, when I came to look for it, it was gone. I have searched everywhere, but cannot find it. Now, nobody had been in the room but ourselves and Jane."

By this time Mr. Vivian himself began to look almost as serious as his wife.

"You are sure," he said, "that nobody else has been in the chamber?"

"Why, my dear, you know we always keep it locked, and that Jane is the only servant who has a pass-key. No burglar could get in."

"You have looked everywhere?"

"Everywhere—through all my drawers, in the pocket of the dress I wore on the floor, under the bed, in every possible place. But it was really not worth while looking, for I am positive I pinned the note to the pincushion. When I went to look for it after breakfast it was gone. Jane had been doing her chamber work, as usual, while we were at breakfast, and is the only person who could have stolen it!

"Have you spoken to Jane yet?"

"No. I thought I would consult you first. Hadn't we better have her trunk searched secretly? If we let her know she is suspected she will find some way to hide the note away!"

"I am glad you have not spoken to her. It is no little matter to take away a girl's character."

"But the proof, my dear?"

"The proof looks strong, but is not conclusive. Suppose—just suppose—that after discharging Jane, and so destroying her character, you should discover some day that she was innocent. I think I will take a look at the room myself."

"It's really a waste of time, my dear. I have looked everywhere. Still," hesitatingly, "it is but right to give the poor girl every chance."

"I should know the note if I saw it anywhere," said Mr. Vivian. "It was a peculiarly marked $20 greenback, not a national note, but a legal tender, and stained with ink at one end. The stain attracted my attention particularly. It was as if a thumb, wet with ink, had been laid on the note. The impression was very distinct."

An hour's search, however, only confirmed Mrs. Vivian's story.

Mr. Vivian desisted at last.

"I cannot believe it," he said. "I will not give up my faith in Jane."

"But who else could have done it? I would not have believed it, either. Let us go upstairs and search her room. She is busy in the kitchen, and will not know it."

"No, my dear. If we search her room it is due to her to tell her first of our intention. Let us do nothing underhanded."

"Then shall I call her?"

"I suppose there is nothing else to be done," said Mr. Vivian, wearily, but as if he only half assented to the proposition.

Mrs. Vivian moved toward the door, but before she had reached it her husband had started to his feet.

"Stop! I have it!" he said. "My dear, have you never seen mice about? They generally infest every house."

"Mice!" Mrs. Vivian laughed, "Why, my dear, are you crazy? Mice don't eat $20 notes."

"But have you ever seen mice in this room?" persisted Mr. Vivian.

"I have heard them at night occasionally, but I have never seen them. But what can that have to do with the money!"

"I am certain now. I should have searched everywhere in any event; but now I feel sure the mice have done it. Don't look so incredulous, my dear. A mouse wouldn't eat a bank note, she would rather have a bit of cheese; but she might think the note would make a very nice nest for her little ones. We must have the carpet up."

"Oh, Mr. Vivian! what do you mean? Take up the carpets and have the room to clean again, and everything upside down ——"

"My dear, I will begin at the most likely place—by the hearth, say. I will take out the tacks myself, and very carefully; there shall be no dust made, I assure you. Perhaps we will not have to look far."

Mrs. Vivian knew, when her husband spoke in his mild, yet decided, manner that there was nothing to do but yield gracefully. She went, therefore, to a closet, and brought out a tack-hammer.

Mr. Vivian, clergyman as he was, did not disdain to get on his hands and knees, and begin to draw the tacks. He had loosened the carpet for about a yard, when he cried suddenly:

"Ha! there is a mouse-hole, at any rate."

Mrs. Vivian, by this time, began to catch the infection of his excitement. She leaned over him breathlessly.

"I will feel down the hole," said her husband. "The handle of the hammer is thin, and this iron at the end will catch the note, if it is here. Ha! there's a rustle; gently now. Bless my soul, if this isn't the very note."

"Sure enough there it was! A crisp $20 bill, with the ink-stain on the end. A bit of one end was gone, about a quarter of an inch, but otherwise the note was perfect.

"Mistress Mouse found she could not drag the note to her nest, it was too stiff; it has stuck half-way; she has torn off the end, you see, in her struggle," said Mr. Vivian, rising to his feet and triumphantly holding up and shaking the crisp, rustling note.

Don't.

Don't read this, if you expect to find the old stereotyped advice that is usually sprung on the unprotected public at the beginning of the year.

Don't go to bed with cold feet unless they have been pickled and taken inwardly. Even then the healthiest plan is to get a friend to take the pickled feet inwardly.

Don't jump out of bed immediately on awakening in the morning unless you are a lunatic. No sane man ever jumped out of bed immediately on awakening except perhaps in a few isolated cases.

Don't forget to take a drink of pure water before breakfast. If you are very thirsty during the night, you can get up and empty the water pitcher; it settles things after the last night's seance, reduces the size of the head, and, besides, makes one appear like a temperance advocate.

Don't take long walks on an empty stomach; if you want to take a stroll on a stomach at all try and find a full one, as it is softer. If you can find an empty stomach large enough, you can take a ride upon it.

Don't start to do a day's work without eating a good breakfast. Be sure to chew up the coffee properly. If you haven't got a good breakfast don't commence work until after dinner.

Don't eat between meals, but if anybody invites you, it is healthier to take a drink. If you get hungry have the meals oftener.

Don't try to keep up on coffee when nature is calling you to bed; coffee is an uncomfortable thing to sleep on; a sack of flour or a quiet conscience would be better.

Don't stand over hot-air registers, it is tiresome. Unless the register is hot enough to be used as a branding iron, you might as well sit down on a register and be comfortable.

Don't strain your eyes reading on an empty stomach. If, however, it is essential to your happiness to read on an empty stomach spread a copy of the TIMES over the vacant organ and read that.

Don't make a practice of relating scandal calculated to depress the spirits of the sick; only tell that kind of scandal which will raise a laugh. Get some back files of the English papers containing accounts of the Lady Campbell trial.

Don't forget to cheer and gently amuse invalids when visiting them; tickle them under the nose with a feather, dance a jig, sing a comic song, or do something that is light and convivial. If the invalid objects and tries to throw things at you, tie him down in the bed.

Don't talk your sick friend to death. It is easier to fracture his skull with a paper weight; besides, you have no right to interfere with the prerogative of the doctor.

And finally:

Don't worry yourself about other people's habits to the extent of making an ass of yourself.

Women Should Learn to Whistle.

If there be one thing which the modern woman regrets it is that she has never learned to whistle. Leaving out all question of being able to cheer one's self with a tune occasionally on the street or in the office, a whistle is a very handy accomplishment in signaling an elevator or a horse-car. The historian's wife bought one of those nickel whistles recently to make up, if possible, for this deficiency, and used it for the first time the other day when she was engaged in her Christmas shopping. She blew it once at the corner of Brattle street. The car was just stopping at the further corner and showed signs of starting up immediately; in desperation she gave another shrill whistle, and the car started up as if all the city government officials were pursuing it. The driver had thought it was the car-starter's signal, and when the fact was explained by some kindly passer-by the historian's wife resolved that she would resort to her voice next time she wishes to stop a car—Boston Record.

A "Blizzarded" Train.

As the train came in, with her two handsome engines puffing and snorting and glistening, she was admired by a crowd of Bismarckers, who are ever ready to applaud the beautiful and picturesque. The most interesting sight of all was the white capped snow plow which came just ahead of the train. The plow was loaded with several tons of pure white material, the engine was a gigantic moving icicle, of curious shape and exquisite beauty. The drivewheels, the boiler, the bell and the smokestack were handsomely slated with ice and snow, and the cab was a perfect little crystal palace.—Bismarck (Dakota) Tribune.

New Use for the Tobacco Plant.

A new use for the tobacco plant has been discovered. Its stems and waste, it is claimed, are equal to linen rags in the manufacture of paper. Tobacco waste costs less than $10 a ton, linen rags $70 to $80. There is no expense in assorting the former and very little shrinkage, as against a loss of one-third of rags. The yearly tobacco waste is estimated by the census reports at from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds.

A little girl, while looking at some wares in a Sparta (Wis.) store window, remarked, "My papa has got a whole lot of pocket-books just like those." The owner of the store immediately secured a search warrant, and the result was that the child's father was arrested on a charge of burglary.

THE KISSING HABIT.

A Queer Case Tried in a New York Divorce Court.

A very queer case—that of Pye versus Pye—was called in a New York court this week. It was a divorce suit, and the evidence went to show the kissing habit is more easy to acquire and more difficult to shake off than the opium or cocoaine habit.

From the evidence it appears that Mr. Tompkins, one of the boarders at the Pye mansion, drifted into the habit of kissing Mrs. Pye. In fact it is very little exaggeration to say that he became a chronic Pye-biter. They became so brazen that their kisses were suggestive of the ringing of a patent gong. In the Pye family the kissing seems to have been almost as persistent and promiscuous as that to which the witnesses testified in the Beecher case.

Mr. Dempsey, who boarded at the Pye house, was put on the stand and examined by a lawyer.

Lawyer—Did you ever see Tompkins kiss Mrs. Pye?

Witness—Lots of times; and when I didn't see him I heard him. There was a plaintive, sobbing gurgle about it that reminded one of the exhaust of a bath tub. It could be heard all over the house.

Lawyer—When did Tompkins kiss Mrs. Pye?

Witness—Whenever he had a chance, but I noticed he didn't kiss her when he was down town. The only time when he didn't kiss her was when he was not there.

Lawyer—Who did kiss her then?

Witness—I did. I liked her a little myself.

Lawyer—O, you did, did you? Did not Mr. Pye object to you kissing his wife?

Witness—No. Why should he? I didn't object to his kissing her; why should he object to my kissing her? There was nothing objectionable about it; it was a mere friendly salutation.

Lawyer—Did you see Mrs. Pye kiss Mr. Pye?

Witness—No; but she may have done so when none of us boarders were around. She is a sly piece.

Lawyer—How did you come to kiss Mrs. Pye?

Witness—Put my arms around her neck and kissed her in the usual way.

Lawyer—Did she ask you to do so?

Witness—Well, I noticed that no matter how many times she and Tompkins kissed before he went out, she never got enough to last until he came back, for as he opened the door they were at it again, so when he was away I kissed her, more as a matter of accommodation than anything else.

Lawyer—Where was Mr. Pye?

Witness—Oh, he was nowhere.

Lawyer—That's enough. You can step down.

The divorce was obtained.

Von Moltke on the Battlefield.

Since Moltke's important speech at the Reichstag the papers are full of anecdotes relating to the general, and the following is one of them, related by Bismarck: "When on the eve of war even Moltke becomes talkative, and when we marched in 1870 he at once grew ten years younger, spoke with vivacity, took pleasure in champagne and choice cigars, and lost all his pedantry acquired while resting on the laurels he had gained in 1866. During the battle of Konigsgratz, when victory was doubtful for hours, Bismarck approached Moltke, tormented by doubts and fears as to the result of the terrible struggle. Moltke sat silent on his black steed. He was observing the course of the battle, and it was impossible to attract his attention. But Bismarck had a little case in his pocket containing two cigars, one of excellent, the other of inferior quality. He offered the case to Moltke, and without speaking the general took it, examined the two cigars, and chose the good one without thanks. But Bismarck understood him. He put spurs to his horse and cheerfully returned to his post, for thought he, if Moltke is still able to make choice of a cigar with such calmness of mind it means that all is going on well."—London Daily News.

A Snowball Battle by 20,000 Men.

In January, 1864, while Confederate troops were in winter quarters at Dalton, Ga., there came a big snow storm, and 20,000 soldiers engaged in a regularly organized snow-balling. The Georgia and South Carolina troops took one side of a small stream and the Tennesseeans the other. The Tennesseeans formed a line of battle, their drums beating, bugles blowing, colors flying and officers mounted. Every soldier had a knapsack full of snowballs. The Georgians formed and prepared to make the attack by crossing the branch. There were 10,000 men on each side, and the scene was very imposing. As soon as the Georgians crossed the branch they met a terrific fusillade from the Tennesseeans, who were at home in the snow. The commander of the Tennesseeans was captured, but a bold dash was made by the Tennesseeans and he was rescued. The Georgians and South Carolinians, being unused to the snow, were at a great disadvantage, and were forced back across the branch. As the Tennesseeans crossed the branch they wet their snowballs, and the next volley fired at the Georgia and South Carolina boys was terrible in its effect. Passing on, the Tennesseeans captured the quarters and proceeded to loot the whole shebang, carrying off rations, tobacco, pipes and everything else that did not belong to the Government.—Globe-Democrat.

At the Festive Board.

"Mr. Peterby, will you please carve the turkey?"

"No, I thank you. The man who carves must either be a fool or rascal, and I don't care to be either."

"What do you mean."

"If he keeps the choicest portions for himself he is a scoundrel; if he does not keep them for himself he is a fool; and, as I said, I don't care to place myself in either category."

A footpad near South Prairie, W. T., held up a citizen the other evening about dusk, but before he could rifle the pockets of his victim some men came along. They caught the robber, stripped him to the waist, gave him a sound thrashing, and advised him to leave, otherwise he would be hanged on the spot. He took the advice.

LEGISLATORS AT LOGGERHEADS.

Exciting Scenes in the New Jersey Capitol—The Democrats "Knocked Out."

A Trenton, N. J., despatch says: There was a big fight in the House of Representatives yesterday. When the regular Democrats were holding their caucus and nominating officers, the Republicans and disaffected Democrats and the two Labor men, numbering 31 in all, and constituting a majority, held a meeting in the Speaker's room and nominated and elected an entire mixed ticket. Dr. Baird, the dissatisfied Democrat, was elected Speaker and took the chair. No sooner did he seat himself than Mr. Beckwith, Chairman of the Democratic caucus, tried to forcibly eject him. A general hand to hand conflict ensued, and the police sent by Gov. Abbott attempted to remove Terrence McDonald, the newly elected sergeant-at-arms, but were overpowered by the latter's friends, and amid the greatest excitement the Speaker declared the House adjourned till to-day at 10 a. m.

The Democratic Senators caucused at the State House at 11 o'clock and nominated officers. The Republican Senators held a caucus at the Trenton House at the same hour, but adjourned at noon without nominating. The labor men joined neither caucus. The Democrats overreached themselves by forming a combination of Hudson, Camden and Sussex counties, and three dissatisfied members bolted.

Subsequently the Republicans met in the Speaker's room. They secured the disaffected Democrats and the two labor men, which gave them a majority and made up the ticket. After being sworn in, the majority effected an entrance to the Assembly Chamber and escorted the newly elected Speaker, Dr. Baird, to the chair, then occupied by Chairman Beckwith, of the Democratic caucus, which was still in session. Dr. Baird took the seat, and then began an unseemly struggle between Beckwith and Baird. Beckwith tried to eject Baird from the chair, but the new Speaker was surrounded by his friends, who maintained him in his position. In the struggle the chair was thrown from the platform and several members engaged in a fist fight. Three policemen sent by the Governor to try to quell the disturbance and eject the members directed their attention to the new Sergeant-at-Arms. They succeeded in lifting him from his seat, and were carrying him toward the door, when he was rescued by his friends. Meanwhile the struggle on the platform was going on, but Baird's friends prevailed and he kept the chair.

At this moment the doors of the room were burst open and the nearly frantic crowd rushed in, and from the press of the mob the battle was stopped. During the turmoil the galleries were filled with people, who cheered the combatants in the arena below. The defeated Democrats tried to renew the conflict, but the Republicans withdrew, followed by crowds of congratulating friends.

BRUTAL EVICTION RIOT.

A Pitched Battle Witnessed by Scotch and English M.P.'s.

Evictions on the Winn estate yesterday were witnessed by several English and Scotch members of Parliament. The peasants of the surrounding district are terribly excited. It is feared there will be serious trouble when the bailiffs resume the work of eviction. In some cases the bailiffs were stoutly resisted. The occupants of one house barricaded the doors and windows and refused to allow the officers to enter. The bailiffs made several attempts to force their way into the dwelling, but its defenders received them with boiling water and showers of stones and forced them to retreat. A number of them were severely wounded. This siege lasted some hours. Finally, the police loaded their weapons and threatened to fire if an immediate surrender was not made. At this the defenders yielded and submitted to arrest. They were 25 in number, and all were taken into custody. The wife of the tenant was carried out of the house by the officers in a fainting condition. She was afterwards left dying in the yard. The people are maddened at the brutality of the officers. Mr. Harrington, member of Parliament, exhorted them to avoid violence, and with difficulty prevented bloodshed.

The Ocean Steamship War.

The battle of the trans-Atlantic mails, says the St. James' Gazette, seems only just commencing. The Inman and International have chartered the Sardinian, of the Allan Line, and the Vancouver, of the Dominion Line. The Guion Company will put the Austral, of the Orient Line, under their flag, and the North-German Lloyd have given orders to the Fairfield Shipbuilding Company to build the largest and fastest vessel that can possibly be turned out from that famous yard. This will most likely be a ship approaching in size to the Great Eastern, with the speed of a torpedo-catcher, and capable of doing the passage from Southampton in six clear days, which is equal to a passage of five days from Queenstown. The result of all this rivalry will, no doubt, be to reduce the average duration of the transatlantic passage by several hours, if not days. Incidentally, a terrible disaster or two may be expected from these ocean races.

Antiquity of Gambling.

I believe they played dominoes in Egypt 3,000 years ago for money, and I dare say the mercenaries of ancient Carthage shook dice for the remuneration they had for their brutal services. Poker was known by another name, but I doubt not that Nebuchadnezzar's army anted up in their camp in the warm Assyrian night; and while Brutus was quarrelling with Cassius in his tent the Roman soldiery were probably staking their prospective drachms at some game of chance. Still, in the nineteenth century, with civilization in full blast and a hundred religious creeds fighting for the regulation of people's morals, the three-card-monte performer scoops in the astute man of business, and the bunko man lands the statesman and the poet just as of old.—San Francisco Chronicle.

NOW NEAREST THE SUN.

The Earth Gets as Close as It Can to the Great Stove in the Sky.

The sun is in perigee, or the earth in perihelion, on the 2nd of January at 3 p.m. These two forms of expression mean the same thing; the former meaning that the sun is nearest to the earth, and the latter that the earth is nearest to the sun. For, strange as it may seem, the earth is 3,000,000 miles nearer the sun than she was on the 1st of last July. It would be natural to expect that we should have the warmest weather when the sun is nearest to us. But his rays fall so obliquely on this portion of the earth that the intensity of the cold far overbalances the difference in the distance. There is, however, a compensation for the present conditions. The winter cold is doubtless tempered by the earth's greater nearness to the central fire. In the Southern Hemisphere, where the sun is in apogee in midwinter, the cold is intensified for this reason. Thus in Australia and Southern Africa the average temperature is lower than in corresponding latitudes north of the equator. About 3,600 years before the creation of Adam the sun was in apogee, or at his greatest distance in the northern winter, and in perigee, or at his least distance, in the northern summer. Sir John Herschel estimates that the northern winter at that distant period of the earth's development was 23° colder, and the northern summer 23° warmer than it is at present. Every inhabitant of the north temperate zone has reason to be grateful that the sun is in perigee at the season near the winter solstice.—Providence Journal.

KILLING HIS CHILD BY ACCIDENT.

A Man Sends a Bullet into the Head of His Only Daughter.

John Hollstrom, a longshoreman, aged 52, of 59 Sackett street, Brooklyn, yesterday by accident killed his daughter, Mary Ann, aged 6. The family occupies rooms upon the third floor of the house. After supper last evening Hollstrom was showing a revolver to another occupant of the house. He turned the chambers and said: "There's nothing in it." Then he cocked the pistol and pulled the trigger. The hammer struck an unexploded cartridge and the bullet passed through Hollstrom's left forefinger and struck the little girl, who was interestedly watching what was going on. The bullet entered her head just above the left eye and probably penetrated the brain.

"Oh, papa, I'm shot," she cried and fell backward to the floor. In a few minutes she died in the arms of her nearly frantic mother. A hastily summoned physician could do nothing for her. The father did not wait to have his wounded finger attended to, but rushed out to find a policeman and gave himself up. He was taken to the Congress street police station. His story was found to be correct upon investigation. He said that he had not the remotest idea that the weapon was loaded. The shells in the chambers appeared to be empty ones. Hollstrom had not been drinking and he is a man of temperate habits. The little girl was the only child.

Mrs. Langtry Defends the High Hats.

I asked Mrs. Langtry about her attitude on the bonnet question. "Oh, well," said she, "I don't believe the no-bonnet reform, as you call it, will permanently succeed in this country. The ladies will not take the trouble to put themselves in full dress to go to the theatre, and London is the only city in the world that demands it. There no woman can sit in the stalls with a bonnet on. The agitation for the removal of bonnets, which has been begun so spiritedly, will make some promise and go on for a time. Certainly a man who pays for a ticket should be accorded a complete view of the stage, and the interruption of his sight by one of the tremendous steeple bonnets now worn is unquestionably an invasion of his rights. I like the fashionable bonnets, though."—Washington Post.

In the State of Blizzards.

Chicago Herald: "The blizzards out in Dakota are so terrible," said a man just in from the north, "that the people string clothes lines from their homes to their outhouses in order that they may pass to and from during the prevalence of one of these storms without running the risk of losing their way in their own yards. One cannot see three feet ahead in a Dakota blizzard, and if he once loses his bearings he is almost certain to drift out upon the prairie and perish before assistance can reach him. With the aid of a rope a man is enabled to grope about his own yard with comparative safety so long as he doesn't let go."

Mr. Powderly Explains.

A Pittsburg, Pa., despatch says: In a letter to Mr. Bengough, of this city, Mr. Powderly says he accepted the offer of $5,000 salary by the Richmond convention, because if he had continued to refuse it enemies would have accused him of getting pay from outside the Order, as they could not understand why he should devote himself to the work without adequate pay. Mr. Powderly says his position is no sinecure. He works from 12 to 18 hours a day. He adds that he has had several offers of $5,000 or $6,000 per annum for his services in business pursuits. Four of these offers are still open.

They Still Live.

"I tell you, honest men are not all dead yet," he said as he returned to his sleigh at the Central Market. "Here's a robe which could have been sold to me for a bear-skin but the dealer frankly informed me that it was nothing but goat."

"How much did you pay."

"Only $11."

"H'm. Same man sold me one for a bear-skin and didn't ask but $8!"—Detroit Free P

A farmer near Minnewaukan, D. T., got drunk and crawled into a snow bank to take a nap. Although the temperature was ten degrees below zero, the farmer awoke the next morning sober and uninjured by the cold. There must be some wonderfully satisfying whiskey sold in that neighborhood.

Our good-looking young friend, Mr, W. L. Smith, Editor and proprietor of the Shelburne Economist, was married to Miss Garneau, of Drayton, week before last. We wish the young couple every success in their matrimonial alliance.

Our esteemed friend and citizen, Mr. Fred. Ryder, returned home on Monday. Having joined the noble army of benedicts recently, his many friends are of opinion that married life agrees with him well. We tender our congratulation to friend Ryder and his charming young wife.

Professor Morgan and Fairy treated our citizens to a rich musical feast last Wednesday evening in the Town Hall. The place was crowded by an enthusiastic audience, although two meetings were in progress in other parts of our village at the same time. The selections were spicy and well rendered. Mr. Bunt occupied the chair in a pleasing manner.

Our good neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. N. Campbell, have the sympathy of the entire community in the sad loss recently sustained by them in the death of their dear little girl. Only ten months ago their eldest little daughter—a most charming and beautiful child—passed away to be forever with Him who has said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

The pastor of the Methodist church here, Rev. Mr. Ayers, delivered a rousing speech in connection with an Orange Soiree in the Town Hall, Orangeville, on Tuesday evening of last week. It was considered the speech of the evening—so much so, that the Dufferin Post reported it more fully than that of any other gentleman who addressed the large and influential audience on that occasion.

Wednesday evening of last week a miniature conflagration was observed going on in our school-house. The alarm was at once given by the ladies who noticed it, and Mr. John Bellamy happening to be near by at the time, soon affected an entrance, when he observed that some cedar which had been placed on the stove to dry had caught fire. The blaze was speedly extinguished.

The grand sacred cantata "Lost and Saved," will be given some time this month, under the direction of Professor Morgan and Fairy, in connection with the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church here. This with the "Red Riding Hood" cantata and Miss McGarry's visit to our town ought to make February a red letter month in the history of musical and intellectual little Flesherton.

Something like forty of the pupils of our public schools are to take part in the splendid juvenile cantata "Little Red Riding Hood," to be given shortly in the Town Hall, Flesherton, under the direction of the accomplished musical instructor, Professor Morgan, and his talented little daughter, Fairy. We understand that the Professor—with his accustomed generosity—purposes donating part of the proceeds to Mrs. James Hopps, who is in rather needy circumstances through the death of her husband.

Mass Meeting.

The Conservatives of Artemesia will hold a Mass Meeting in the Township Hall, Flesherton, on Thursday, 11th Feb. inst., at 2 o'clock p. m. sharp. Eloquent speakers expected. DR. LANDERKIN invited. By order of Committee.

The 31st Battalion will in all probability go into Camp this year, and will without doubt give as good, if not better account of itself than ever before. It will soon have a better corps of instructors than any rural regiment in Canada. Already ten of its non-commissioned officers have taken short courses at the Infantry School. Eight are there now and three more will enter in April. Of those present in attendance three are from Meaford, two from Flesherton, and one each from Owen Sound, Annan and Durham Companies. The 31st Rifle Association expects to have a very successful match in Meaford this year. A meeting will be held in Owen Sound shortly to arrange the prize list and other matters.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

A Complaint.

Editor Advance: Of late some persons have found it very convenient to dump their old rubbish in the hollow on Church street—near the pump which supplies an entire neighborhood with water. Have we a Board of Health in Flesherton? If we have, then it is to be hoped this will wake them from the profound slumber into which they appear to have fallen.

PURITY.

A Taffy Episode.

Editor Advance: The other day several Flesherton young ladies made some taffy and put it out in the back yard to cool off. A certain woman informed her husband of this interesting fact, when the latter cooly appropriated the taffy for the benefit of himself and spouse. Some days afterwards the dish, which had contained the taffy, was returned to the owner—unwashed! How is that for simon pure, downright, unadulterated hoggishness?

A Twilight Fantasy.

A woman stood at a garden gate
(Sing hey for the distant spreading sail)
Sing hey for the dog that hurried by
With a kettle tied to his tail.

My good man skurried adown the road
(Sing hey for the joyous drinking bout!)
And after the ochre cur he sped
With many a gruesome shout.

"Now, why this haste, good neighbor?" she cried;
"Why after the dog of the umber tint?"
But, waking the echoes with a yell, he aped
Through the twilight's gleam and glint.

A smug-faced lad looked over the fence
(Sing hey where the birdlings sing and chirp!)
"Why laughest, good mother?" "I laugh," said she,
"To see you eeru purp."

A smile then smiled the smug-faced lad
(Sing lack-a-day for the sunset red!)
"Then laugh no more, good gossip, because
The kettle is your'n," he said.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

Eva looked faintly from one to the other; her head sank, and great black rings painted themselves beneath her eyes. The lily was broken at last.

"You are very cruel," she said, slowly; "but I suppose it must be as you wish. Pray God I may die first, that is all!" and she put her hands to her head and stumbled from the room, leaving the two conspirators facing each other.

"Come, we got over that capitally," said Mr. Plowden, rubbing his hands. "There is nothing like taking the high hand with a woman. Ladies must sometimes be taught that a gentleman has rights as well as themselves."

Florence turned on him with bitter scorn.

"Gentlemen! Mr. Plowden, why is the word so often on your lips? Surely after the part you have just played, you do not presume to rank yourself among gentlemen? Listen! it suits my purposes that you should marry Eva; and you shall marry her; but I will not stoop to play the hypocrite with a man like you. You talk of yourself as a gentleman, and do not scruple to force an innocent girl into a wicked marriage, and to crush her spirit with your cunning cruelty. A gentleman, forsooth!—a satyr, a devil in disguise!"

"I am only asserting my rights," he said, furiously; "and whatever I have done, you have done more."

"Do not try your violence on me, Mr. Plowden; it will not do. I am not made of the same stuff as your victim. Lower your voice, or leave the house and do not enter it again."

Mr. Plowden's heavy underjaw fell a little: he was terribly afraid of Florence.

"Now," she said, "listen! I do not choose that you should labor under any mistake. I hold your hand in this business, though to have to do with you in any way is in itself a defilement," and she wiped her delicate fingers on a pocket-handkerchief as she said the word, "because I have an end of my own to gain. Not a vulgar end like yours, but a revenge, which shall be almost divine or diabolical, call it which you will, in its completeness. Perhaps it is a madness, perhaps it is an inspiration, perhaps it is a fate. Whatever it is, it animates me, body and soul, and I will gratify it, though to do so I have to use a tool like you. I wished to explain this to you. I wished, too, to make it clear to you that I consider you contemptible. I have done both, and I have now the pleasure to wish you good-morning."

Mr. Plowden left the house white with fury, and cursing in a manner remarkable in a clergyman.

"If she wasn't so handsome, hang me if I would not throw the whole thing up!" he said.

Needless to say, he did nothing of the sort; he only kept out of Florence's way.

CHAPTER XXX.

THE VIRGIN MARTYR.

Dorothy, in her note to Ernest that he received by the mail previous to the one that brought the letters which at a single blow laid the hope and promise of his life in the dust, had, it may be remembered, stated her intention of going to see Eva in order to plead Ernest's cause; but what with one thing and another, her visit was considerably delayed. Twice she was on the point of going, and twice something occurred to prevent her. The fact of the matter was the errand was distasteful, and she was in no hurry to execute it. She loved Ernest herself, and however deep that love might be trampled down, however fast it might be chained in the dungeons of her secret thoughts, it was still there, a living thing, an immortal thing. She could tread it down and chain it; she could not kill it. Its shade would rise and walk in the upper chambers of her heart, and wring its hands and cry to her, telling what it suffered in those subterranean places, whispering how bitterly it envied the bright and happy life which moved in the free air, and had usurped the love it claimed. It was hard to have to ignore those pleadings, to disregard those cries for pity, and to say that there was no hope, that it must always be chained, till time ate away the chain. It was harder still to have to be one of the actual ministers to the suffering. Still, she meant to go. Her duty to Ernest was not to be forsaken because it was a painful duty.

On two or three occasions she met Eva, but got no opportunity of speaking to her. Either her sister Florence was with her, or she was obliged to return immediately. The fact was that, after the scene described in the last chapter, Eva was subjected to the closest espionage. At home Florence watched her as a cat watches a mouse; abroad Mr. Plowden seemed to be constantly hovering on her flank, or, if he was not there, then she became aware of the presence of the ancient and contemplative mariner who traded in Dutch cheeses. Mr. Plowden feared lest she should run away, and so cheat him of his prize; Florence, lest she should confide in Dorothy, or possibly Mr. Cardus, and supported by them find the courage to assert herself and defraud her of her revenge. So they watched her every movement.

At last Dorothy made up her mind to wait no longer for opportunities, but to go and see Eva at her own home. She knew nothing of the Plowden imbroglio; but it did strike her as curious that no one had said anything about Ernest. He had written—it was scarcely likely the letter had miscarried. How was it that Eva had not said anything on the subject? Little did Dorothy guess that, even as these thoughts were passing through her mind, a great vessel was steaming out of Southampton docks, bearing those epistles final of renunciation which Ernest, very little to his satisfaction, received in due course.

Full of these reflections, Dorothy found herself one lovely spring afternoon knocking at the door of the Cottage. Eva was at home, and she was at once ushered into her presence. She was sitting on a low chair—the same on which Ernest always pictured her with that confounded Skye terrier she was so fond of kissing—an open book upon her knee, and looking out at the little garden and the sea beyond. She looked pale and thin, Dorothy thought.

On her visitor's entrance Eva rose and kissed her.

"I am so glad to see you," she said; "I was feeling lonely."

"Lonely!" answered Dorothy, in her straightforward way, "why, I have been trying to find you alone for the last fortnight, and have never succeeded."

Eva colored. "One may be lonely with ever so many people round one."

Then for a minute or so they talked about the weather; so persistently did they discuss it, indeed, that the womanly instinct of each told her that the other was fencing.

After all, it was Eva who broke the ice first.

"Have you heard from Ernest lately?" she said, nervously.

"Yes; I got a note by last mail."

"Oh," said Eva, clasping her hands involuntarily, "what did he say?"

"Nothing much. But I got a letter by the mail before that, in which he said a good deal. Among other things, he said he had written to you. Did you get the letter?"

Eva colored to her eyes. "Yes," she whispered.

Dorothy rose, and seated herself on a footstool by Eva's feet, and wondered at the trouble in her eyes. How could she be troubled when she had heard from Ernest—"like that?"

"What did you answer him, dear?"

Eva covered her face with her hands.

"Do not talk about it," she said; "it is too dreadful to me!"

"What can you mean? He tells me you are engaged to him."

"Yes—that is, no. I was half engaged. Now I am engaged to Mr. Plowden."

Dorothy gave a gasp of horrified astonishment.

"Engaged to the man when you were engaged to Ernest? You must be joking."

"O Dorothy, I am not joking; I wish to Heaven I were. I am engaged to him. I am to marry him in less than a month. Oh, pity me, I am wretched."

"You mean to tell me," said Dorothy, rising, "that you are engaged to Mr. Plowden when you love Ernest?"

"Yes, oh yes, I cannot help—"

At that moment the door opened, and Florence entered, attended by Mr. Plowden.

Her keen eyes saw at once that something was wrong, and her intelligence told her what it was. After her bold fashion, she determined to take the bull by the horns. Unless something were done, with Dorothy at her back, Eva might prove obdurate after all.

Advancing, she shook Dorothy cordially by the hand.

"I see from your face," she said, "that you have just heard the good news. Mr. Plowden is so shy that he would not consent to announce it before; but here he is to receive your congratulations."

Mr. Plowden took the cue, and advanced effusively on Dorothy with outstretched hand. "Yes, Miss Jones, I am sure you will congratulate me; and I ought to be congratulated; I am the luckiest—"

Here he broke off. It really was very awkward. His hand remained limply hanging in the air before Dorothy, but not the slightest sign did that dignified little lady show of taking it. On the contrary, she drew herself up to her full height—which was not very tall—and fixing her steady blue eyes on the clergyman's shifty orbs, deliberately placed her right hand behind her back.

"I do not shake hands with people who play such tricks," she said quietly.

Mr. Plowden's hand fell to his side and he stepped back. He did not expect such courage in anything so small. Florence, however, sailed in to the rescue.

"Really, Dorothy, we do not quite understand."

"Oh, yes, I think you do, Florence, or if you do not, then I will explain. Eva here was engaged to marry Ernest Kershaw. Eva here has just with her own lips told me that she still loves Ernest, but that she is obliged to marry—that man," and she pointed with her little forefinger at Plowden, who recoiled another step. "Is not that true, Eva?"

Eva bowed her head, by way of answer. She still sat in the low chair, with her hands over her face.

"Really, Dorothy, I fail to see what right you have to interfere in this matter," said Florence.

"I have the right of common justice, Florence—the right a friend has to protect the absent. Oh, are you not ashamed of such a wicked plot to wrong an absent man? Is there no way (addressing Mr. Plowden) in which I can appeal to your feelings to induce you to free this wretched girl you have entrapped?"

"I only ask my own," said Mr. Plowden, sulkily.

"For shame! for shame! and you a minister of God's word! And you too, Florence! Oh, now I can read your heart, and see the bad thoughts looking from your eyes!"

Florence for a moment was abashed and turned her face aside.

"And you, Eva, how can you become a party to such a shameful thing? You, a good girl, to sell yourself away from dear Ernest to such a man as that;" and again she pointed contemptuously to Mr. Plowden.

"Oh, don't, Dorothy, don't; it is my duty. You don't understand."

"Oh, yes, Eva, I do understand. I understand that it is your duty to drown yourself before you do such a thing. I am a woman as well as you, and, though I am not beautiful, I have a heart and conscience, and I understand only too well."

"You will be lost if you drown yourself—I mean it is very wicked," said Mr. Plowden to Eva, suddenly assuming his clerical character as most likely to be effective. The suggestion alarmed him. He had bargained for a live Eva.

"Yes, Mr. Plowden," went on Dorothy, "you are right; it would be wicked, but not so wicked as to marry you. God gave us women our lives, but he put a spirit in our hearts which tells us that we should rather throw them away than suffer ourselves to be degraded. O Eva, tell me that you will not do this shameful thing; no, do not whisper to her, Florence."

"Dorothy, Dorothy," said Eva, rising and wringing her hands, "it is all useless. Do not break my heart with your cruel words. I must marry him. I have fallen into the power of people who do not know what mercy is."

"Thank you," said Florence.

Mr. Plowden scowled darkly.

"Then I have done;" and Dorothy walked toward the door. Before she reached it she paused and turned: "One word, and I will trouble you no more. What do you all expect will come of this wicked marriage?"

There was no answer. Then Dorothy went.

But her efforts did not stop there. She made her way straight to Mr. Cardus' office.

"O Reginald!" she said, "I have such dreadful news for you. There, let me cry a little first and I will tell you."

And she did, telling him the whole story from beginning to end. It was entirely new to him, and he listened with some astonishment, and with a feeling of something like indignation against Ernest. He had intended that young gentleman to fall in love with Dorothy, and, behold, he had fallen in love with Eva. Alas for the perversity of youth!

"Well," he said, when she had done, "and what do you wish me to do? It seems that you have to do with a heartless, scheming woman, a clerical cad, and a beautiful fool. One might deal with the schemer and the fool, but no power on earth can soften the cad. At least that is my experience. Besides, I think the whole thing is much better left alone. I should be very sorry to see Ernest married to a woman so worthless as this Eva must be. She is handsome, it is true, and that is about all she is, as far as I can see. Don't distress yourself, my dear; he will get over it, and after he has had his fling out there, and lived down that duel business, he will come home, and, if he is wise, I know where he will look for consolation."

Dorothy tossed her head and colored.

"It is not a question of consolation," she said, "it is a question of Ernest's happiness in life."

"Don't alarm yourself, Dorothy; people's happiness is not so easily affected. He will forget all about her in a year."

"I think that men always talk of each other like that, Reginald," said Dorothy, resting her head upon her hands and looking straight at the old gentleman. "Each of you likes to think that he has a monopoly of feeling, and that the rest of his kind are as shallow as a milk-pan. And yet it was only last night that you were talking to me about my mother. You told me, you remember, that life had been a worthless thing to you since she was torn from you, which no success had been able to render pleasant. You said more, you said you hoped that the end was not far off, that you had suffered enough and waited enough, and that, though you had not seen her face for five-and-twenty years, you loved her as wildly as you did the day when she first promised to become your wife."

Mr. Cardus had risen, and was looking through the glass door at the blooming orchids. Dorothy got up, and following him, laid her hand upon his shoulder.

"Reginald," she said, "think. Ernest is about to be robbed of his wife under circumstances curiously like those by which you were robbed of yours. Unless it is prevented, what you have suffered all your life that he will suffer also. Remember you are of the same blood, and, allowing for the difference between your ages, of very much the same temperament, too. Think how different life would have been to you if any one had staved off your disaster, and then I am sure you will do all you can to stave off his."

"Life would have been non-existent for you," he answered, "for you would never have been born."

"Ah, well," she said with a little sigh, "I am sure I should have got on very well without. I could have spared myself."

Mr. Cardus was a keen man, and could see as far into the human heart as most.

"Girl," he said, contracting his white eyebrows and suddenly turning round upon her, "you love Ernest yourself. I have often suspected it, now I am sure you do."

Dorothy flinched.

"Yes," she answered, "I do love him; what then?"

"And yet you are advocating my interference to secure his marriage with another woman, a worthless creature who does not know her own mind. You cannot really care about him."

"Care about him!" and she turned her sweet blue eyes upward. "I love him with all my heart and soul and strength. I have always loved him; I shall always love him. I love him so well that I can do my duty to him, Reginald. It is my duty to strain every nerve to prevent this marriage. I had rather that my heart should ache than Ernest's. I implore of you to help me!"

"Dorothy, it has always been my dearest wish that you should marry Ernest. I told him so just before that unhappy duel. I love you both. All the fibres of my heart that are left alive have wound themselves around you. Jeremy I could never care for. Indeed, I fear that I used sometimes to treat the boy harshly. He reminds me so of his father; and do you know, my dear, I sometimes think that on that point I am not quite sane? But, because you have asked me to do it and because you have quoted your dear mother, may peace be with her! I will do what I can. This girl Eva is of age, and I will write and offer her a home. She need fear no persecution here."

"You are kind and good, Reginald, and I thank you."

"The letter shall go by to-night's post. But run away now, I see my friend De Talor coming to speak to me," and the white eyebrows drew themselves together in a way that it would have been unpleasant for the great De Talor to behold. "That business is drawing toward its end."

"O Reginald," answered Dorothy, shaking her forefinger at him in her old, childish way, "haven't you given up those ideas yet? They are very wrong."

"Never mind, Dorothy. I shall give them up soon, when I have squared accounts with De Talor. A year or two more—a stern chase is a long chase, you know—and the thing will be done, and then I shall become a good Christian again."

The letter was written. It offered Eva a home and protection.

In due course an answer signed by Eva herself came back. It thanked him for his kindness, and regretted that circumstances and "her sense of duty" prevented her from accepting the offer.

Then Dorothy felt that she had done all that in her lay, and gave the matter up.

It was about this time that Florence drew another picture. It represented Eva as Andromeda gazing hopelessly into the dim light of a ghastly dawn out across a glassy sea; and far away in the oily depths there was a ripple, and beneath the ripple a form travelling toward the chained maiden. The form had a human head and cold, gray eyes, and its features were those of Mr. Plowden.

And so, day by day, Destiny thrown in space, shot her flaming shutters from darkness into darkness, and the time passed on, as the time must pass, till the inevitable end of all things is attained.

Eva existed and suffered, and that was all she did. She scarcely ate or drank, or slept. But still she lived; she was not brave enough to die, and the chains were riveted too fast around her tender wrists to let her flee away. Poor nineteenth century Andromeda! No Perseus shall come to save you.

The sun rose and set in his appointed course, the flowers bloomed and died, children were born and the allotted portion of mankind passed onward to its rest; but no Perseus came flying out of the golden east.

Once more the sun rose. The dragon heaved his head above the quiet waters, and she was lost. By her own act, of her own folly and weakness, she was undone. Behold her! the wedding is over. The echoes of the loud mockery of the bells have scarcely died upon the noon-day air, and in her chamber, the chamber of her free and happy maidenhood, the virgin martyr stands alone.

It is done. There lie the sickly-scented flowers, there, too, the bride's white robe. It is done. Oh, that life were done too, that she might once press her lips to his and die.

The door opens, and Florence stands before her, pale, triumphant, awe-inspiring.

"I must congratulate you, my dear Eva. You really went through the ceremony very well, only you looked like a statue."

"Florence, why do you come to mock me?"

"Mock you, Eva, mock you! I come to wish you joy as Mr. Plowden's wife. I hope that you will be happy."

"Happy! I shall never be happy. I detest him!"

"You detest him, and you marry him; there must be some mistake."

"There is no mistake—O Ernest, my darling!"

Florence smiled.

"If Ernest is your darling, why did you not marry Ernest?"

"How could I marry him when you forced me into this?"

"Forced you! A free woman of full age can not be forced. You married Mr. Plowden of your own will. You might have married Ernest Kershaw if you chose. He is in many ways a more desirable match than Mr. Plowden, but you did not choose."

"Florence, what do you mean? You always said it was impossible. Oh, this is all some cruel plot of yours?"

"Impossible! there is nothing impossible to those who have courage. Yes," and she turned upon her sister fiercely, "it was a plot, and you shall know it, you poor, weak fool! I loved Ernest Kershaw, and you robbed me of him, although you promised to leave him alone, and so I have revenged myself upon you. I despise you, I tell you; you are quite contemptible, and yet he could prefer you to me. Well, he has got his reward. You have deserted him when he was absent and in trouble, and you have outraged his love and your own. You have fallen very low indeed, Eva, and you will fall lower yet. I know you well. You will sink, till at last, you even lose the sense of your own humiliation. Don't you wonder what Ernest must think of you now? There is Mr. Plowden calling you—come, it is time for you to be going."

Eva listened aghast, and then sank up against the wall, sobbing despairingly.

CHAPTER XXXI.

HANS' CITY OF REST.

Mr. Alston, Ernest and Jeremy had very good sport among the elephants, killing in all nineteen bulls. It was during that expedition that an incident occurred which in its effect endeared Ernest to Mr. Alston more than ever.

The boy Roger, who always went wherever Mr. Alston went, was the object of his father's most tender solicitude. He believed in the boy as he believed in little else in the world—for at heart Mr. Alston was a sad cynic—and to a certain extent the boy justified his belief. He was quick, intelligent and plucky, much such a boy as you may pick up by the dozen out of any English public school, except that his knowledge of men and manners was more developed, as is usual among young colonists. At the age of 12 Master Roger Alston knew many things denied to most children of his age. On the subject of education Mr. Alston had queer ideas. "The best education for a boy," he would say, "is to mix with grown-up gentlemen. If you send him to school, he learns little except mischief; if you let him live with gentlemen he learns at any rate to be a gentleman."

But whatever Master Roger knew, he did not know much about elephants, and on this point he was destined to gain some experience.

One day—it was just after they had got into the elephant country—they were all engaged in following the fresh spoor of an apparently solitary bull. But, though an elephant is a big beast, it is hard work catching him up, because he never seems to get tired, and this was exactly what our party of hunters found. They followed that energetic elephant for hours, but they could not catch him, though the spoorers told them that he certainly was not more than a mile or so ahead. At last the sun began to get low, and their legs had already got tired, so they gave it up for that day, determining to camp where they were. This being so, after a rest, Ernest and the boy Roger started out of camp to see if they could not shoot a buck or some birds for supper. Roger had a repeating Winchester carbine, Ernest a double-barrelled shot-gun. Hardly had they left the camp when Aasvogel, Jeremy's Hottentot, came running in, and reported that he had seen the elephant, an enormous bull with a white spot upon his trunk, feeding in a clump of mimosa, not a quarter of a mile away. Up jumped Mr. Alston and Jeremy, as fresh as though they had not walked a mile, and seizing their double-eight elephant rifles, started off with Aasvogel.

Meanwhile Ernest and Roger had been strolling toward this identical clump of mimosa. As they neared it, the former saw some Guinea-fowl run into the shelter of the trees.

"Capital!" he said; "Guinea-fowl are first-class eating. Now, Roger, just you go into the bush and drive the flock over me. I'll stand here and make believe they are pheasants."

The lad did as he was bid. But in order to get well behind the covey of Guinea-fowl, which are dreadful things to run, he made a little circuit through the thickest part of the clump. As he did so his quick eye was arrested by a most unusual performance on the part of one of the flat-crowned mimosa-trees. Suddenly, and without the slightest apparent reason, it rose into the air, and then, behold, where its crown appeared a moment before, appeared its roots.

Women's Work and Ways.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote "Marathon" when she was 11 years of age. Copies of it are exceedingly rare.

Adelina Patti has a weakness for collecting autographs, and the signature of nearly every notable person in the world is to be found in her albums.

Miss Carey Thomas, the dean of the new female college at Bryn Mawr, took her degree at the University of Zurich. This degree is conferred only once in ten years.

A new employment for women is suggested by Mr. A. J. Harvey, who does not see why they should not tune their own pianos, and find suitable and remunerative work in tuning the pianos of others.

During the last eight years the Empress Augusta has presented the gold cross and insignia, bearing the imperial autograph, upon 1,156 women servants who have completed the required forty years of unbroken service in one family.

Boston has a gymnasium exclusively for the use of women. It has six bowling alleys, a tennis court, a gymnasium hall, a running track of twenty laps to the mile, hot and cold water baths, etc. It was projected by Miss Mary Allen, who has for years been a devotee of physical culture. It is well patronized.

Mrs. Haddock, of Iowa, in her paper on "Women as Landlords," read at the Women's Congress in Louisville, estimates that 1,000 women own and manage farms in her own State, while in Oregon women farmers are so numerous that they excite no comment. The number of women land owners is increasing all over the Union.

The Home for Overworked Horses, established in London through the efforts of Miss Linde, reaches farther than its name implies, inasmuch as it benefits man as well as beast. The object is to provide quarters where poor cabbies and tradesmen may obtain rest and treatment for their animals at a moderate cost, or free of all charge, as the circumstances indicate. Horses of well-to-do people will also be treated and cared for. It has been found expedient in the present state of the finances of the establishment to drop the scheme of lending horses to the poorer of those who make use of its benefits.

Miniature Stoves to Carry in Pockets.

Within the last fortnight, and especially during the recent cold snap, some of our peddlers have been making quite a fortune with a little device called a pocket warmer, which is simplicity itself and may be of value to the energetic people who walk across the bridge every morning and think they know all about Dr. Kane's sensation when he thought he had found the North Pole. It is nothing more nor less than a small tin box an inch in diameter and six inches long, holding a fuse of some slow burning material, which gives out considerable heat, but no smoke or gas; it burns for more than an hour and placed in a muff or in a pocket will give a tremendous amount of heat, while it can also be used as a foot warmer for carriages and sleighs. The apparatus costs but a trifle and each fuse costs one cent.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Dr. Chalmers Baffled.

When Dr. Chalmers became minister of Kilmany, in the north of Fife, he used to get his supplies from Anstruther. On one occasion—so the story runs—he sent a written order for a sack of corn to a Mr. Thomson there. The corn never came, and Chalmers was much annoyed. Next time he was in Anstruther he called on Mr. Thomson for an explanation. It was soon given. The merchant had been unable to decipher the minister's hieroglyphics and had put the note in his desk until Mr. Chalmers should call. "Not make out my writing!" exclaimed Chalmers indignantly—"Show it to me." He read a few words, but then he stuck, completely baffled. He was, however, equal to the occasion. With a pawky smile he returned the letter to the merchant, saying, "But the letter is addressed to you, Mr. Thomson; it is your business to read it, not mine."

Mrs. Howell, of Paulding, Ga., was passing her husband, a few days ago, just as he tried to light a match by striking it on the wall. The head of the match flew off and lodged in her ear. In one minute she became blind, began to vomit, and was prostrated for an hour and a half.

Grecian children were taught to reverence and emulate the virtues of their ancestors. Our educational forces are so wielded as to teach our children to admire most that which is foreign and fabulous and dead.—Garfield.

Our Darling's Sleep.

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

So children sleep! And as we stoop to kiss
The radiant face or stroke the sunny hair,
We leave with God the secret of their bliss
And love Him for the happy look they wear.

Or should we ask, why do our darlings smile?
What golden dreams their sleeping hours employ?
The answer comes, the soul that knows no guile
Lives ever in the light of heavenly joy.

Not childhood only, whose unconscious mind
Is chiefly pure through ignorance of sin,
But riper age the blessedness may find
Of innocence and guilelessness within.

Thus men have lived and died in God's embrace,
Not dreaming, but fulfilling noble things;
Their childlike souls looked goodness in the face,
And caught the likeness of the King of kings.

The everlasting arms are still outspread
To bear the burden of each human life,
And whosoever will may lay his head
Against the heart of God and cease from strife.

There cast thy being; and the dark nightshade
Of this poor world's commotion and unrest
Will have no terrors for thee, calmly laid
In God's kind bosom—pillowed on His breast.

Getting Threadbare.

(From Puck.)

Pray do not think me cold,
Adelaide,
And do not chide nor scold,
Sweetest maid,
If I tell you, very clearly,
That, although I love you dearly,
Of your passionate embraces I'm afraid.

I worship and adore,
Adelaide,
As I have said before,
Winsome jade;
But new clothes are quite expensive,
And I'm rather apprehensive,
That this coat upon the shoulder's getting frayed.

Your peachy cheek, so soft,
Adelaide,
Upon that spot so oft
You have laid,
That the nap long since departed,
And now the web is started,
Why, the garment very soon will be decayed.

O, do not shed that tear,
Adelaide,
But loan me while I'm here,
As a trade,
That most ancient linen duster
That your father used to muster,
When the mercury marked ninety in the shade.

The British National Anthem.

ADAPTED FOR THE YEAR OF JUBILEE.

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen.
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious;
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen.

Thy choicest gifts in store
On her be pleased to pour,
Long may she reign.
May she defend our laws,
And ever give us cause
To sing with heart and voice,
God save the Queen.

Seed sown through fifty years,
Sown or in smiles or tears,
Grant her to reap:
Her heritage of fame,
Her pure and stainless name,
Her [illegible]le free from shame,
Guard Thou and keep.

O'er lands and waters wide,
Through changing time and tide,
Hear when we call:
Where'er our English tongue
To wind and wave hath rung,
Still be our anthem sung;
God save us all.

SNOWBALLS AND BULLETS.

Schoolboy Shot by a Pinkerton Man while Snowballing.

A Jersey City, N.J., despatch says: Yesterday afternoon while a number of boys were playing in an open lot at the corner of Henderson and Eighteenth streets, in this city, adjoining the yards of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, a fracas occurred between the boys and Pinkerton's men, and Thomas Hogan, 16 years old, a looker-on, was shot and killed by one of Pinkerton's men who were stationed in the company's property. Occasionally the boys rained a shower of snowballs and other missiles upon the men. On the west side of Henderson street a crowd of strikers and their sympathizers were assembled, and they lent encouragement to the boys by their smiles of approval. At length the leader of the Pinkerton men stepped forward and ordered the boys to stop throwing the missiles. The boys did not obey, and almost immediately three sharp cracks of a revolver rang out and Hogan fell dead.

The excitement was intense, and the lookers-on fled in every direction. The leader of the strikers, as soon as he could get his men together, ordered them back to their headquarters at the corner of Henderson and Ferry streets. Hogan was returning home from work when he met his death. The police collected a number of witnesses of the shooting, and marched the Pinkerton men out in line. He then ordered the witnesses to identify the men who shot. They selected Patrick Sheehy, Daniel Cahill and S. A. Neff, and identified them as the three men who fired at the boys. The inspector of police examined their revolvers and found every chamber loaded. The men were taken to police headquarters and held for bail.

A Scandalous Story Confirmed.

A Lansing, Mich., despatch says: Before the House Judiciary Committee to-day Representative Breen, of Menominee, confirmed the charge that there has been a regular trade in young girls between Milwaukee and Chicago and the mining regions of the Upper Peninsula. Mr. Breen said that the horrors of the camps into which these girls are inveigled cannot be adequately described. There is no escape for the poor creatures. In one case a girl escaped after being shot in the leg and took refuge in a swamp. Dogs were started on her trail, and she was hunted down and taken back to the den. In another case, a girl escaped while a dance was going on at the shanty into which she had been lured. After several days and nights of privation she made her way to an island near the shore in Lake Michigan, where a man named Stanley lived. But the dogs and human bloodhounds trailed her, Stanley was overcome and the girl was taken back. The law now provides for imprisonment of only one year in case of conviction of any connection with this traffic, and it is proposed to amend it.

He Wasn't a Snow Shoveller.

Farmer—"Do you want this job of shovelling snow?"

Tramp—"I am not a snow shoveller; I sprinkle lawns. The man who shovels snow will be along in about ten minutes."

NEW KIND OF SCHOOL.

To Use the Hands as Well as Eyes a Great Idea in Education.

There is a new kind of school and there are new lessons and new teachers coming, says "St. Nicholas." Books we must have. To learn we must read. But we may read all about boats, and yet we can never learn to sail a boat till we take the tiller in hand and trim the sail before the breeze. The book will help wonderfully in telling us the names of things in the boat and, if we have read about sailing, we shall more quickly learn to sail; but we certainly never shall learn till we are in a real boat. We can read in a book how to turn a heel in knitting and may commit to memory whole rules about "throwing off two and purl four," and all the rest; yet where is the girl who can learn to knit without having the needles in her hands?

This then is the idea of the new school—to use the hands as well as the eyes. Boys and girls who go to the ordinary schools, where only books are used, will graduate knowing a great deal; but a boy who goes to one of these new schools where, besides the books, there are pencils and tools, work benches as well as writing books, will know more. The other boys and girls may forget more than half they read, but he will remember everything he learned at the drawing table or at the work bench as long as he lives. He will also remember more of that which he reads, because his work with his hands helps him to understand what he reads.

I remember long ago a tear-stained book of tables of weights and measures and a teacher's impatience with a stupid child who could not master the "tables." And I have seen a school where the tables were written on a blackboard, thus: "Two pints are equal to one quart," and on a stand in the school-room were a tin pint measure and a tin quart measure and a box of dry sand. Every happy youngster had a chance to fill that pint measure with sand and pour the sand into the quart measure. Two pints filled it. He knew it. Did he not see it? Did not every boy try it? Ah! Now they knew what it all meant. It was as plain as day that two pints of sand were equal to one quart of sand; and with merry smiles those 6-year-old philosophers learned the tables of measures; and they will never forget them. This is, in brief, what is meant by industrial education. To learn by using the hands, to study from things as well as from books. This is the new school, these are the new lessons. The children who can sew and design, or draw, or carve wood, or do joinering work, or cast metals, or work in clay and brass, are the best educated children, because they use their hands as well as their eyes and their brains. You may say that in such schools all the boys will become mechanics and all the girls dressmakers. Some may; many will not; and yet whatever they do, be it preaching, keeping a store, or singing in concerts, they will do their work better than those who only read in books.

A COUNTERFEIT HOUSEMAID.

How She Captivated Horsemen and Captured Their Pocketbooks.

A New York despatch says: Forty-five Lexington avenue is a respectable-looking house in a quiet spot, not far from the residences of the late Chester A. Arthur and John Kelly, and close to a distinctly fashionable quarter. At the nearest corner is a horse mart, where sellers and buyers of fast trotters congregate a great deal. During the past month or so the peculiar thing about No. 45 has been a wondrously pretty housemaid, who burnished the front windows with daily industry and grace. She was a slender blonde, wearing a plain black dress, a white apron and a jaunty lace cap, after the fashion of neat domestic servants in the households of the rich. For about an hour every forenoon and afternoon she was visible from the street, as she stood picturesquely poised on a stepladder inside the window, at work on the panes. The turfmen observed her; many of them flirted with her. Not a few, being shyly encouraged, made her acquaintance, to be naively invited to call at a certain time, when the mistress would be out. Nearly every admiring visitor left his wallet, his watch or some jewellery in possession of the girl, and kept his loss to himself, not caring to stand the ridicule of his acquaintances. But one case has got to the police, and it turns out that the maid is a counterfeit. She is the head and all of the establishment, an adventuress, who conceived and executed the adroit plan, as described, to rob inveigled triflers.

Language of Gloves.

For "Yes," drop one glove from the right into the left hand. "No" is said by rolling both gloves in the right hand. If you want to express that you are indifferent to a partner, take the right hand glove partly off. If you wish a male friend to follow you into the next room, strike your left arm with both gloves. "I love you still," is expressed by slowly and carefully smoothing both gloves. If the fair she desires to know whether her affection is reciprocated, she is to put on half the left hand glove, one finger at a time. "Be on your guard against the governor," or "my mother-in-law," as the case may be, is a message often sent, and is given by delicately twisting the glove fingers round the thumb. If the damsel is in a quarrelsome mood she simply makes a cross with both her gloves and proceeds to lay them on her lap in this position. These are the principal and most simple rules.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Cranks in Britain.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching," and each boy marches in a more peculiar way than his predecessor. First we had the man with the wheelbarrow, who has got safely back to Dundee; next there was a gentleman who started with a pile of bricks on his head; and the latest performance is that of an old army pensioner, who has started to walk from Jarrow to Newport, in Monmouthshire, carrying a bucket of coals weighing ten pounds.—London Globe.

There is a large and active leaven of righteousness in the wicked city of Louisville, Ky., in the person of the Rev. Stephen Holcombe. Mr. Holcombe is a genuine reformed gambler, and conducts a mission in that city, and the conversions among the sporting men there speak loudly of the Rev. Steve's honesty and faithfulness.

EMMA MOORE'S BLIGHTED LIFE.

Dramatic Scene in Court—Acquitted on a Charge of Husband Murder.

When Emma Moore, of Port Huron, Mich., a girl of 18, married Captain Duncan McCraig five years ago she was considered to be the most beautiful girl in Port Huron, and she was as lovely in disposition as in face and form. Captain McCraig was more than ten years older than his wife, a vessel owner and one of the best known captains on the chain of great lakes. Soon after their marriage Captain McCraig, who drank freely, grew jealous of the admiration his wife's beauty excited on all sides, and they soon quarrelled. A little daughter came, but failed to heal the breach, and after a time Mrs. McCraig left her husband and went back to the home of her parents. Two years ago they were divorced on account of the captain's abuse, and then he grew more insanely jealous of her and made her life a burden. While in his cups he would frequently attack her character, and there were not wanting those who feared some dreadful tragedy would end it all.

THE TRAGEDY.

These apprehensions were realized on March 25th, 1886. On that day Captain McCraig, who was arranging for the opening of navigation, became intoxicated and at midnight was taken to his home by friends. He did not stay there, however, but immediately went to the house of Mrs. McCraig—or Miss Moore, for she had taken her maiden name—and aroused the house and neighborhood by his efforts to get in. Her aged father went out and tried to pacify the enraged man, who pushed his way into the house and to his former wife's chamber. The infuriated man attacked his wife in her night-clothes and brutally beat her until, fearing for her life, she fled to another room, procured a shotgun, and, returning, shot the drunken madman dead. No tragedy ever before occurred here which caused so profound a sensation.

THE ARREST AND TRIAL.

Miss Moore was arrested, jailed and subsequently bailed. Her trial for murder was looked forward to for months as a great event. It began a week ago, and attracted immense crowds of people, including the most prominent men and women of the place. A jury of farmers was finally secured, and the defendant's counsel announced that the defence was justifiable homicide. The prosecuting attorney was assisted by the ablest counsel in the city, and Miss Moore's interests were in capable hands. When the fair prisoner gave her testimony the court room could not begin to hold the people. There was not a dry eye in the room when she had finished her story. She told of her blighted life, the abuse she had suffered from McCraig, and how on the tragic night, goaded to desperation by his assault, his cruel words of slander, and afraid of her life, she shot him. "So help me, God," she concluded, "I did not mean to kill him, but if I did wrong I am willing to take the consequences." She rose as she said this, and the tears in her eyes could no longer be kept back. The greatest silence reigned. Then the jury retired, and in a short time brought in a verdict of "not guilty." Judge Stearns forbade any demonstration.

A Snow Battle by British Soldiers.

The 2nd Royal Inniskillen Fusiliers, at Aldershot, England, divided into two opposing forces of about 350 officers, non-commissioned officers and privates each, varied their work at snow-clearing one day recently with an exciting snow fight, which lasted nearly two hours. The right wing was commanded by Colonel G. B. Stokes (commanding the battalion), the left wing by Major Wodehouse, whose chief of the staff was Captain Greenfield. Both wings occupy lines in the South Camp and two parade grounds about 200 yards apart. Col. Stokes, having resolved to take the opposing wing by surprise, sent forward an advanced guard, which, having moved stealthily over the snow, fortified itself in a well-formed snow fort until the arrival of the main body under Col. Stokes, who immediately sent a strong line of skirmishers into the lines occupied by the opposing force, which was mercilessly subjected to volleys of glittering snowballs before it could realize the fact that it was taken by surprise. The buglers at once sounded the alarm and assembly in the besieged lines, and officers and men rallied—some without jackets or tunics, and some without any head-dress—on the private parade ground and advanced to storm the fort. Ten times in succession the assaulting force was gallantly led by its officers to the glacis of the fort; but, notwithstanding partial lodgments, it was as many times repulsed, the few men left behind in the work being nearly smothered with snow. Ultimately the commander of the assailants detached a strong party under Capt. Greenfield to take the fort in flank; but for this move Colonel Stokes had not been unprepared. Without materially weakening his front or right flank, he massed superior numbers against the storming party, literally overwhelming it. Then the buglers sounded the cessation of hostilities and each force, claiming the victory, retired from the field completely exhausted. By the time the fight was over not a trace of the fort could be seen.

The Toboggan N. G.

A couple of the typical round-town boys, rough and ready, ragged and saucy, were standing before a hardwere store examining the Canadian idea in New England, yclept the toboggan. They took hold of the side rail with their grimy hands and smoothed the bottom of the broad sled with their hardened palms.

"Them's the dandies," remarked one of the urchins.

"N-a-w. They ain't no use at all," replied the other, with an expression like a sniff of fried onion. "No feller can ever go belly slapper on 'em, 'n they're no good."—Hartford Post.

A young lady of Louisville was carefully picking her way along a slippery sidewalk the other day just behind an elderly and portly man. Suddenly he slipped, and in his efforts to keep from falling down he threw one hand backward and struck the young lady squarely and violently on the nose. The blow stunned her so that she had to be assisted into an adjacent store, and an examination by a physician developed the fact that her nose had been broken. Both eyes became blackened by the injury.

POCKETS OF THE FAIR.

Safe and Handy Receptacles of the Sex Not Yet Invented.

The exploits of the child thief, Lillian Smith, have led to some comments on the female method of carrying the pocket-book. Notwithstanding all the genius and labor which have been expended on woman's apparel since Eve left the Garden of Eden, the sex has not yet been provided with a successful pocket. To produce this, safety and convenience must both be consulted. When a woman enjoys a safe receptacle it is not a convenient one, and vice versa. Diedrich Knickerbocker tells of the marvellous pockets of the matrons of New Amsterdam, who rarely lost anything from them by theft, but it sometimes took the good women several hours to find in them what they wanted to use themselves. We live in too rapid an age to permit a return to this kind of security. The male trousers pocket is so located and constructed that only the most skilful thief ventures to tamper with it, and he does so at great risk. The fob pocket is almost absolutely secure. Mr. Weller, indeed, relates an incident where an expert butted his head against the abdomen of a fat man who scoffingly defied him, and, taking advantage of the collapse, secured his watch; but this was a plain case of highway robbery, and is not here to be considered. So far as men are concerned, the problem of the pocket may be said to be satisfactorily solved. The prospect of relief to women in this respect is far from clear. Questions of anatomy, pride in personal appearance, modesty and the various descriptions of mysterious machinery and cordage—of which there are suggestions in modistes' windows—serve to complicate the difficulty. The philosopher and philanthropist of the sterner sex can do no more in the premises than point out the necessity for an adequate invention. The rest women must do for themselves.—New York World.

Overheated Factories.

A cause of annoyance at one of the largest factories of the State lately has been the illness of most of the employees from severe colds. The condition of the work people has not interrupted the progress of manufacturing, as an epidemic of fever or some contagious disease might do, but it has been serious enough to attract the notice of the officers, to bring the attention of the public to the matter, and to cause an investigation of reasons for the ill-health and to suggest possible remedies. In each department some of the employees are absent from duty and the majority are suffering from coughs, influenza and other forms of the harassing ailment which brings distress, but little sympathy. The foreman, upon being questioned on the cause of the disturbance, invariably replied that one reason was undoubtedly the sudden change from the overheated air of the factory to the cold out-of-door air felt by the employees when they were dismissed. All would rush out of doors at the sound of the bell, and the shock would weaken them, so that the sudden exposure could not be endured night after night. Another cause given was the exposure to draughts of air from windows opened when the employees could no longer work comfortably in the close, heated atmosphere. Each reason seemed to point to the need of better ventilation in the factory. The experience of this large establishment, which is rather exceptional in its fine, large, sunny rooms and comfortable furnishings, is illustrative of similar circumstances in many mills in the State. Since most of the important factories were erected before the principles of sanitary science were generally recognized as essential to healthful conditions, the system of ventilation is oftener the result of chance than of science. Large workrooms in which many employees work together are usually overheated and insufficiently ventilated. In these rooms occupied by many people colds become prevalent, and consumption and rheumatism, the enemies of all who are subjected to exposure or unsanitary conditions, weaken the vitality of the workers and cause constant change in the force of employees. When to the evil of overheated rooms is added the ignorance of many work people in the rules of diet and other laws of healthful living, it is, perhaps, surprising that the health reports of large cities show such steady progress in length of life attained by the average. The remedies for overheated work-rooms and factories are comparatively simple, though they may be both elaborate and expensive. It would be the height of sanitary improvement to add the open fireplace ventilation now widely employed in the construction of school-houses. But when this arrangement is impossible there are many simple devices for window ventilation which could be used with good results at small cost. Many large factories and shops have given opportunities in education to their employees through lectures upon topics of hygiene, and when the lecturer is practical and not too abstruse in his presentation of the theme the employees are much benefitted. In some foreign factories a physician is employed by the manufacturers for the consultation and assistance of the work people, and if illness becomes a serious cause of interruption to work in this country, the factory doctor may be a necessary official.—Boston Journal.

A Call From Trinity

Trinity Church has extended a call to Rev. Francis Lobdell, D.D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, New York, to become its rector. Dr. Lobdell is a man of 50 years, an able preacher, vigorous and robust in physique and a worker. He has added 1,200 communicants to St. Andrew's in the past ten years. The Church has now over 1,000 members.

Who Was Boss, Anyhow?

Mr. Stiggins (his friends had brought him home from the club in a highly inebriated condition)—Boyze, came in wiz me an get er (hic) drink. Thish my house. I'm boss (hic) here!

Mrs. Stiggins (from the window)—Please leave the boss on the steps, gentlemen, and I'll come down and fetch him in.

"And that is silver ore, is it?" said Mrs. Snaggs, as she examined a piece of curious looking mineral. "Yes, my dear," replied her husband. "And how do they get the silver out?" "They smelt it." "Well, that's queer," she added, after applying her nose to the ore; "I smelt it, too, but didn't get any silver."

MEN WITH BREATH OF FIRE.

Not Imps from the Foul Side of the Styx, But Real Human Beings.

We had occasion in a recent number to refer to a remarkable case in which the breath of an individual, or rather the eructations from his stomach, took fire when brought in contact with a lighted match. This case, which was reported in the Medical Record, has called forth communications from physicians by which it would appear that the phenomenon is not such a rare one as was at first supposed. In one case of disordered digestion the patient emitted inflammable gas from the mouth, which, upon analysis, was found to be largely composed of marsh gas. In another case the gas was sulphureted hydrogen. A case is reported in the British Medical Journal, in which, while blowing out a match, the patient's breath caught fire with a noise like the report of a pistol, which was loud enough to awaken his wife. One evening, while a confirmed dyspeptic was lighting his pipe, an eructation of gas from his stomach occurred, and the ignited gas burned his mustache and lips. In Ewald's book on indigestion, the analysis of gas in one of these cases was: Carbonic acid, 20.57; hydrogen, 20.57; carbureted hydrogen, 20.75; oxygen, 6.72; nitrogen 41.38; sulphureted hydrogen, a trace. The origin of these gases is undoubtedly the undigested food, which in these cases undergoes decomposition.—Science.

Ammonia; or, Hartshorn.

(From Hall's Journal of Health.)

The original source of supply of ammonia was camel's dung. It is found in the refuse matters of men and animals, and especially in the urine. It is this that produces the pungent and sickening odor in urinals and neglected stables. It is, in its concentrated form, peculiarly destructive to the delicate tissues of the animal economy. The action of ammonia on the sensitive membranes of the eye is the most prominent cause of blindness in horses. Animals that are confined in close stables, where manure is allowed to accumulate in considerable quantity, are, in addition to blindness, peculiarly liable to diseases of the lungs and the kidneys from the action of ammonia. The effect of this drug seems to be cumulative, and when taken into the stomach in small doses repeatedly it is easy to conceive that its action must be irritating to the coating of the stomach, and to those far more sensitive membranes that line the passage of the urinary apparatus.

Ammonia is used in the manufacture of some baking powders, and probably one-half the cans of baking powder on grocers' shelves contain it. If you get the pungent fumes of ammonia, discard the baking powder. There are plenty of baking powders in the market that are made only from pure cream of tartar and bicarbonate of soda, with a little flour or starch combined as a preservative. Buy only baking powders that have printed guarantees on the labels, or in the circulars contained in the cans. No honest dealer in any class of goods intended as food, or to enter into foods, will refuse to furnish with each package the correct formula from which the goods are made. Every consumer has a right to know what he is using as food. We always refuse to buy goods of any kind that are branded Pure, Strictly Pure, or Absolutely Pure, unless in addition we are as plainly informed of just what they are made; and we think this rule is always a safe one.

Tea as a Beverage.

Use a china or porcelain pot. If you do use metal, let it be tin, new, bright and clean; never use when the tin is worn out and the iron exposed. If you do, you are playing chemist and forming a tannate or tea-ate of iron. Use black tea. Green tea when good is kept at home. What goes abroad is bad, very bad and horrible. Besides containing the 203 adulterations the Chinese philanthropist puts up for the outside barbarian, it is always pervaded by copper dust from the dirty curing pans of the growers. Infuse your tea. Don't boil it! Place one teaspoonful of tea in the pot and pour over it 1½ cups of boiling water, that is, water really boiling. If your tea is poor, use more. It is cheaper, though, to buy good tea at the outset. Put your pot on the back part of the stove, carefully covered, so that it shall not lose its heat and the tea its bouquet. Let it remain there five minutes, then drink it. Drink your tea plain. Don't add milk or sugar. Tea-brokers and tea-tasters never do; epicures never do; the Chinese never do. Milk contains fibrin, albumen, or some other stuff, and the tea a delicate amount of tannin. Mixing the two makes the liquid turbid. This turbidity, if I remember the cyclopædia aright, is tannate of fibrin, or leather. People who put milk in tea are therefore drinking boots and shoes in mild disguise. —Wong Chin Foo, in the Cook.

A Child's Explanation.

"Ma," says the inquiring child "what's the nights made for?"

"For little folks to sleep in and get rested, and feel good and be quiet."

"That ain't what the nights is made for."

"Yes, it is, my child."

"Oh, I know better, myself."

"Well, what are the nights made for?"

"Cos, if there was no nights, the days would all bunk in on one another."

She Wanted to be Remembered.

He was old and rich, and his niece, who had been visiting him, was about to go away.

"You will not forget me, will you, dear uncle?" she sobbed.

"In my solitude?"

"No, in your will."

POLITICAL POINTERS.

Dr. Jamieson opened the campaign in Artemesia last week. Rousing meetings were held in Thompson's neighborhood and Eugenia on Tuesday and Wednesday evening's respectively. Both meetings were largely in favor of the Doctor.

The battle goes bravely on in East Grey, and the 22nd of Feb. next will be the coldest day the Toronto lawyer, Mr. Gilray, has ever experienced. The latter talks of getting the Hon. Edward Blake up to help him, but bless you! Dr. Sproule can smash them both into smithereens! The Hon. Edward had better remain right where he is—he will find quite enough to do to beat his opponent in West Durham. Wouldn't it be funny if the said opponent should be elected? Stranger things have happened, you know.

And in North Grey the redoubtable Riellite, B. Allan, Esq., is going to be left at home by quite a comfortable majority. That's the proper place for men who cannot tell the difference between a patriot and a traitor when they go to Ottawa. By all means leave Benjamin at home and send a good staunch man like Mr. James Masson, Q. C., as your representative in the House of Commons.

There was more excitement in connection with the blaze in our schoolhouse the other evening, than there was on the day of the recent Provincial elections. Why is it more interest is not taken in the vital questions of the day? Tie a tin kettle to a dog's tail and let two or three boys go hooting after him a block or two on the streets, and you'd have heaps of excitement and interest. Will there be half the excitement among our townsmen and fellow-ratepayers on the 22nd Feb.? There ought to be an hundred times as much.

A remarkable similarity, in thought and expression, occured simultaneously in recent issues of the Grey Review and Hanover Post, which leads us to inquire: was it the same "little bird" whispered the same little yarn into each of the respective editors' ears? Both articles deplored the alleged lack of interest taken by the ratepayers in the recent provincial election in South Grey, in that the vote polled was much smaller than it should have been. It was large enough to elect our worthy and poplar friend, Blyth, by a good majority, and we apprehend that it will be quite large enough to place Dr. Jamieson at the head of the polls on the 22nd Feb. by a handsome majority.

Friends of Dr. Jamieson should see to it that not a stone is left unturned to secure his return by a sweeping majority. We believe in the most thorough kind of organization.—Don't neglect a solitary division in the riding. Use all honorable means to secure a hearty and full expression of public opinion at the polls. Dr. Jamieson is well worthy the enthusiastic support of every unprejudiced man in South Grey, and all should feel equally interested in securing his return as M. P. for the riding on the 22nd inst. Put your shoulders to the wheel, gentlemen. "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull together, my lads," and victory will be ours. Work, WORK, WORK!

MR. ANDREWS AGAIN.

The little man who pushes the Flesherton ADVANCE ate a very bitter leek last week. He made a false and malicious accusion against Mr. Thos. Andrews, of this town, a few weeks ago, but being threatened with summary proceedings found it most convenient to take it all back and apolgize.—Thornbury News.

We can understand and sympathise with the News in its frantic endeavor to cover up from the public gaze as much as possible its recent traitorous and unpatriotic political course, but why it should find it necessary to bring up the trifling affair, re Mr. Thos. Andrews, is a mystery to us. Mr. A. never threatened us with summary proceedings. He simply denied the correctness of the statement and asked us in justice to himself to place the matter properly before the public. We did so. But if, as the item quoted above would seem to indicate, Mr. Andrews has been telling the Editor of the News a different story, and trying to make it appear that we made a "malicious accusation" against him, then we have only to say that the former gentleman has stated what is absolutely untrue. And let us say further, that if the News persists in harping on that string much longer we shall feel called upon to defend ourself by publishing Mr. Andrews' letter to us verbatim et literatim

A few words to the public in reference to the News. While that journal has been trumpeting the virtues of Mr. Andrews for the position he took in sustaining and working for Capt. Rorke after the second convention, it persistently refuses to tell the public why it did not pursue the wise course adopted by Mr. Andrews. What blatant hypocrisy! In the very same breath it approves Mr. Andrews for supporting Capt. Rorke after the second convention, and pats itself on the back because it didn't do anything of the sort! What more is needed to convince an intelligent public, that the dublisher of the News is not only a hypocrite but a traitor.

We regret the necessity which compels us to open these "old sores;" but when people are so mighty anxious to get scorched it seems only natural to stretch forth the hand and supply the fire!

Manito-bitems!

JANUARY 18TH, 1887.

A second class blizzard,
Sweeps over the plain,
A little more snow
Without hail or rain.

Jan. 9th.—Calm, clear, cold and bracing. Jack frost busy, but not a symptom of that deathly chilliness experienced in warm climates in winter season. Snow only about three inches deep -not enough for good sleighing, but waggons run freely its so light and dry, and no mud.

Since last writing you, and up to the 16th, steady, endurable wintry weather continued. Then for a day or two a moderating, gentle "chinook wind" occurred—a "January thaw," for Manitoba, without rain, or "slush." Will write again in the not distant future. Think I have sufficiently cautioned Canadians against leaving "our Dominion."

PRICEVILLE AGAIN.

The Teacher's Further Defence.

"What stronger breastplate than a heart undaunted?
Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked though locked up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."
—SHAKESPEARE.

"Truth is mighty and must prevail" therefore I shall present a few truths to the public concerning Reiley and Prowler—Brander and their continued abuse. Reiley's poor old lion is trotted out to do service again and it puts us in mind of the story of the minister who took for his text, "The devil as a roaring lion goeth about, seeking whom he may devour." Now this minister had a fashion of using the pronoun 'he' after each noun and he divided his subject as follows. Firstly we will consider who the devil (he) is? Secondly, where the devil (he) is going? and Thirdly, What the devil (he) is roaring about? Now, whatever Reiley is roaring about, he and his lion certainly appear very ridiculous.

He says all he can think of against me and falsely too and then pretends that he would say more if I were only at hand. I have no doubt he and his clique could bake a similar batch of fabrications and serve them up hot to the public every fortnight or so for a year but to tell the truth and give one credit for what he deserves seems to be beyond their power. Poor souls they are to be pitied!

Mr. Reiley says the attendance in my department was only 20 per cent of that of the whole school. Now he had no means of knowing as the names of twenty of my pupils who where in the second class were on the register of the junior department of the school and as a matter of fact my attendance varied from 40 to 55 during the latter part of the year and averaging about 50 during the last month I taught; which however according to Reiley's arithmetic is 20 per cent of 110.

He also says Mr. D. has never attended any of our meetings here during his three years' stay." If he means the meetings of the clique and such persons held in hotels for purposes of joviality &c I plead guilty to the charge, but if he means soirees, entertainments, lectures etc. which had for their object some good cause then he is wrong for I have attended nearly all such meetings held in Priceville while I was in the village, and for some I could not attend I bought tickets. I help to support one of the resident ministers of Priceville, and attend the Sabbath services of his church—not in the village—but at a church in which he preaches, situated nearer my own home. I always went home Friday evening, a distance of six miles and returned Mon. morning.

Mr. Reiley speaks of a petition circulated against one of my first engagement over three years ago and he says I should have resigned. The Trustees who had engaged me at that time refused to allow me to resign and in the two following years re-engaged me as teacher thus showing that they considered that I was giving an equivalent for my money by advancing the school. In wailing about my salary took out of the section Mr. R. is like the little boy who spent his pennies for candy and after eating it cried because his money was gone.

The petition three years ago was not so much against me as for the purpose of retaining the previous teacher. I was not acquainted with the people of the village at that time except two or three families and of these none signed the petition. Mr. Reiley himself informed a gentleman shortly after I went to Priceville that the petitioners had at that time three things against me (1) I was a Methodist. (2) I was a temperate man. (3) My certificate was not such as to qualify me to teach the school. With regard to the last objection it may be interesting to know that I held and hold now a Second Class Normal School Certificate as a teacher in this Province. The other two objections merely go to show what kind of stuff the petitioners of Priceville are made of when they will object to any one on such grounds. The rest of Mr. Reiley's letter being only a rehash of what I have already answered in my communication to this paper which was published on 23, Dec., 86, I would refer my readers back to my previous letter and thus dismiss Mr. R.

Next comes Prowler.

"A would-be satirist and arch buffoon,
A monthly scribbler of some low lampoon,
He racks his brains, the meanest of the mean,
To furnish falsehoods for a magazine,
Devotes to slander his congenial mind;
Himself a living libel on mankind."

It is easy to understand his ready use of the word 'shoddy,' his dealings evidently being in that class of articles having no real foundation or permanency of construction.

He says I am not willing to pay a market value for anything I require. The market value is much higher in some places than in others and I ask you Mr. Editor what you suppose it would be in the shop where 8 cent tea dust was parcelled up in packages and marked 4 lbs tea at 30 cts. $1.20 in order to take in some poor person at an auction sale? Business done on such principles is enough to drive any one to look around to where he can get value for his money. It would be hard to get down to the market value of such goods.

About board he talks nonsense. I paid nearly twice as much as he says I was willing to pay and never asked any one in the section to board me for less, and I had no trouble in getting a boarding house at any time. I stayed first with a Methodist Minister and left his house when he began to prepare to move to another circuit. I then went to Mr Brander's and after boarding there more than a year he wanted to raise the price to a higher rate than I had ever paid since beginning to teach school. So I left his house and in an hour or two spent in making inquiries, I found an excellent boarding house at the same rate as I paid during my whole stay in the village.

He says the petition for the removal of the teachers was presented by about 40 ratepayers. I happened to be present at the Trustee meeting when it was presented and Mr. Reiley was the one who laid it before the Board and the only ratepayer who was present at the meeting except the other two Trustees. Then he talks of a Christian gentleman drawing up the first petition for our removal in an underhand manner and then going over to the 'anti-clique' side. This is another falsehood as the Christian gentleman he refers to was one of my supporters all the time and the petition he drew up was for the purpose of requesting the Trustees to deduct two weeks from the summer vacation and add them to the Christmas holidays and as soon as he saw the petition drawn up by the clique for our removal he opposed it.

Prowler then speaks of my often expressed opinions on religious doctrines. I do not remember of speaking to more than three persons in the section on the subject, and I expressed no sentiments which do not form part of the creed of some branch of the Christian Church. The three persons here referred to are the Methodist Minister, the School Inspector and Mr. Brander, the last mentioned being one of those headstrong mortals who must have all his own way and whose own opinions are everything to him. The idea of his talking about religious belief! Why he has not attended the church to which he pretends to belong for over a year, because the minister asserted his authority in a business meeting of the church to prevent Mr. B. from running things his own way.

In my former letter I made reference to 'some (not all) Priceville shopkeepers' but it seems Mr. Brander thinks the cap fits him as he makes haste to put it on and no doubt many will agree how well it becomes him. Thus arrayed he attacks me over his own signature to try to make the public believe that he is not the instigator of the Prowler articles but the public is not so easily gulled. I agree with him in the statement that "There are just as reliable, staunch and intelligent men and women shopkeepers as there are teachers in this county" and I never said anything to the contrary, but Mr. Brander 'is not the model we care to copy'.

The reason for the spiteful manner in which he has used me is that he got very much offended at me last Spring for doing my duty in notifying the Trustee Board that one of his girls was commencing to go to school again after having the measles. Some of the people were finding fault because they thought she should not have been sent so soon after recovering. The Trustees took action in the matter and required Mr. Brander to send a medical certificate to the teacher before she was again admitted to school. This was in accordance with the school law, but not agreeing with Mr. B's opinions, religious or otherwise, especially otherwise, he vowed his determination to keep his children away from school while I was teacher. After this he acted as a bitter enemy. And now since I have shown what kind of persons mine accusers are, I shall not spend more time in replying to their trashy articles but leave the public to judge them by their works.

Thanking you for this privilege of presenting my case in self-defence.

I am,
Yours &c.,
THE TEACHER.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Queen's Jubilee.

Owing to the fact that there have been so many entertainments in Flesherton this season, the Sons of Temperance have concluded to postpone their annual concert until Monday, June 20th, 1887—the Queen's Jubilee day, which will be very generally observed as a public holiday in every part of the British empire. Magnificent tableaux—forcibly and vividly illustrating great moral and social evils—some grand, ringing Temperance choruses, a stirring and vigorous Temperance drama, and eloquent and patriotic addresses, are amongst the features of the coming entertainment, which promises to eclipse anything of the sort ever attempted in this town. The Sons usually do things in first class style, as all their past entertainments eminently prove: but this will be the best of all. Further particulars in due time. In the meantime, all members are urgently asked to attend meetings of Division as regularly as possible in future, in order that proper preparations may be made to sustain the committee in the work they have undertaken and carry it forward to a successful issue.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Dr. Sproule addressed a very large, enthusiastic and intelligent audience here on the evening of the 26th, inst. The Dr. gave a very elaborate review of the great political topics of the day, showing clearly and forcibly how successfully the Government had carried out its pledges to the people. Even the few political opponents present, had to confess that they were well pleased with Dr's speech. One interesting feature of the meeting was the questions answered by the Dr, refuting and exposing some of the charges made by the opposition. All shades and classes here, entertain great esteem, much respect and perfect confidence towards the Dr.

To the Editor of The Advance.

My Dear Sir,—Permit me to congratulate and thank you for the supplement to the last issue of the ADVANCE; for it furnishes a valuable epitome of the growth and prosperity of our country for the past 4 or 5 years. It is also valuable to those who want to study carefully and impartially the political affairs of our country.

Yours respectfully,
M. R. HAMMOND,
P. M., Kimberley.

Kimberley.

To the Editor of the Advance.

One of the most pleasant affairs that ever took place in Kimberley, was a concert held in the Methodist Church Friday evening Jan. 21st, the proceeds of which was appropriated to the aid of the Sabbath School.

The day previous being very stormy, doubts and fears were entertained whether the following evening would be a success or not, but Providence smiled and granted most favorable weather and a good attendance.

The performers on this occasion were first-class talent from Thornbury who had kindly offered their services at any time chosen to call upon them.

The proceedings commenced at 8 o'clock when the Rev. Mr. Corcoran was voted to the chair which he occupied in his usual pleasing manner.

The first-class programme consisted of choruses vocal duetts and solos, violin and organ duetts and mouth organ solos, all of which were vociferously and deservedly applauded.

Mr. Henderson, has a fine musical voice and his solos were beautifully rendered. Mr. H's. mouth-organ solos elicited a storm of applause and special mention might be made of the "Mocking Bird" solo, parts of which so nearly resembled the warbling of a bird, but ones powers of description would utterly fail in this particular.

Miss M. Young, possesses a rich, well-cultured voice of great compass and pleased everyone by the charming manner in which she acquitted herself, as also did Miss Dickinson.

Miss Young presided at the organ.

At the close a hearty vote of thanks was extended to the Thornbury friends who contributed so much to the evenings enjoyment, and so materially aided in a good cause. Their kind offer to return again at some future time will no doubt be gladly accepted and a most cordial welcome granted.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored.—C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

THE GIRL AND THE GALLOWS.

Something About Miss Van Zandt and Anarchist Spies.

SHE WANTS TO MARRY THE DOOMED MAN.

The Extraordinary Courtship of the Couple.

A Chicago despatch says: Miss Nina Clarke Van Zandt, the young woman who is to marry August Spies, the Anarchist, is a person of fine features and form, and a face of far more than usual intelligence. She dresses in the height of fashion, though tastefully and without vulgar display. Miss Van Zandt was born at Philadelphia, Jan. 5th, 1866. Her father, who is a well-known chemist, employed by the firm of James S. Kirk, soap manufacturers, belongs to one of the old Dutch families which removed to New York State from Central Pennsylvania about fifty years ago, but Mr. Van. Zandt was born in Amsterdam, Holland. Her mother is a member of a Scotch-English family, Clarke by name, and is a descendant of the royal house of Stuart, and one branch of her family has lived in Pittsburg for several generations. Miss Van Zandt attended the Friends' Central High School at Philadelphia until her father and mother removed to Chicago, in 1882, when she entered the well-known and aristocratic Miss Grant's seminary, at the southeast corner of Dearborn avenue and Chestnut place, and pursued her studies there for one year. She prepared herself, during the following summer, to enter Vassar College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where she remained two years, taking both Latin and mathematical courses.

"This notoriety," said Mr. Van Zandt to-day, "is something dreadful for a private family to endure. The papers say that my daughter is taking this course just to gain notoriety; but if they knew the child they would never say that. She shrinks from it, but she will go through fire and water when it is necessary to do what she thinks is right."

"Have you consulted with the sheriff at all about the thing?"

"Oh, that is all right. That was all arranged before anything was published. They are disposed to act very generously with us about that. That will be all right."

A despatch from Mrs. Arthurs, of Pittsburg, the young lady's aunt, who implored the girl's parents to break off the match, the penalty for a refusal being disinheritance, caused some tumult in the Van Zandt household, as Mrs. Arthurs is very wealthy, but had no effect, the would-be bride characterizing the message as an unwarrantable outrage. Referring to the despatch in the presence of a reporter, Miss Van Zandt said:

"That message from Pittsburg I consider an unwarrantable interference, and it will not deter me in the least. Now," added the speaker, altering her manner, "I have some news for you. I have a bomb ready to be published. It was written by Mr. Spies, and is an account of his life, and will also contain all the letters written to me. I have written the preface myself. It will be published by Nina Van Zandt, which will be something of a novelty, don't you know, for at that time there will be no such person. I shall then be Mrs. Spies." The prospective bride added that it had become necessary to postpone the marriage again somewhat, and that the ceremony would not take place Thursday, but the delay would not be long.

Marriage License Clerk Seegur said he was confirmed in his original intention not to issue a license until compelled to by legal process. "I believe that this whole thing is gotten up by some sharp-witted friends of Spies," said he, "who propose to use an innocent and foolish young girl to create sympathy for him in the hope that the Governor may pardon him or commute his sentence. I know Spies' nature too well to believe that he loves the girl. I don't believe that she loves him, but she thinks she does. I regard it as an outrage on decency and an insult to the law that this man Spies, with his neck in the halter, should defy all the dictates of honor and manhood and seek to drag down by his own disgrace an innocent and foolish girl, and I propose to call on Mr. Van Zandt and represent things to him as I look at them. I may be thrown out, but if he is the right sort of a man he will not let his daughter commit an act which may gain her a little notoriety now, but will be an everlasting disgrace hereafter."

Miss Van Zandt appeared at the jail this morning and sought an interview with Spies. The jail officials, however, in obedience to the sheriff's orders, refused to allow her to enter.

(From the Pittsburg Telegraph.)

If love is a funny thing, matrimony is still more peculiar, and the approaching marriage of Miss Nina Clarke Van Zandt, of Chicago, to August Spies, the condemned anarchist, is one of the evidences thereof.

Miss Van Zandt is the daughter of people who formerly lived here, and who are well known. She is a very handsome young lady, who has been in Pittsburg frequently, her last visit being a couple of years ago.

It is reported here that the marriage with Spies may divert the expected Pittsburg inheritance of Miss Van Zandt into other channels.

Two years ago Sadie E. Freeland, a hat trimmer of Canbury, Conn., put her name and address in the lining of a hat. The hat fell into the hands of S. M. Kaufman, New Orleans, who wrote to Sadie. The correspondence continued until the other day, when Mr. Kaufman arrived in Danbury. He sent a message to Miss Sadie, who promptly fainted. Then she sent her big brother to interview Mr. Kaufman, and the interview was apparently very satisfactory, for when the New Orleans man (wealthy, of course,) went away he looked happy, and the gossips are in high feather.

In ourselves, rather than in material nature, lie the true source and life of the beautiful. The human soul is the sun which diffuses light on every side, investing creation with its lovely hues, and calling forth the poetic element that lies hidden in every existing thing.—Mazzini.

ANOTHER EVICTION ROW.

Bitter Attack on the Police at a County Donegal Eviction — Meeting of the League.

A last (Wednesday) night's Dublin cable says: The Sheriff and a force of police from Giveedoree, while on their way to evict tenants at Bloody Fareland, County Donegal, yesterday, found the road blocked with immense granite boulders, and were obliged to proceed on foot. The blowing of horns and ringing of bells brought together large crowds of peasants, who threatened the police with violence. The police made a strategic move around the base of the mountain by the sea, but scouts on the mountain top gave the alarm, and the peasants, cheering, rushed down the mountain side and blocked the passage. A constable threatened the crowd with his baton. This was the signal for a shower of stones from the evicted peasants.

A desperate fight ensued, in which five policemen were badly wounded. A priest who was present finally succeeded in calming the people, and they allowed the police to proceed. A tenant named Gallagher was evicted. For various reasons the police left the other tenants undisturbed. In many cases they were unable to identify the cottages from which occupants were to be ejected. In the meantime the peasants carried Gallagher back to his house, kindled a fire and reinstated him. The priest then persuaded them to allow the police to retire. While the sheriff and his escort were on their way home masses of granite rolled down the mountain side and the officers narrowly escaped injury. Whether or not this was the malicious work of peasants is unknown. While the fight was going on two vessels off Bloody Fareland stopped to watch the melee. A large number of writs of ejectment have been granted, but it is expected no further attempt will be made to enforce them.

At the fortnightly meeting of the Irish National League held here yesterday, Mr. William O'Brien declared the plan of campaign would always go on conducted within wise limits. John Dillon said: "No British Government shall have rest while the Woodford prisoners remain in jail. Bloodshed in the enforcement of evictions will be on the head of Judge Palles."

ABDUCTED IN HER YOUTH.

Remarkable Identification of a Stolen Child After Her Marriage.

A Milwaukee, Wis., despatch says: A curious romance has just been revealed in Waupaca, Wis., in connection with the life history of Mrs. Charles Smith, of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thornton, of Middleville, N. Y., had but one small child, a girl. Mr. Thornton and his wife had a bitter quarrel with a brother of the former over some cotton mill property belonging to their father's estate. The brother, in his anger, threatened to get even. The child, Adelia Thornton, was in the habit of paying frequent visits to a neighbor living near by, and when returning from this neighbor's one evening she was abducted. Search was made for months, but not the slightest clew to her disappearance was discovered. Soon after the date on which the child was stolen a woman brought a little girl to Mrs. Samuel Combs, then living in Michigan, and asked her to take care of her, and Mrs. Combs consented. Some time after the woman's professed husband came to the house and requested Mrs. Combs to permanently take care of the child, as his wife was dead and he would make it right. This was the last heard of the couple. The child grew up as the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Combs and was married. Some months ago Mr. and Mrs. C. Morgan, of Middleville, came to Waupaca. They became acquainted with Mrs. Smith and at once recognized a resemblance to the Thorntons. This was the means of opening up a correspondence between the latter and Mrs. Smith, which resulted in establishing her identity as the abducted and long lost Adelia. Mr. Thornton was so convinced of the identity that he recently sent a check to Mrs. Smith to pay her expenses East, and she left for Middleville to-day.

A SINGULAR COMBAT.

Battle to the Death Between a Stallion and a Bull.

A Louisville, Ky., despatch says: A singular and fatal combat took place this morning in a cattle-car on the Air Line Railroad between an Alderney bull and a Norman stallion. The two animals were boxed in a car yesterday morning at Depauw, Ind., by Gustavus Edenburgh, a local dealer, for shipment to this city. A strong partition was built between the two animals and the car was attached to the local freight. The train was running near New Albany when a brakeman, passing over the car, heard a furious bellowing beneath, and, climbing down the side of the car, found that the partition between the two animals had been broken down, and the infuriated brutes were engaged in deadly conflict. The train was stopped and the crew gathered around the car, but no means could be devised for stopping the encounter. The iron heels of the game horse were planted with telling effect upon the bull's head, and the horse was gored in a horrible manner. Finally the stallion got in a blow between the eyes of the bull and the latter animal fell dead. The combat lasted thirty-five minutes and the horse died four hours later.

A Dog's Determined Tramp.

A correspondent of the Scotsman says: A black and white collie, belonging to one of the shepherds at Bughtrigg, was sent on Tuesday from Jedburgh by train to Langholm. The dog arrived safely at Langholm, and remained quietly at his new home till Friday morning, when he was missed. To the surprise of his former owner, he appeared early on Monday morning at Bughtrigg, a distance of nearly sixty miles from Langholm. Now, when it is stated that this dog had gone by train and had never travelled a foot of the road before, the fact of his finding his way back over hills and moors to his former home is certainly a remarkable instance of that sagacity, or, well, call it what you like, so often found in the shepherd's dog.

TRAMPLED UNDER FEET.

How Men, Women and Children were Fatally Crushed in a Theatre Panic

SEVENTEEN PERSONS' LIVES LOST.

The Brutal Stampede of a Thoroughly Scared Crowd.

A la (Wednesday) night's London cable says: The hall in Prince's street, Spitalfields, where the fatal panic occurred last night, is a favorite resort for the Jews of that part of London. Entertainments have been given there every night for a long time. Last evening a benefit performance was given, and the place was crowded. During the progress of the play a man and woman quarrelled in the street outside and near the main doorway of the hall. The man used violence and the woman screamed. Her cry was heard by a passerby, who misunderstood it and shouted "Fire." The woman's screams and the cries of "Fire" were heard inside, and at once created a panic, the audience, numbering five hundred, rising in a body and rushing pell mell for the main entrance. The audience was almost entirely composed of Jews. The manager of the Hebrew Dramatic Club, which was giving the entertainment, was on the stage when the panic began. He did all in his power to afford all possible facilities for the exit of the people. The hall has a number of entrances, and he had them all thrown wide open and called on the people when they would not remain to divide and use all the doorways, but they paid no attention to him. In fact, many of them construed the manager's earnestness into proof that there was a fire, and increased their exertions to get out. The whole crowd, as if with one impulse, made for the main entrance. It happened that among those who first reached it were a number of women and children, who had been occupying some of the rear seats. They were overborne by strong men attempting to pass them, and as the women and children fell at the doorway they tripped up others, who were crushed down by the rush of the frantic crowd. It took but a few minutes to empty the house, and the alarm was so thorough that not a soul among the entire audience refrained from the struggle to get out. When the people after reaching the street ascertained the facts of the situation a scene of great disorder ensued, caused by the discovery that numbers were missing. Then a rush back was made. This, however, was stopped at the main entrance by the police, who had arrived and assumed control. Seventeen corpses were found inside the theatre, near the door. They were all torn, crushed and disfigured. It was found that of the dead, twelve were women, three were boys, one was a girl and the other was a man. The remains were almost unrecognizable. Eye-witnesses say that the way the strong men who got uppermost in the struggle at the door crushed and trampled on those who fell down was indescribably brutal. It is stated that a number of infants carried in their mother's arms, clung to through all the panic, were also crushed or smothered to death, and that a number of others were fatally injured. The scene during the attempted return of the crowd was painful in the extreme. Persons remained at the doorway all night waiting to have their dead restored to them, and the lamentations of the women were heartbreaking. The police have been giving a number of contradictory stories about the cause of the panic. One statement is that thieves started the cry of fire for the purpose of getting an opportunity to despoil the many rich Jewesses in the hall of the costly jewels they bore on their persons.

A man named Harris Goldbery says he went into the gallery of the hall, accompanied by his wife and family. They all sat together. The play was a melodrama called the "Spanish Gipsy Girl." During the performance some boys, in order to obtain a better view of the stage, climbed up an exposed gaspipe fixed along the wall. This strained the pipe and started a leak. Mr. Goldbery placed his handkerchief over the leak and some one shouted, "Turn off the meter." This shout was raised simultaneously with a cry of alarm from one of the actors on the stage. Then the people in the gallery rose and rushed headlong down the stairs. Mr. Goldbery's wife was torn away from him and trampled to death. His 6-year-old son jumped upon the heads of the packed mass and escaped by running over them. The managers are not to blame for the disaster. The passage from the hall to the street entrance is ten feet wide where the struggle occurred, and the doors swing both ways. There are several minor exits from the gallery—three besides the staircase. The disaster arose, not from the crowding of the passage, but from the frantic efforts of the people in the gallery to force their way down the crowded stair. The men and women in front were driven headlong into the passage, where they met the excited occupants of the pit and there was a hopeless block.

The hall to-day resembles a disordered auction room. Broken furniture, crushed toys, children's hats, broken bottles, orange peel, actors' wigs and shreds of clothes lie scattered over the floor. There are many blood spots on the backs of chairs, as well as on the floor. Every here and there ghastly knots of hair are clinging to the furniture. Several escapes were made through the window, most of which are badly smashed. The bodies were found at the bottom of the stone stairs leading to the gallery. Here a terrible struggle took place between the front of the crowd rushing from the main floor and the leaders of the throng which rushed down the gallery stairs. The dead lay mostly in two opposing rows, the feet of each row close to those of the other, one row of heads lying towards the gallery stairway, the other toward the opposite side of the hall. The faces of the dead were distorted with agonized expressions. The clothes were completely torn from the bodies of some of the victims. A little girl, since identified as Eva Marks, was found lying at the bottom of a pile of dead. Her lower limbs were bare, and the upper part of her dress was torn to shreds, showing that she had fought hard for life. Isaac Levy, a venerable Hebrew, with long white, flowing beard and hair, was found among the dead. He and his wife were regular attendants at the performances which had been given in the hall. They always sat near the door. It is thought from the position in which his body was found that Mr. Levy, instead of fleeing alone when the panic started, remained to help and protect his wife, so the old man was crushed down by the rushing crowd and stamped to death. His wife's body lay opposite. The woman was in the prime of life and wore brightly-colored clothes and quantities of jewellery. Beside her lay a little boy, whose knickerbockers and stockings were torn to shreds.

WALKING AS A DISEASE.

Farmer Snyder's Interminable Walk for Rest.

A Chicago despatch says: John O. Snyder, the walking man, of Dunkirk, Ind., has arrived in Chicago, and is now resting himself after his ride by walking twenty-two hours a day. He walks in an enclosure about six feet wide and a hundred and fifty feet long, and sleeps, eats and shaves while on his ceaseless journey. He cannot make a short turn. He has had the disease of walking now 821 days. The doctors cannot help him. He is 53 years old and is a typical Indiana farmer, although of Virginian birth. His face is full of wrinkles and he wears a chin beard, his cheeks and upper lip being shaved clean.

"I can't run when I want to," he said to a reporter who walked along with him. "It's just, as it seems, to ease me. I couldn't run a step now to save my life, but if my nerves call for it I'll have to run. My pace varies very much. I ain't feeling a bit good to-day. I didn't get my proper exercise last night. I came up from Cincinnati in the baggage car. I'd a heap rather ride in a baggage car, because I get a little more room there; but this car was crowded with trunks and I could hardly get around. I'd sit down a little while at a time as long as I could stand the misery in my feet, but I ain't got rested yet, and it'll take a good many days to rest me up, I believe."

Snyder said that he liked the ordinary shoes for walking in, and added: "I haven't got a corn to my foot nor I don't want any. The only thing I'm troubled with is cramps. Sometimes I'm cramped clear from my hips down to the ground."

At Cincinnati a watch of five medical students was kept on the old gentleman for two weeks.

ADRIFT ON ICE CAKES.

A Crowd of Buffalonians do Uncle Tom's "Eliza" Act on Lake Erie — Narrow Escapes and Great Excitement.

A last (Thursday) night's Buffalo despatch says: With a southwesterly wind blowing from 30 to 50 miles an hour down Lake Erie during the past 24 hours, the ice for some miles up became loosened, causing a "shove." This afternoon fully 600 men were scattered over the ice for ten miles up the lake from the Government breakwater. Shortly after 1 o'clock the ice began breaking up and a stampede ensued. The men struck out in all directions, many not having time even to secure their effects, while others had to leave their dogs and sleds behind and flee for their lives. Those who were near the Canada or American shores easily got to places of safety, but the crowd in the centre had an exciting time. Some of them were suddenly brought to a standstill by seeing open patches of water ahead of them, and turned only to find that they were completely shut off. Some cakes of ice floated one or two men, others eight or ten, while one immense piece bore up a freight of 50 human beings. They all managed to get off but a party of eight who were seen floating on a piece in open water. Seven of the party jumped from cake to cake and were rowed to safety, but one old man could not be induced to try it. He remained where he was until his friends, after much work, reached him and half dragged him off. It is reported that a man named Haley is missing, but it is thought he will turn up all right.

AWFUL DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.

An Insane Mother Murders Five of Her Children and Hangs Herself.

A Cleveland, O., despatch says: A horrible tragedy occurred this morning in a brick cottage near the corner of Independence and Petrie streets. The house was occupied by James Cabelek, an industrious Bohemian carpenter, with his family of eight children and his wife. Since the birth of a babe three months ago Mrs. Cabelek has acted strangely. Early this morning Mr. Cabelek and his 19-year-old son left the house for their work. The mother then sent two sons, Harry and George, on different errands. Harry returned and found the house locked. He notified his father and brother, who returned and entered the house. In the bed-room, upon the bed, were found the four youngest children covered with blood. Behind the bed on the floor was the daughter Jennie, aged 8, weltering in blood, but conscious. The mother was found in the basement suspended from the rafters by a clothes line, life being extinct. Mamie, aged 6, was dead, with ten gashes in her side; Annie, aged 4, was dead, with fourteen wounds in her bowels. The infant in the cradle was dead, with three cuts in the stomach. Jimmie and Jennie are living and conscious, but are terribly lacerated and cannot recover. The result of the tragedy is four dead and two dying. The injuries were inflicted with a pair of long scissors with sharp prongs.

A Lion Chloroformed.

A Bridgeport, Conn., despatch says: P. T. Barnum's great African lion, "Kennedy," aged over 20 years and valued at $6,000, which has for more than a year been suffering from paralysis of the limbs, was put to death to-day. Sixteen ounces of chloroform were required and death resulted in six minutes. Mr. Barnum will cause the body to be stuffed and presented to Tuft's College, Massachusetts. The owner and twelve physicians were present.

The remark so frequently made that a dollar will now go farther than it used to is met with the reply that it makes the distance in quicker time.

Oh, how small a portion of earth will hold us when we are dead, who ambitiously seek after the whole world while we are living.—Philip, King of Macedon.

THE LOST FISHERMEN.

Hundreds on Lake Erie When the Ice Broke Up.

MANY THRILLING ESCAPES.

The following are additional particulars of the great ice-break away near Buffalo on Thursday, by which many lives were imperilled for hours:

Several hundred men were at work on the ice when the thaw came—estimates running as high as 500. How many of these were missing could only be guessed. The ice broke up in long lines, and so suddenly that it was next to impossible for the fishermen to escape. The ice was about a foot thick, and when the thaw had weakened it a fall in the lake water cracked the dangerous field into larger or smaller floes. The wind-breakers, used by the fishermen to protect themselves from the wind, acted as sails, and some of the cakes were carried along in the water at a reasonable rate of speed.

Patrick Foley, a fisherman living on the Island, saw about forty men go down the lake on a large ice floe about 3 p.m., but they were rescued. William Cavanaugh and Patrick O'Brien, who saw the peril of the men, went out in a clinker boat and transferred the fishermen a few at a time to the breakwater.

A sensational scene was the trip of William Williams and John Clark down the Niagara River on a small cake of ice. They were the men seen from the eyrie of the Board of Trade building. The men floated down the river as far as the International Bridge before Patrick O'Brien and James Hoolihan were able to overtake and rescue them. The ice cake was not of the most substantial kind, as ice cakes went, and their escape from their perilous predicament is regarded as remarkable.

STORY OF THE BRAVE RESCUERS.

James Galvin, the man who swam with a woman on his back and saved her in the recent Island flood, was on the beach yesterday afternoon and saw a break in the ice beyond the breakwater, where a number of fishermen were stopped in trying to get in and were turning away to the south. Wm. Cavanagh, Thomas Green, Galvin and another man shoved a boat on the inside of the breakwater clean to the north end of the pier to intercept a number of men who, by this time, were floating toward the mouth of the river on floes of ice. Galvin and his comrades reached the north end of the pier before the imperilled fishermen, rounding about, shoved the boat along through water and over ice and picked them all up, eight or nine men in all. A second trip was made and the dogs and sleds were towed in.

"Most of the rescued men were Poles," said Galvin, when he was seen this morning, "and one Irishman, a man named Higgins."

"Do you know of any men being lost?" was asked Mr. Galvin.

"No. There were no lives lost. After the break there were lots of time to save themselves. These men we saved, if they had known enough, would have gone to the south shore instead of working toward the river."

Mr. Galvin says he is certain that no one was swept down the river, as reported last night. He and his companions got down to the end of the pier before any one could have got down, and we were picked up. The brave rescuers are entitled to the greatest credit for their prompt action, which no doubt saved a number of lives.

George Bowman, a barber on Michigan street, and an old fisherman, was one of the last men in. He was as far out as any one, and knew by the motion of his lines in the afternoon that the ice was moving. He soon started, and finally succeeded in landing near Bay View about 10 o'clock at night. He was delayed by having to round an immense fissure, but was never in any particular danger.

Cavanaugh's boat, which was used by the rescuers, is a wreck. It was worth about $50.

A TEAM AFLOAT.

A teamster named Squires, with a team and sleigh and a man to help him out ice, were caught in the break-up off Derby, on the south shore. They had a terrible time of it. Darkness came on and their danger increased momentarily. It was impossible to retrace their steps to the upper ice, so they resolved on the desperate measure of tearing out the planks of their sleigh and bridging the floating cakes. Thus they passed from floe to floe until 10.30 last night, when they succeeded in reaching the shore near Rockey Point. They were thoroughly exhausted.

A LIFE-SAVER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Edward Hyland, No. 1 of the life-saving crew, had a rather thrilling experience. He was a long distance up the lake fishing with his dog and sleigh, and, finding the ice commencing to move, started for shore. But his dog was frightened and refused to stir a step with the load of fish. Hyland knew he was losing precious moments, but didn't want to lose his dog and fish, and tried every effort to get the animal to move. At this moment the ice beside him cracked and parted, the seam running a long distance either way from where he stood. Still he hesitated. The crack between him and probable safety grew broader. Finally he threw the sled across and abandoning the dog to his fate sprang across the widening chasm and made his way safely to shore, dragging the sled of fish after him.

Gas in a New Place.

Smith & Bell had a number of men today cutting timber six miles south of the city, and while cutting down a large oak tree, and when near the centre of it, an axe struck a hollow, and a large volume of gas or a similar substance commenced escaping, making a noise that could be heard a mile. One of the men lighted a match and touched it to the escaping gas. It instantly ignited and sent up a flame sixty feet, charring the outside of the tree. The blaze lasted fully ten minutes before dying out.—Lafayette (Ind.) Correspondence.

Business Difficulties.

The following assignments are reported: Ontario—Mitchell—Mrs. E. B. Cunningham, boots and shoes. Elmira—Alfred Jeanneret, jeweller, etc. Toronto—Chas. D. Newton, grocer.

CURRENT TOPICS.

THE ways of women are beyond all fathoming. Mrs. Robert McLinden of Windsor, Ont., cut her throat with suicidal intent on Thursday last, but was unsuccessful in securing an immediate demise. So that she might not cause any disturbance in her family she bound up her neck in a cloth and declared that she had suffered from vomiting accompanied by nose-bleed. For two days she went about her household duties with her throat cut and gradually bled to death in a suicide that lasted as long as she had sufficient strength to keep on her feet.

THE report is confirmed that the Russian Government has concluded an arrangement with the firm of H. Hersent & Co., of Paris, for the raising of a sum of 25,000,000 roubles gold in order to construct the Rerecop Canal, in the Crimea. The canal will establish a direct route between the Don, the Black Sea and the Sea of Azoff, and three lines of rail. The strategical importance of the canal is apparent; but it will also enable the Russians to bring the coal and coke of the Don collieries to the Black Sea ports at low rates, and thus undersell the English coal, which at present enjoys almost a monopoly in those ports and at Constantinople.

DR. T. D. CROTHERS is working hard to prove that inebriety is contagious under certain circumstances. He has just printed a paper entitled "Certain Hereditary and Psychical Phenomena in Inebriety," to illustrate his doctrine that intoxication may be imparted by contagion when hereditary defects predispose the system to such influences. That is to say, a perfectly sober man, brought in contact with drunken men, may become drunk himself to all practical intents, or an equally sober person whose parents, one or both, were hard drinkers, may, when exposed to some sudden mental shock, apparently become fully intoxicated.

IT is pointed out that the British Empire extends over a far larger territory than that which was governed by ancient Rome, the superfices of the latter being one million and a half square leagues. No English-speaking people is under foreign rule, whilst Britain governs nearly three hundred million individuals belonging to all nations and speaking all the languages of the world; as, for instance, Germans (Heligoland), Spaniards (Gibraltar), Greeks, Italians, Turks (Cyprus), Arabs (Aden), Dutch (Africa), French (Mauritius), Chinese, Indians, Persians (Asia), etc.

PULL down your chandeliers from the ceiling is the latest fashionable command. Hanging lamps are allowed, but even they must be placed in the corners of a room, so as to add to the effect of irregularity which is aimed at in æsthetic abodes of the rich. But be sure these depending lights are securely fastened, for the other evening there came very near being a conflagration in one of Boston's handsomest houses, all on account of "the one weak link" in an antique chain. Do be artistic, if you will, but, at the same time, employ practised workmen to produce the art, especially when kerosene is a factor in it.

WHAT is wanted in a forest for timber is tall, upright growth free from knots, Where side limbs appear they not only waste the vigor of the tree but make knots in the wood which mar it for many purposes. If planted closely enough nature will thin out the side branches by depriving them of light and air, thus causing them to rot and fall off. But a clean cut with axe or saw does this more effectually and without waste of force. If trees in woods were kept trimmed up their growth would be much greater and more valuable. The trimmings will often be worth enough for wood to pay the expense if done when other work is not pressing.

MRS. HELEN M. GOUGAR tells of having recently visited at Elbe Falls., Kan., Mrs. Prudence Crandall Philleo, the plucky old woman who in her youthful days suffered mob violence, imprisonment and the destruction of her property because she opened a school in Canterbury, Conn., for colored girls. A year ago the Connecticut legislature was prevailed upon, after a mighty struggle, to grant her the petty allowance of $400 a year as long as she lived, as a partial compensation for her pecuniary losses by the treatment she received in 1833. The staunch old soul declares herself comfortable and happy, with a good farm, the company of an adopted son and nieces, all the reading matter she wants and the possession of all her senses, except a partial loss of hearing.

A LONDON newspaper declares that a Captain Maude, who died a week or two since, in the jubilee year of Victoria, was the grandson of a man who lived twelve years under Charles II. His grandfather, Sir Robert Maude, was born in 1673; his father, the first Lord Hawarden, in 1729, and he himself in 1798. Thus three generations have covered 213 years, or an average of seventy-one years to a generation, and have lived under ten sovereigns. The first Lord Hawarden having been born as stated in 1729, married in 1777 for his third wife a young lady of 18, who lived to be 92 and died in 1851. There were thus 122 years between the birth of the husband and the death of his wife. Such a case is probably unique.

THE "Century Magazine" prints for the first time these words of Abraham Lincoln, given in an official reprimand to a young officer who had been court martialed for quarrelling: "The advice of a father to his son, 'Beware of entrance to a quarrel, but being in, bear it that the opposed may beware of thee!' is good, but not the best. Quarrel not at all. No man resolved to make the most of himself can spare time for personal contention. Still less can he afford to take all the consequences, including the vitiating of his temper and the loss of self-control. Yield larger things to which you can show no more than equal right, and yield lesser ones, though clearly your own. Better give your path to a dog than be bitten by him in contesting for the right. Even killing the dog would not cure the bite."

IN a review in the London Spectator of "Old Church Life in Scotland," by Dr. Edgar, the parish minister of Mauchline – "Burns' Mauchline"—there is the following: "Scotch clergymen were compelled, on occasions, to eke out a living by acting as tavern-keepers. In 1576 the General Assembly took steps to exhort 'such ministers and readers as tapped ale and kept

WHEN Circus man Cole sold his stock in New Orleans the other day three dun ring horses that he has owned for years went with the others by mistake. Mr. Cole at once bought them back, saying that he would never consent to have the horses become the property of any one who would make them work, and that he had decided to put them to a painless death. He proposed bleeding them to death, but W. B. Leonard, a liveryman, suggested that the use of chloroform would be a better and less painful mode. This was finally decided upon, and a reliable man procured, who was to have performed the operation. They were all collected in the circus tent. There were Cole, Leonard, the riders and the clowns, the ring-master, the tumblers and leapers and the three pet duns. Calling the little mare by name he told her to kiss them all good-bye. The intelligent animal, stretching forward her head, kissed each one. This was more than they could stand, and the sacrifice was put off. Mr. Cole had no place to take them to, so Mr. Leonard promised to find some one who would assume charge of them, under a guarantee never to work them, but to keep them in good order until old age should claim them for the grave.

The Tree of Death.

On the New Hope battlefield was a tree upon which the soldiers nailed the inscription: "Tree of Death." Seven Federals were killed behind the tree by Confederate sharpshooters. The tree was in advance of the Federal line and was about three hundred yards from the Confederate works. It was used by Federal skirmishers, who would stand behind it and load and then step out and fire. Confederate sharp shooters went along the Confederate line for nearly a mile in each direction, and then, being so far from the side of the tree that they could see behind it, by a cross firing made it as dangerous to stand behind the tree as to stand in front of it. Seven Federals were killed behind the tree, and it came to be known as the "Tree of Death." Atlanta Constitution.

A RELIC OF JAMES II.

An Interesting Discovery at the Scotch College in Paris.

The London Times of January 8th contains the following despatch from its Paris correspondent:

An account was given nearly four years ago of the discovery at the Scotch College of two leaden cases, believed to contain the brains of James II. and the heart of the Duchess of Perth. In laying a pipe under the chapel floor the workmen came on a cavity, in which these relics were picked up. Monseigneur Rogerson, administrator of the Scotch endowments, who showed them to me, was of opinion that this pit had been dug in readiness for the intended massacre, either of the persons confined in the college or of the English Austin nuns next door; but it is more likely to have resulted from the exhumation of a coffin for the sake of the lead or other articles of value. Monseigneur Rogerson's original intention was to re-inter the relics, but in a quiet way, so as to avoid risk of profanation, and he did not even inform the tenants of the college (now occupied as a boys' boarding school), that the cases had any historical interest. He was not aware, however, that the brains of James II. were formerly in a gilt bronze urn attached to a tablet on the wall. This urn disappeared during the revolution, and the leaded case within it was not further heard of till the discovery of 1883. As there is no record of any other cases with such contents having ever been placed in the college, the presumption as to the identity of those found is almost irresistible. I have reason to know, moreover, that the announcement of the discovery evoked inquiries from the highest quarter as to the authenticity and safe-keeping of the brains of James II. Monseigneur Rogerson, who took a strong interest in the Stuarts, died three years ago and what had become of the relics, still apparently in his possession up to that time, was a question of obvious interest. He had no relations in France, his kindred in the north of England were not likely to have interested themselves in these relics, and the new administrator is a French ecclesiastic, who returned no answer to an inquiry addressed to him.

I have, however, now ascertained that the cases are in the safe-keeping of Monseigneur Rogerson's executor, Mr. O'Keenan, a solicitor, pending a decision as to their ultimate disposal. The Duchess of Perth has no lineal descendants, at least in the male line, and as her heart was originally deposited under an inscribed slab on the chapel floor, it might fitly be replaced there. The brains of James II. might perhaps be inserted in a new urn, to be placed where the old one stood; but the Scotch college is now a French school, and though the tenants are very courteous to their rare British visitors, a better known depository might perhaps be found. The brains might, for instance, be interred at St. Germain, with what, I believe, are the only other remains of James II., namely, part of the flesh removed in the process of embalming, and a portion of his bowels. These were discovered sixty years ago, while a church was being restored, and George IV. placed an inscription over them, which Queen Victoria has restored. The body itself, confided to the English Benedictines, in the expectation that it would eventually be transferred to Westminster Abbey, disappeared during the Revolution, and was probably thrown into a quarry. Other relics of James II. in Paris, at St. Omer and elsewhere, likewise disappeared, and a piece of his arm preserved till 1871 by the Austin nuns was made away with by the Commune, which used the Neuilly Convent as a barrack. There is consequently every reason for ensuring the preservation of the college relic. Mr. O'Keenan is, I understand, in communication with Scotch Catholic bishops, and meanwhile it is satisfactory to know that the case is in safe custody.

Mind vs. Matter in the South.

A man came into the sanctum with a fence rail to annihilate the editor for an alleged grievance. The latter, who was whittling, looked up and said: "My friend, did you ever consider that, even if you did thrash me, you could not stop the publication of the paper, and it would only be the worse for you, because either myself or my successor would be bound to get even with you. You may lick the editor to your heart's content, but the newspaper goes on forever." And, instead of thrashing the editor, the man left the fence rail as part payment of his subscription.—St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette.

A FORMER JUBILEE.

The Celebration in 1809 When George III. was King—An Eventful Year in an Eventful Reign.

At a time when every one is thinking of the best way in which to celebrate the Queen's jubilee in the coming year it may not be uninteresting to recall some of the events in connection with the celebration of the jubilee of George III. in 1809. That year was an eventful one, even in the history of the most eventful reign. Great Britain was carrying on an heroic contest in the peninsula. January had witnessed the Battle of Corunna and the death of Sir John Moore, and in July Sir Arthur Wellesley was victorious at Talavera, and gained the title of Viscount Wellington. Nearer home, on the other hand, we had to lament the mismanagement and failure of the Walcheren expedition. On the day of the jubilee, the 25th of October, 1809, the court was in residence at Windsor, where the celebration was heralded at 6 o'clock in the morning by a sound of trumpets. After divine service the royal party inspected a bust of His Majesty executed by the sculptor Turnerelli. While the people scrambled for the remains of an ox which was roasted whole, the gentry thronged to a grand fete at Frogmore, enlivened with colored lamps and fireworks. "At 10 o'clock the Queen (Charlotte) arrived, and after Her Majesty had joined the company the fireworks began; at the conclusion of which there appeared on a sudden, and as if by magic, on a beautiful piece of water opposite the garden-front of the house, two triumphal cars drawn by two sea-horses each, one occupied by Neptune and preceded by the other with a band of music." We read that they had "a very superb appearance." Twelve marquees were erected on the lawn, "where the company sat down to an elegant supper." In the town of Windsor a large triumphal arch extended from the Castle Inn right over the High street to the town hall. Another arch of the same kind was illuminated "by exactly 2,000 variegated lamps." Among other places, the royal town of Kew, where royalty was wont to spend the summer months, was brilliantly illuminated. In London the jubilee was celebrated with becoming solemnity. London at this time was showing its displeasure at the high prices charged at the newly erected Covent Garden Theatre by nightly disturbances, which culminated in the "O. P. riots." The foundation stone of the theatre had been laid in January with all the formalities of Freemasonry by the Grand Master, the Prince of Wales; and in September the theatre had opened with "Macbeth" and "The Quaker," Kemble playing the part of Macbeth. The expense of building had been great and the prices had been raised, at which the people were much offended, as we see in the doggerel rhymes invented for the time—"Mr. Kemble lower your prices; for no evasion will suit John Bull on this occasion." At this time, too, men's minds were full of the duel between Canning and Lord Castlereagh, which had lately taken place on Putney heath. Popular feeling was running high against the Duke of York with regard to his conduct in the war. But to return to the jubilee. On the morning of the 25th the Lord Mayor proceeded from the Mansion House to Guildhall, where, being joined by the civic dignitaries, a procession was formed to St. Paul's. He was received by the "West London Militia," and the interior of the cathedral was lined with "River Fencibles." In the evening there was a banquet in the Egyptian Hall, "with a plentiful supply of Madeira and red port of a most superior quality and flavor. At night all the principal buildings were splendidly illuminated. The paucity of regular troops engaged in these rejoicings is explained by the fact that all available forces were on foreign service. A proclamation was issued for pardoning all deserters from the fleet unconditionally, and deserters from the land forces if they surrendered within two months. The Lords of the Admiralty ordered an extra allowance of four pounds of beef, three pounds of flour and a pound of raisins to every eight men in His Majesty's ships in port, with a pint of wine or half a pint of rum each man. Several Crown debtors were also set free, as well as many ordinary debtors, by public subscription. Such is a slight sketch of the jubilee held in the "good old days" when George III. was king.—St. James' Gazette.

The superintendent obeyed, and before the Texan could get the sheep back home again, many of them died, and the affair cost him a great deal of money. He is now suing the telegraph company for damages.

THE FAT PASSENGER'S HAT.

After It Was Lost the Obliging Conductor Could Not Do Enough For Him.

A fat man with a new plug hat was laughing merrily in the Northwestern Depot yesterday afternoon. "Just beat this road from Milwaukee to Chicago," he said, with a roar. "I wanted to get to this town the worst way, but I didn't have a cent. It was too cold to steal a ride, so I made up my mind to get into the best car of the train and trust to luck. We had just got out of Bay View when a queer scheme struck me. Raising the window I ran my head out and began sniffing the cold air. My plug hat, which was not the best in the world, was for obvious reasons tilted on the back of my head. The conductor came down the aisle of the car. Never before did a ticket-puncher make such rapid progress. He flitted from seat to seat like a butterfly. Pretty soon I felt his hot breath on the back of my neck, and then I heard him yell, 'Ticket, please!' I was too much interested in the passing scenery to pay any attention to the hoarse, rasping voice. There was a moment of intense silence, during which my heart beat a loud accompaniment to the puffing of the engine, and then I felt the conductor's hand fall heavily upon my shoulder. The concussion was so great that my plug hat fell off into the snow. The conductor stood aghast when I withdrew my uncovered head and looked angrily into his pale face.

"'You've done it!' I exclaimed with a fierce air.

"'I didn't jostle your hat off, did I?' he asked.

"'That's what you did.'

"'But your ticket wasn't in it?'

"'Certainly.'

There was another moment of silence and then the conductor said:

"'I'm sorry, but you'll have to pay your fare.'

"'I have no more money,' I replied; 'my all was in my hat. Can't you stop the train?'

"'The tile is a mile behind us. It's against orders, but I'll let you through without additional charge. Next time keep your head in the car.'

"'But my hat,' I exclaimed with a hold air. 'I lost it through your rudeness and I must be indemnified.'

"'Indemnified nothing. There's no hat store on the train.'

"'But you have got to get me a hat just the same.'

"'Oh, I guess not.'

"'Well, I guess yes.'

"'What are you going to do about it?'

"'Report you to Marvin Hughitt,' I yelled with defiant mien.

"'That's a chestnut. Go to sleep. I'll wake you up when we get to Chicago.'

"This is what I did, and when I woke up (the train was then passing Rose Hill Cemetery) I found this new tile on my head. You can see by the initials just above the sweatband that the hat belonged to the conductor. I didn't see him again during the rest of the trip, but I'll bet dollars to clam shells that that fellow would kick himself from here to Sturgeon Bay if he knew how beautifully he had been sold." Chicago Herald.

LOCAL SKETCHES.

At the Sons of Temperance.

Amongst the many things which tend to make Flesherton a model place, a foremost position must be given to that well known institution, the SONS OF TEMPERANCE. Whether by design or chance, or mere co-incidence, we cannot tell, but the fact is that in order to reach the place of meeting one must pass between THE ADVANCE office and the Medical Hall. This circumstance readily suggests the thought, that the great Temperance crusade has the leading of the mind on the one hand and the healing of the body on the other; and that it seeks to guide its adherents ever upward till they reach the state of perfectly emancipated manhood. With Editors and Doctors—the power of the press and the verdict of science on its side—its worthy ends must be accomplished soon.

Ascending the two flights of stairs, you come to the neatly furnished, well kept hall where the Division meets every Wednesday evening. To pass-words we used to have a strong objection, which, on trial, is found quite groundless, as the pass-word is a very ample and appropriate way of maintaining the unity and promoting the purest friendship in the great Brotherhood. A fraternal charge, an opening ode with organ, &c. accompaniment, and a brief devotional exercise led by the Chaplain, constitutes the preliminaries. The "Order of Business" is simple and practical, covering the ground amply, and so far entering into detail as to consider the physical as well as the social well-being of the members. Besides being well adapted to present use, the "order of business" has a good educational influence and cannot fail to benefit those who in other spheres and after days will have to do with meetings for the public good.

A pleasant feature of the proceedings is "the initiation of candidates," of whom there have been a goodly number of late. The ceremony is at once cheerful, instructive and solemn, and seldom fails to make a marked impression.

When all the items, concerning the general work, have received due attention, there is usually a considerable portion of time available "for the good of the order." And while the object of the order—pure, genuine Temperance work—is ever kept in view, sufficient variety is introduced under this head to meet the needs and tastes of every one who seeks pure enjoyment and lasting benefit. Vocal and instrumental music, recitations, readings, addresses, essays, debates, lectures, impromptu speeches on scientific, literary, social, and political questions, with a variety of other exercises, combine to make the time well spent.

In connection with the Sons of Temperance there is also a MUTUAL RELIEF SOCIETY, in which, at a small cost and with excellent security, members may insure their lives for sums ranging from $500 to $3,500. This is worked on the assessment system, and in the highest death-rate year only 12 deaths occurred. The average is about 8 deaths per year. The table of age, cost, amount, etc., is as follows:—

ASSESSMENTS.

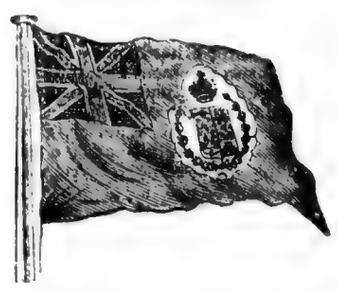
The Division is at present in excellent working order and can offer advantages not to be obtained elsewhere. It has over 70 members in good standing, many of whom are amongst the best Temperance workers in the County, and to be with them is to be profited. Without any parade, in a steadfast, consistent way, this order is wielding a mighty influence for good, and ever holds itself in readiness for any work that will advance the cause of Temperance and the general good of the community and district. The Division seeks ever to cultivate a friendly spirit toward all kindred institutions, and heartily rejoices in the success of Temperance principles by whomsoever that success may be achieved.



TO THE ELECTORS
—OF—
SOUTH GREY!

GENTLEMEN,—In pursuance of the constitutional principle, that when there is any material extension of the Franchise, the House of Commons has been dissolved, and a new election will take place on Tuesday, 22nd February.

Having been chosen by the Liberal Conservative party as their Candidate, I beg to solicit your suffrages in the approaching contest.

If elected I shall give a fair support on all vital questions to the present Government, believing that it has shewn by its past record to be heartily in accord with the progressive spirit of the age, and that under its care the laws have been fairly and impartially administered, but on some questions I may be compelled to differ with it.

I shall favor the repeal of the present Franchise Act, and the substitution for it of Manhood Suffrage.

I believe there should be some radical change made in the constitution and functions of the Senate, or if this be not practicable, then I should favor its abolition entirely.

The present fiscal system which gives protection to our manufacturies has shewn itself to be successful and should be continued.

The depression existing in our agricultural interestsand the small returns received by farmers from their investments and labor should engage the earnest and careful attention of our Legislators. Believing that the high rate of interest at which farmers are compelled to borrow money, causes a constant and large flow of their hard earnings to the capitalists of the old country, I think the Government should assume the control of the currency of the country, and that the necessary legislation should be passed to favor the establishment of Farmer's Banks, and the supply of cheap money to the agricultural classes.

Now that all the great public works rendered necessary by Confederation have been completed, I think the time has come to exercise the most rigid, careful and economical control of our expenditure, and to endeavor to carry out the affairs of the country without further increasing the public debt. Hoping my views will meet with your approbation and that you will favor me with your support and earnest co-operation. I am, gentlemen,

Your Obt. Servant,
DAVID JAMIESON.

"Red Riding Hood."

The following items, clipped from neighboring exchanges, will give some idea of the popularity of "Red Riding Hood," a grand juvenile cantata which is to be given here on Friday evening next the 11th Feb:—

RED RIDING HOOD.—The entertainment given by Prof. Morgan in the Town Hall on Friday evening was one of the most pleasing Shelburne has ever enjoyed. About fifty children took part in "Red Riding Hood," and their rendering of the cantata gave evidence of the most careful and thorough training. Too much praise cannot be given Prof. Morgan for the way he handled the little ones. He will always be a welcome visitor to Shelburne. The King family won laurels and were repeatedly encored. The audience, an unusually large one, was composed principally of ladies.—Shelburne Free Press.

RED RIDING HOOD.—The entertainment given by Prof. Morgan and Fairy in Victoria Hall last Friday evening was a most enjoyable affair to both old and young. The leading role of Red Riding Hood was capitally taken by Miss Fairy whose singing and acting is wonderful for a child. The parts of Grandma, Mamma and Rose were done full justice to by Mrs. Ketchum, and Misses Phillips and McGregor, respectively. Mary Mcgregor made a cunning little Buttercup and Mr. Will McGregor distinguished himself as Woodman and Harry Lamon as Robin. The part of "Wolf" which pleased the children most, was well handled by W.P. Rundle. The chorus singing by about fifty children gave evidence of the Professor's ability as an instructor and the frequent applause from the large audience gave evidence of their appreciation. We hope Prof. Morgan will give us another entertainment before long.—Dundalk Herald.

This interesteng operetta was enacted in the Town Hall on Friday evening last to a large audience. The Children, who have been under the training of Prof. and Fairy Morgan, acted their parts very well indeed, and the audience was not slow in applauding the same. Little Fairy, as stage manager is quite an expert, and as "Red Riding Hood" was all that could be desired. The King family gave several of their selections and also came in for a good share of applause. Prof. Morgan at the conclusion of the evening's entertainment stated that they would visit Shelburne again, when they would perform the operetta of "Silverlocks," which he says is even better than "Red Riding Hood."—Shelburne Economist.

FACTS ABOUT DANCING.

From time to time our opinion has been asked on the question of dancing. We prefer to state some facts touching the practice, and leave every one to do his own thinking and reach his own conclusions:—

1. It is a fact that the dancing mentioned approvingly in the Bible was carried on by the sexes separately and generally, if not always, as a religious act.
2. It is a fact that modern dancing, however well done, adds no worth to the character.
3. It is a fact that a trained monkey can excel the best taught young lady or gentleman in the use of his heels.
4. It is a fact that it requires no intelligence and no virtue to dance well.
5. It is a fact there is no more honor in dancing well than there is in jumping, walking, running or wrestling well. Dancing matches are on a par with walking matches, etc.
6. It is a fact that mixed dancing becomes extremely fascinating.
7. It is a fact that much valuable time is lost by this species of revelling.
8. It is a fact that money is wasted on dancing.
9. It is a fact that people who cannot entertain themselves and each other in a rational way, and must employ their heels for this purpose, are to be pitied.
10. It is a fact that young ladies permit familiarities in the ball-room which public sentiment universally condemns as dangerous to purity.
11. It is a fact that many females have been ruined by attending dances.
12. It is a fact that the best young men, even of those who dance, do not wish their sisters to attend balls, and they do not wish to marry dancing girls.
13. It is a fact that the whole spirit and tendency of dancing is worldly.
14. It is a fact that no one was ever noted for piety and dancing.
15. It is a fact that when a professor of religion follows dancing, his influence for good is lost.
16. It is a fact that men of the world think dancing inconsistent with Christian profession.
17. It is a fact that the best people in the world never dance.
18. It is a fact that a dancing Church member is not worth anything much to the Church. As the love of dancing comes in, the love of God goes out.
19. It is a fact that the most pious and considerate people in all the denominations are opposed to dancing, and earnestly advise against it.
20. It is a fact that no young convert desires to dance, nor anyone else in whose heart the love of God burns.

All these facts can be proven, and are true beyond a doubt. In the light of these, it ought not to be difficult for any inquirer after the right way to come to a safe conclusion. Reader, if you are a Christian, and wish to decide the question, "Shall I dance?" with reference to your Christian growth, influence and happiness, you will never dance. It is a safe rule, says one, to engage in nothing upon which and in which we cannot ask the Divine blessing.

Apply this simple rule to the dancing question, and your feet will never be found in the slippery way of the ballroom.—Baptist Record.

"Queen of Elocutionists."

Miss McGarry certainly deserves this title, as the large and select audience which assembled in the Town Hall here last Wednesday evening (2nd inst.) will be prepared to testify. She is simply faultless as an elocutionist, and fairly carried her audience by storm. The enthusiasm was unbounded. One moment her auditors were moved to tears, the next they were convulsed with laughter; and from first to last the applause that followed each recital and reading was deafening. Her selections—humorous and pathetic—were chaste and appropriate; her manner, graceful and refined; her appearance, dignified and commanding; her general demeanor, quite unaffected and natural. In short she is queen in a sphere nature seems to have peculiarly fitted her for. Her powers as an elocutionist are simply marvelous. For instance: while she was reading the "Little Hero," in which the mate of a vessel, with a ferocity (assumed) almost unparalleled, threatens to hang a little "stowaway," because he will not confess that he has been "stowed away" by one of the sailors—during which an old Yorkshire sailor grasps a handspike, intending to use it with a vengeance if the mate dared to carry his threats into effect—one gentleman in the audience was so "worked up" that he came nearly shouting out, "Give it to him with the handspike, the old scoundrel!"

Miss McGarry was efficiently sustained, in the musical department, by Miss Christoe, Miss Armstrong, Miss VanDusen, and Messrs. Russell and Barnhouse. Miss McGarry was repeatedly encored. Mrs. Gjerdrum, President of Flesherton Women's Christian Temperance Union—under whose auspices the entertainment was given—occupied the chair, assisted by A. R. Fawcett, of the ADVANCE, who is a Life Honorary Member of the Union—and very proud of the fact, be it understood, as he was the first, and we believe is the only, Life Honorary Member in Canada to-day.

It is perhaps needless to add, that should Miss McGarry favor us with another visit she will be greeted by a bumper house.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

To-morrow Night.

Don't forget the beautiful operetta of "Red Riding Hood" in the Town Hall, Flesherton, to-morrow (Friday) night, in which the wonderful child vocalist, Miss Fairy Morgan, and 40 of our Public School children will take part. The operetta is highly spoken of wherever it has been given. Admission 25 cents; children 10 cents; lady and gentleman, 40 cents. Be sure and go, and bring your sisters and your cousins and your aunts with you.

It is False.

Somebody has been busy stating that Mr. Wm. Brown challenged Dr. Christoe to speak on the Riel question at Priceville last Friday evening, and that the latter "daren't take up the glove." This is false. Dr. Christoe was not in the hall at the time; if he had been, Mr. Brown's bombastic challenge would have been promptly accepted. Dr. Christoe is no coward and Mr. Brown knows it.

Mass Meeting.

The Conservative Mass Meeting, announced last week to take place in the Town Hall here this (Thursday) evening, has been postponed and will be held in same place on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, 12th inst. D. Creighton, Esq., M.P.P. for North Grey—who has no peer as a debater in the Ontario Legislative Assembly—and others will address the electors on the great questions of the day. Dr. Landerkin is invited to be present. As this promises to be one of the liveliest and most interesting meetings of the campaign in South Grey, electors should make it a point to turn out in full force.

Explanation.

At the request of a large number of Priceville citizens we have re-opened our columns for a brief continuation of the school controversy, although we must confess we do not see what benefit is to be derived from so-doing. Nearly all the writers have indulged more or less in matters outside the question at issue, which renders it extremely difficult to know just where to wind the affair up. Mr. Dixon chanced to fall into this error in his last; and now several parties claim the right to reply to the new issues raised. Nothing but a sense of justice to all concerned would induce us to do this, for we are in no way interested personally. One thing we shall insist upon, and that is brevity. Letters exceeding one column will invariably be boiled down, or left out altogether, at the Editor's discretion. Further: if new issues are introduced by any writer opposed to Mr. Dixon, the latter will be allowed space for a reply.

Kimberley.

From our own Correspondent.

Last Saturday evening there was a very exciting meeting held in the school house here, discussing whether the "text book" or the "Ross Bible" should be used in the school. Some pretty tall speaking took place. Finally a vote was taken, in which it was kicked out of the school.

We noticed a mistake in Kimberley Items last week, viz, instead of T. B. Gaudin singing with R. D. Carruthers, T. B. Carruthers and R. D. Carruthers sang, and Mrs. Aldons musician not Miss Aldons.

On Wednesday last, Dr. Sproule M.P., and Mr. McColman, ex M.P.P., spoke in the Orange Hall to a very large audience on the political questions of the day.

Mrs Thurston, has gone to Toronto, to visit her son for a few weeks.

Feb. 4th, 1887

Reply to Mr. Wm. Brown.

To the Editor of the Advance.

DEAR SIR,—Markdale's would-be M.P. is evidently spoiling for a fight and is a fair representative of his countryman, with shelalah in one hand and dragging his coat through the fair, shouting—"Will any gintleman have the kindness til thread on the tail av me coat!"

Failing to attain the coveted position, where—

The applause of listening senates to command

his eloquence might have had scope and play, he, to use his own simile, has descended "from the dizzy heights of grotesque presumption to the lower depths of drivelling imbecility" to whack Markdale School Trustees. What an elegant, eloquent sentence that is surely—that was framed for the Legislative halls and never intended to be wasted on a few insignificant villagers, whom he calls "empty heads. What brain tortures it must have cost him! It is difficult to decide which to admire most—the "grotesqueness" of construction, the "imbecility" it betrays, or the recklessness with which he wastes his learning, logic (?) and eloquence on the devoted heads of the School Trustees.

He begins his letter with "deducing axioms.". We always thought an axiom was a self-evident truth, but the great Markdale Bombastes Furioso says no Johnston, Walker, Webster and Worcester are all wrong: I, William Brown, ex-School Teacher, deduce my axioms, and the premises I lay down are the 'sayings of shrewd observers.

In his first so-called axiom he states his inability or difficulty to distinguish between the wisdom of the wise and the folly of the hair-brained simpleton. Now, common sense people have no difficulty in making such distinction, or, to use his own phrase, "drawing the line." The common sense of the electors of East Grey drew the line quite distinctly and clearly in the late election, when they had a sample of each genus to choose from. But William's inability to draw the line is explained in his second paragraph: He states the descent from "grotesque presumption" to "drivelling imbecility" was "imperceptible." Thus, doubtless speaks feelingly his experience and gives at least one reason why he found it difficult to distinguish wisdom from folly. Having missed his vocation as legislator he has now turned preacher and takes his two "axioms or proverbs" as he calls them, for a text. The Book the Markdale Trustees have placed in their school contains a rare treasury of proverbs, which have been the admiration of the wise and good of all ages, but William could not find anything wise enough there for a text, so manufactures what he calls proverbs for himself.

His sermon (?) is an attempt to throw ridicule on the Bible and on the Trustees in placing it in the Markdale School and thus authorizing what the Government of Ontario had left unauthorized in deference to Romish influence. The letter is an illustration of how far party bias and prejudice can blind a man, who, at one time had some credit for intelligence and a little learning. It contains no argument and is unanswerable with argument, but the resolution that he attempts to ridicule is elegant in phraseology, reasonable in argument, loyal and patriotic in sentiment, and in its sturdy independence in claiming for themselves and their children their constitutional rights as British subjects, is in bold contrast to the craven spirit and truculent subserviency of men who are willing to forswear all professed principles of right, and are ever ready to sell their national birthright for a mess of pottage.

THE IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Speeches by All the Big Parliamentary Guns.

TEXT OF THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Further Repressive Measures for Ireland Promised.

A London cablegram of last Thursday says: Parliament was opened to-day. The following is the Queen's Speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen:

My relations with all foreign Powers are friendly. Affairs in southeastern Europe are still unsettled, but I do not apprehend that any disturbance of European peace will result from the unadjusted controversies which have arisen in that region. While deploring the events which compelled Prince Alexander to retire from the Bulgarian throne, I have not judged it expedient to interfere in the proceedings for the election of his successor until they reach the stage at which my assent is required by the Berlin Treaty.

The task undertaken by my Government in Egypt has not yet been accomplished, but substantial advance has been made towards the assurance of external and internal tranquility,

Operations in Burmah have been conducted with bravery and skill for the purpose of extirpating brigandage, which has grown during recent years of misgovernment. The bands of marauders by whom Upper Burmah has long been infested have been dispersed. Many of the leaders have laid down their arms, and I entertain a confident hope that the general pacification of the country will be effected during the present season.

Commercial treaties have been concluded with Greece and Roumania.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The estimates will be submitted to you with careful regard to the economy and efficiency of the public service.

My Lords and Gentlemen:

The condition of Ireland still requires your anxious attention. Grave crimes in that country have happily been rarer in the last few months than during a similar period of the preceding year; but the relations between the owners and occupiers of the land which, in the early autumn, exhibited signs of improvement, have since been seriously disturbed in some districts by organized attempts to incite the latter class to combine against the fulfilment of their legal obligations. The efforts of the Government to cope with this evil have been seriously impeded by the difficulties incident to the method at present prescribed by statute for dealing with such offences. Your early attention will be called to proposals for a reform of legal procedure which seem necessary to secure the prompt and efficient administration of the criminal law.

Since I last addressed you the Commissioners directed to inquire into certain subjects of great importance to the national welfare of Ireland have been actively prosecuting their labors. The report of the commission on the operation of recent Acts dealing with the tenure and purchase of land will shortly be laid before you, and will doubtless receive from you that early and careful attention which the serious importance of the subject demands.

Bills for the improvement of Local Government in England and Scotland will be laid before you. Should the circumstances render it possible they will be followed by a measure dealing with the same subject in Ireland.

A Bill for improving and cheapening the process of Private Bill legislation for England, Scotland and Ireland will be submitted.

You will be asked to consider measures having for their object the removal of hindrances which exist to cheap and rapid transfer of land, to facilitate the provision of allotments for small householders, and provide for a readier sale of Glebe lands.

The Commission which I issued in 1885 to inquire into the lamentable depression under which trade and agriculture have been suffering for many years have presented a valuable report, which, with the important evidence collected, will be laid before you.

A Bill for altering the mode of levying tithes in England and Wales will be submitted.

With regard to Scotland, you will be asked to consider measures for the reform of the Universities, for completing recent legislation as to powers of the Secretary for Scotland and for amending the procedure of Criminal Courts.

Measures dealing with the regulation of railway rates and preventing fraudulent use of merchandise marks will be brought under your consideration.

In the performance of these and all other momentous duties, I earnestly pray that the blessing of Almighty God may attend your labors.

THE SCENE AT THE OPENING.

As early as 8 o'clock this morning members began to arrive in the House of Commons so as to secure good seats. The first to appear was Mr. Selwyn, Conservative member for Cambridgeshire. The scenes at the opening of Parliament were duller than usual. The crowds about the buildings showed little if any enthusiasm, and the members were evidently uncertain as regards the future. Lord Randolph Churchill, when he first entered the House, tried to take the coveted seat below the gangway which he formerly occupied. He found though that he had been forestalled by Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, whose hat was on the seat. Lord Randolph lifted the hat, examined it critically, read Mr. Chaplin's card for a minute, then smiled and took a back seat. It is notorious that a feud exists between Lord Randolph and Mr. Chaplain. The Speech from the Throne excited but little interest. The weather is damp and foggy.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: The Parnellites, after the reading of the Queen's Speech, held a conference and discussed the advisability of offering an amendment to the address in reply to it. They adjourned without coming to a decision

W. H. Smith, First Lord of the Treasury, gave notice of the Government's intention to introduce measures for the reform of the rules of Parliamentary procedure, and said he would ask facilities for giving precedence to the consideration of these measures, so that they may be at once discussed from day to day. Mr. Smith said the discussion of the procedure measures would be subject only to such interruptions as might be necessary for the conduct of urgent business.

Mr. Gladstone reached the House at 4.30 o'clock. He was greeted with great enthusiasm by the people on the way from his residence. Mr. Parnell entered the House and reached his seat unobserved.

Lord Randolph Churchill entered upon an explanation of the reasons which led him to resign the Chancellorship of the Exchequer. He said he retired because the Government's naval and military estimates exceeded £31,000,000, without counting the large supplementary estimates. He insisted on having these estimates reduced, but his colleagues refused to cut them down, "although," added Lord Randolph, "I had been urging economy ever since August." Lord Randolph then referred to the Government's foreign policy and declared amid loud Opposition cheers: "I also objected to the Government's policy of needless interference in the affairs of other nations." "The policy of this country," he said, "should be peaceful everywhere. (Cheers.) The Government estimates were too great for a time of peace. It has been said that I resigned in haste. The fact is that there were differences between myself and my colleagues in the Cabinet almost from the beginning of the present Government. (Cheers and laughter.) As I did not desire to remain wrangling in the Cabinet, I asked to be allowed to retire, unless the Government expenses were reduced within absolute peace limits. The Marquis of Salisbury wrote in response to my request, defending the estimates in the face of possible war, as he said. There was no course left open for me but to write my resignation, stating that I declined to be a party in the game for the high and desperate stakes other nations were playing for, and I have seen no reason since to regret the step I took." (Cheers.) In conclusion, Lord Randolph, whose speech lasted forty minutes, quoted from his last letter to Lord Salisbury the statement that he left the Cabinet with regret, but without misgiving or hesitation.

Mr. W. H. Smith said the Cabinet tried to retain Lord Randolph, whose action it was thought might have been modified if time had been allowed to discuss the difference, which was susceptible of accommodation. The subject was then dropped.

Mr. Gladstone rose and delivered an eulogy on the Earl of Iddesleigh, whom he said he had the honor to introduce into public life. Mr. Gladstone said the sentiments of sorrow for the Earl's death were universal, and were based on the sterling merits of the man. Viscount Weymouth (Conservative) then moved the address in reply to the Speech.

Mr. Gladstone applauded what he called Lord Randolph Churchill's sacrifices in the behalf of sound economic policy and the judicious mode in which he proposed to apply the principles he advocated. He (Gladstone) found no fault with the Government's foreign policy, but he thought Salisbury's Mansion House speech was calculated to raise apprehension and the country was entitled to be reassured. He objected to the severance of the Treasury portfolio from the Premiership, the former being practically a sinecure. He also objected to a combination of the offices of Premier and Foreign Secretary, which made a man responsible for the dict tion of momentous foreign despatches. It was most important that this dual action should be maintained as a security alike for the Sovereign, the Cabinet and the country—that is, that the foreign policy be conducted jointly by the Premier and the Foreign Secretary. Referring to the Canadian fisheries question, he said he trusted the papers on the subject would speedily be presented to the House. He said he thought England and Scotland very justly complained of the Irish monopoly of the time of Parliament, but he feared there was small likelihood of a remedy being found. He was ready to bet ten to one that the Local Government question would not be settled this session. The Government, he said, also proposed to deal with the criminal law in Ireland, although they tried to make it sound better by using the term procedure. It was gratifying, he continued, to hear that crime was rarer in Ireland, but in regard to the allusion to the inciting of tenants against landlords, he greatly lamented the fact that the Queen had not expressed regret at the recent lamentable evictions in Kerry. The poor people thus treated were unable to pay their rents, and the attempts made at last session to relieve such cases had been frustrated by the Government. Although Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had been "exercising pressure" upon landlords with the view of modifying proceedings in cases of necessity, yet despite this evictions have continued, and nobody can tell how many more are in store. In conclusion, Mr. Gladstone said he hoped the sanguine expectations of the Royal Speech would be fulfilled.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Erne moved the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Earl Granville said the Speech from the Throne disclosed the fact that the Government intended again to introduce a Coercion Bill. The Government could not be acquitted of responsibility for the carrying on of the Plan of Campaign, for they had delayed denouncing it when they knew it was illegal. They had also refused to stop evictions by the measure brought into the House of Commons. Referring to the fact that the Marquis of Salisbury had two Cabinet offices, that of Prime Minister and that of Minister of Foreign Affairs, at the same time, Lord Granville said it was bad for the country, for the Sovereign and for the Cabinet, besides being unfair to the Marquis himself.

Lord Salisbury opened the debate for the Government by alluding to the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill, saying the Government were sensible of the loss they had sustained through his resignation. The Premier said, however, that he thought the execution of Lord Randolph Churchill's policy at the present time would inflict an injury on the public service, because it was a time when no one could tell what crisis might happen. The Marquis said he hoped the Conservatives would soon again have the advantage of Lord Randolph Churchill's services. Continuing, Lord Salisbury said that a most unjust reference had been made to the Government's action toward the Plan of Campaign. The Irish Executive, he declared, had taken the promptest legal measures against the Plan of Campaign. The party really responsible for the origin of the plan and any success it had obtained was that section of the Liberal party which relied for its strongest support upon the Irish party, and the leaders of which did not think it their duty to denounce a scheme of deliberate robbery, which the Government was doing its best to defeat. (Cheers.) Touching foreign affairs, he declared that the Government had never pursued a policy which had for its object the restoration of Prince Alexander, and he could not understand how such an utterly groundless idea arose. The abiding aim of the Government was to maintain peace, and nothing known to him gave an impression that there was imminent danger of war, or that the relations between France and Germany were other than peaceful. Adjourned.

The Marquis of Salisbury referred to the death of Lord Iddesleigh in the House of Lords this evening. He said: "His death left on my mind an impression which can never be effaced. It has brought home to me keenly the truth of the reflection, 'What shadows we pursue!' He was probably more beloved than any statesman of our time. His gentle temper and unfailing courtesy and spirit of cheerfulness made him universally appreciated."

Lord Granville followed Lord Salisbury. He referred to the arduous labors performed by Lord Iddesleigh while member of the House of Commons and his great service to the State.

A VICTIM OF THE EARTHQUAKE.

Discovery of an Almost Naked Man Wandering Amid Mountain Snows.

A Wolf Creek (Tenn.) despatch says: George Caldwell, while bear-hunting a few days ago on Balsam Mountain, one of the highest mountains in North Carolina, discovered a man almost naked wandering aimlessly around in the snow, which was nearly two feet deep, and eight miles from the nearest habitation. On seeing Caldwell he started to run, but was easily overtaken and captured. His clothing was found to consist of a flannel undershirt, which was torn into shreds, and one shoe. His feet were frostbitten and legs fearfully scratched by briars. He is a veritable living skeleton. By securing his hands Caldwell succeeded in taking him to his house. All efforts to get him to tell his name or to get from him any intelligent account of himself have so far failed. When spoken to he becomes violent, tries to get away, and talks deliriously about being a fireman on an engine in Charleston when the big shake came. His mind seems entirely gone, and he will only sleep when completely exhausted by his ravings. It is with difficulty he can be made to take nourishment. It is supposed he was crazed by the earthquake shock of August 31st, and wandered to the mountains, but how he has lived this long is a mystery. Caldwell is taking care of him and will take steps to restore him to his friends.

STABBED TO DEATH.

Cowardly Murder of a Man in a Saloon—A Dagger Plunged Into his Heart.

A Chicago despatch says: Early yesterday morning John Watts, a well-known character about the docks, entered Wilson's liquor store, corner of South Water and Clark streets, accompanied by a male companion and two women. The quartette entered a wine-room in the rear. Shortly afterwards three men entered the saloon, one of whom had a badly bruised face and eyes. This one listened at the door of the wine-room, and then, turning to his companions, said: "Now I'm going to do him up." With that he drew a long dirk and stepped to the wine-room door. Pushing it open, he saw John Watts sitting with his back to him, and, without a word of warning, the murderer bent over the unsuspecting man's shoulder and plunged the dagger up to the hilt into his heart. Jerking his weapon out, he ran through the door, followed by his chums, and escaped. Watts rolled from his chair, with a wine-glass clutched between his fingers, and died. His friend immediately left the saloon, but the women were locked in a cell at the armory, where they are playing drunk and feigning ignorance of the whole transaction.

MURDERED FOR MONEY.

An Old Man Hacked to Pieces and His House Burned.

A Dansville, N. Y., despatch says: A cold-blooded murder was committed at Mount Morris, the particulars of which are as follows: The house of Henry Higgings was discovered on fire yesterday morning at about 5 o'clock. The department subdued the flames and found the body of Higgins in the cellar, hacked into pieces, the legs in one place, arms in another, and head gone. Higgins was about 70 years of age and an old resident of the town. He formerly worked at the tailoring business, but of late years has done little, being a man of dissipated habit. Last Friday he received a pension of $700, which he placed in the hands of the Catholic priest to liquidate some old debts. It is supposed that he was cruelly murdered, under the impression that this money was in his possession, and to cover the crime his house was burned. Two men, named Lyman Crowley and D. Johnson, have been arrested on suspicion.

An Army Tragedy.

The Lucknow papers report an awful tragedy which has taken place in the Leicestershire Regiment. Some privates in a detachment stationed at Ranikhet owed a grudge against the seargeant of their company and vowed vengeance, so they actually dealt round a pack of cards, having agreed that the man to whom the ace of spades was dealt was to "do" for the offender. The card fell to a young private who, when the sergeant entered the place where they were assembled, at once took up his rifle and shot him dead. The murderer has been sentenced to death.

Hail to the Bruce! It is Miss Catharine W., daughter of the founder of the Bruce type foundry, who has just given $50,000 in cash to the New York free circulating library. Miss Bruce inherited $1,000,000 from her father, and she is a cousin to Catharine Wolfe, the many millionaire spinster who has been near death's doors for some weeks past.

SAVED FROM THE SEA.

Thrilling Story of Shipwreck and Suffering.

A Halifax despatch says: The schooner C. Graham was wrecked last Monday night in a gale off Dover West, and her crew of six men were believed to have perished. This evening, however, three of the crew reached Halifax and reported that two more of their number were at Dover being cared for till they recover from the injuries and exhaustion consequent upon their fierce struggle with the elements. The survivors state that the schooner struck about 10 o'clock at night, and the foremast fell against the cliff, resting on a ledge about thirty feet above the deck. Five of the men clambered up the mast and reached the narrow ledge on which it rested. The sixth and missing man was the captain. He was last seen to enter the cabin, and it is thought that after leaving it he fell through the deck and hurt himself so badly as to be unable to move. The five on the rock had barely reached their place of refuge when the schooner parted and was washed out of sight. From the ledge the men clambered to the top of the rock, where they remained until Wednesday morning, half clothed and without shelter, food or water. The storm continued throughout all this time and the heavy sea running made it impossible for the people on the shore who knew of the wreck to make a search. On Wednesday morning, the sea having calmed down, boat crews put off from the land. The men on the rock attracted their attention, and lines being thrown to them they were dragged through the water into the boats. All were fearfully exhausted from their exposure to the elements, and had they been compelled to remain in their terrible position a few hours longer all would have perished. The mate, James Watt, was so far gone that his life was despaired of, but he is now rallying and will recover in time. He is being taken care of at a house in Dover, where another of his comrades also remains until he is able to proceed to Halifax.

MOLTKE AND WELLINGTON.

Herr Richter Puts Civil Liberties Before Military Glory.

A Berlin cable says: The new German Liberals of the second Berlin district met yesterday for the purpose of deciding on their action in the coming election for the member of the Reichstag. Three thousand electors attended. It was resolved to support Prof. Virchow against Gen. von Moltke's candidate. Herr Richter, in his speech advocating this policy, admitted the personal merits of Gen. von Moltke as Superintendent; but, he contended, it was not the duty of the electors to provide that the military interests of the Empire should be strongly represented in the Reichstag, but rather to elect to that body those who could and would defend the civil interests of the people, to the end that there might be a proper equalization of the civil and military claims put forth. The views of eminent civilians should be recognized in opposition to a one-sided military view. When the Duke of Wellington, continued Herr Richter, utilized his military glory and his personal merits to override the constitution of England, Englishmen defiantly declared that though he had been victorious in Spain and at Waterloo he should not be victorious against the people of England. In like manner Gen. von Moltke, though he had been victorious over Austria and over France, should not be permitted to be victorious against the citizens of Berlin.

A BURKE AND HARE CASE.

Old People Killed and Their Bodies Sold to the Doctors.

A Baltimore despatch says: The trial of Anderson Perry, colored, for the murder of Emily Brown was continued in the Criminal Court yesterday. The evidence disclosed a depth of crime unparallelled in the criminal annals of the city or State. Perry, the accused, who was employed in the dissecting department of Maryland University, it appears from the testimony, had told others he was in the habit of killing and selling the bodies of old people for dissection purposes. Ross, already convicted, lived in the same house with Perry, and declares he was instigated by Perry to commit the murder, assuring him that nothing would ever be known of it, but after he had committed the crime he was advised by Perry to leave the city. It also appeared that Perry was to have married the mother of Ross a few days subsequent to the murder. Perry is an old man and partially paralyzed. The trial creates much excitement, and hundreds of people, mostly colored, are gathered about the Court House during the sessions of the court.

ANOTHER "MAXWELL" CASE.

A Headless Trunk Discovered in a Trunk.

A Baltimore despatch says: A large trunk shipped by express from New York, and directed to "J. N. Wilson," this city, arrived on Sunday. There was no call for it, and yesterday afternoon such an odor was emitted from the trunk that the police of the Central district were notified. The trunk, when opened, revealed the body of a man with the feet and legs and left arm cut off and packed in with the body. There was no head. On the body was a calico shirt, which had on the name "C. Raufhold." There were also several cards found in his clothing bearing the name "E. D. Siegel, butcher, Throof avenue, Brooklyn, E. D." The body has the appearance of a young man of about 160 pounds, but in the absence of the head there can be no conjecture as to the age. The express people here have no idea by whom the trunk was shipped from New York.

One of the girls working in the mills at Biddeford, Me., gets more letters than any other woman in town. She is the youngest of thirty-two children born to the same parents, and twenty-three brothers and sisters who still live write to her every week. How she manages her share of the correspondence has not yet been printed.

Paul Williams, the 12-year-old son of G. B. Williams, of Mendon, Mass., has neither arms nor legs—only stumps from his shoulders, about two inches long, and stumps, about eight inches long, for legs. Yet he is a fine writer, holding a pen or brush between his chin and one shoulder stump, and moving it with his head. He is a good artist, and is also a pupil of high standing in the Mendon high school.

CHEAP FOR CASH.

An Entire Family Sold by a Pennsylvanian for $90—The Wife Satisfied.

A Wilkesbarre, Pa., despatch says: The village of Nanticoke is in a fever of excitement over a startling affair which has just taken place. John Wayrick came to the United States from Germany twenty years ago, and found employment in one of the Pennsylvania coal mines. By industry and frugality he managed to accumulate money. He married a buxom lass from his own native land and six children blessed the union. About three years ago Wayrick took to drinking, lost his lucrative position in the mines, his property was sold by the sheriff to pay his debts, and the wife was compelled to keep boarders in order to feed the children. Through the influence of friends, Wayrick was persuaded to relinquish his bad habits. On the first of the new year he swore off drinking and was given a job in the mines. All the neighborhood congratulated themselves on the wonderful reform worked in the heretofore hard-hearted husband. Wayrick is now on his road west, however. Having fallen again he bought a ticket for Chicago on Saturday. On Friday he sold his whole family to one of his boarders, Philip Mauer, for the sum of $90, $50 for the wife, and $20 apiece for the two boys, aged 14 and 12. Mauer refused to pay anything for the four younger children, as he said they would be a burden on his hands. The original contract was that Mauer was to give his three younger children to his sister for safe keeping, and Mauer pay him $150 for the wife and other children, who were old enough to work, but in consideration of Mauer taking the whole family, a reduction of $60 was allowed. Mrs. Wayrick says she is satisfied with the bargain, as Mauer is a sober man and will be good to them. Wayrick was once a member of the Town Council and an influential man.

CRUEL CHICAGO EVICTIONS.

An American Railroad Company Worse Than Irish Landlords.

A Chicago despatch says: The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway has of late kept men busy tearing down some old frame houses on North Green street, near its right of way, in order to made room for a proposed new freight-house. It is said that yesterday morning, without warning, workmen commenced to demolish a three-story frame structure occupied at the time by three families—the Cummings family, with two children, occupying the top floor; the Walsh family, the middle floor; and the Gillespie family, the bottom floor. They had seven children, the oldest not more than 11 years of age. Suddenly the steps were cut down, and the Walsh and Cummings families begged that they be left until they had removed their furniture. The workmen, however, did not even put up a ladder to aid them in getting out. The men succeeded in cutting the foundations so that the building was seen to rock, and then came down with a crash, completely demolishing the under story. Mrs. Cummings, who had climbed out, dragged Mary, Maggie and Annie Gillespie from the debris of the first floor. All these sustained bumps and bruises.

ALIVE IN HER COFFIN.

A Baby's Timely Notice to Her Parents That She Was Not Ready to be Buried.

A Louisville despatch says: Two months ago William Sperinfogel, a stone mason, came to this city with his wife and their two children, and moved into a little cottage on Fetter street. On Wednesday night their younger child, a little girl nearly a year old, was taken sick with convulsions, and on Thursday night to all appearances she died. A neighbor assisted the mother in preparing the body for burial while Sperinfogel went to the nearest undertaker's and bought a cheap coffin. Yesterday they started in a hack for the St. Louis Cemetery, and when they had nearly reached it a peculiar noise, which was at first thought to be the creaking of the carriage wheels, was noticed. A moment later it was discovered that the noise came from the little coffin. The father, tearing off the lid, found the baby alive. She was carried back to their home in her father's arms, and now lies seemingly dead with the exception of an occasional moan. Several physicians visited the house last night, but made no effort to explain the condition of the child while it was being prepared for burial. None believe that it will live, but all unite in saying that the case is a very peculiar one.

Odd Items from All Around.

A Polk county (Ga.) man is living pleasantly with his eighth wife.

Mrs. Fisher, a brunette, with good features, fine eyes and a ready tongue, runs an eighty-horse-power Harris-Corliss engine in Providence, and does it well.

A. V. Pingsley, of Leslie, Mich., found a large musket-ball near the heart of a tree and eighteen inches from the surface of the wood. It had probably been there for a century.

A Michigan farmer, digging for water, struck a springing well at a depth of seventeen feet, but the water was unfit to drink. While he was cursing his luck a better-posted resident directed his attention to the fact that the black adulterant was coal.

She Forgave Her Old Baby.

"He is my boy, and it is hard for me to say anything against him, but he don't treat his old mother right," said the mother of John Dougherty at the Central.

"He's a pretty old boy."

"He's only 52 years old."

"How old are you?"

"I am 82, and I think he ought to repay me for all I've done for him."

"I think so, too. Don't you think you could reform if you had a chance, John?"

"I know I could. I'll take the pledge and will keep it, too."

"Will you trust him, Mrs. Dougherty?"

"Oh, yes; I don't want him to have any trouble. He's my baby, you know."

The old boy took the pledge and left the court with his old and happy mother.—Philadelphia North American.

A Legend of Good St. Valentine.

St. Valentine at Peter's gate
Did knock with might and main,
Let me out for once, ere 'tis too late;
My time has come again."

Then Peter slowly turned the key,
And let the good saint go.
It was the fourteenth of Februaree,
And the ground was white with snow.

The saint he smiled as he paced Broadway,
His teeth gleamed clear and pearly,
For he actually hadn't been out in bread day
Since in the third century—early.

"But love," thought he, "and life and youth
Are surely the same as of yore,
I'll just go around and discover the truth,
And make things as nice, if not more."

He really expected to be amused
When he paid his first morning call;
But the ladies "begged to be excused,"
They'd been all night at a ball

So the saint in wonder turned away,
And bravely tried once more;
But here they all had visits to pay,
And the footman showed him the door.

But he still kept on, and tried all kinds—
The good, the grave, the busy;
He saw all sorts of brains and minds,
Till they fairly turned him dizzy.

For one was practising Mendelssohn
Alone in her maiden bower;
Another was carving an old dry bone,
While a third read Schopenhauer.

A fourth in water and oils could paint
All things beneath and above;
A fifth in good works was a perfect saint;
But they'd none of 'em time to love.

Sadly St. Valentine floated back
To the gate of good St. Peter.
"Alas!" cried he "of girls there's no lack,
And I must say I seldom saw sweeter.

"They're good and pretty, gay and wise;
They're nothing if not pedantic;
They know what they like and what they despise,
But they don't seem to be romantic."

Then St. Peter clanged the brazen gate,
And let in the dear old sinner,
Who'd been up early and stayed out late,
And probably wanted his dinner.

MORAL.

I pray, sweet maids and youths, beware,
And mind what you're about;
For now the saint's around, take care,
Don't let him "find you out."

A KING IN HIS CRADLE.

The Little Pink-Toed Twenty-Pounder at Madrid.

The baby king of Spain is a fine, handsome child who enjoys robust health, and does credit to the immense amount of care with which he is surrounded. Though court etiquette requires that the six-months-old Alphonso XIII. should be treated with the most rigid ceremony, his mother will never call him "the king" unless on very strict State occasions, but uses the simple term of "my child." His Majesty has his own vast suite of apartments next to those of the Queen Regent; and a special guard keeps his bed room door at night. His foster mother, the sturdy peasant Raymunda, feeds and amuses the baby; but he is washed and dressed according to traditional ceremony by a bevy of ladies of honor, under the direction of his "governess," who held that same office towards his father. Doctors visit the baby twice daily, and every day he drives out with his governess and Raymunda—sometimes with the Queen. In court ceremonies Raymunda must not carry the king; that is the duty of the Mistress of the Robes or of his aunt, the Infanta Isabella. Queen Christina is a most devoted mother, spending all her time with her boy, and the Infanta Isabella is equally attached to her nephew.—London Graphic.

Various Odd Trees.

A "Kentucky coffee-tree" bears a broad, flat pod, something like the tamarind pod, and is said to make a fair sort of coffee.

The Cornelian cherry, from Italy, has a flat scarlet drupe about as large as an old-fashioned ox-heart cherry.

Gerris oaks, from Turkey, keep their green leaves late. These outlast some of the green English oaks, and have even now only reached the falling stage that most of our indigenous trees reached more than a month ago. This Turkish oak bears a huge acorn. It is long, and grows on a long stem like a cherry.

The liquid amber tree and the Siberian pea grow in this country. The pea is in a little pod not bigger than the pod of the sweet pea, but its yellow bloom in spring, on a tree near the lake, makes one of the charming sights of the park in May. Bad boys break off its branches in winter for use as "shinny" sticks in their games on the ice, and thus mar the symmetry of the tree.

The jinko is a tree from Japan. It grows to a height of perhaps thirty feet, and has fan-like leaves, with serrated edges, and without any mid-rib or fibre, being a simple large expansion of the stem. Not until these leaves had fallen, in the year 1866, was it discovered in this country that the jinko was bearing fruit as well as leaves. Its fruit, when found, was spoiled by frost; but it was of a pale purple, looking something like a good-sized crab-apple, without the crab's bright hues. In its overripe and half-frozen state it had an unpleasant odor. But its large, glistening, satin-sheeny seeds, as broad as pumpkin seed and six times plumper, are really handsome. Some have been planted to see what will come of them.

How to Drink Water.

The leading medical journal of France has published a pamphlet protesting against the extravagant use of artificial mineral waters, which, it sets forth, do the double damage of cooling the stomach, thus laying the foundation for gastric catarrh, while the limestone held in deposit in the carbonated waters finds its way to the kidneys and eventually produces Bright's disease. The pamphlet also protests against ice-water as a provocative of catarrh in the stomach. It further says: "Water should be drunk cool, but not iced, with the juice of a quarter or half a lemon in it. Mineral water should also be drank with a dash of lemon. Water should always be swallowed slowly. It is not the stomach which is dry, but the mouth and throat. If you toss off a drink of water you throw it through your mouth into your stomach, without doing the former any good, while you injure the latter by loading it with what it does not require. Drink slowly, and keep the water in your mouth for a moment when you begin. If you work in a hot room in hot weather tie a damp cloth around your temples, and you will not experience half the craving for drink you otherwise would."—Atlanta Constitution.

JOTTINGS FOR THE LADIES.

Latest Fashion Notes.

The latest fancy from Paris is a little pompon of crisp tulle, from which rises a heron's plumes, to be worn in the hair with dancing toilettes.

The newest cloaks for little girls have waists reaching only to the arm-pits, more like a deep yoke than a waist, and skirts falling to the ankles.

Pleated fronts to basques are worn by persons who have very slender figures, even in the heaviest velvet materials. They have two pleats at the top of the shoulders next the collar, and then drawn to the middle, becoming plain at the waist line.

The new overcoats for young girls turned out by Redfern have the high, military collars fastened with a little irregular shaped strap, that is loose and buttons to a large button on either side of the collar.

For wear in wet weather are shown silk rubber cloth long wraps, with sling sleeves. These are in indefinite plaids, with the prevailing color shades of dark blue, red, green, brown and tan.

Nearly all the newest wraps have the fashionable "sling" sleeve, and those wraps made of the same material as the suit show, when the arm is raised, a lining of soft, striped surah; this same lining is employed for the little fancy muff also matching the suit.

The tendencies in draperies is to make them long and full and quite dissimilar to anything hitherto fashionable. These draperies have heavy, pointed fan folds and very little looping. The effect is obtained by the varying length of the points in which the drapery hangs rather than by loops. These modes are seen with plain skirts and large tournure.

Instead of folds or frills in the neck and sleeves, modistes now send home each dress waist finished off with ribbons, which may be white or in direct contrast with the dress material, such as rose-pink in moss-green dresses, or red, or orange in those of dark blue. The gauze ribbons, with looped or picot edges, are used. They are folded over not quite double so that both the fancy edges will show just above the collar of the dress.

All the French waists show an effort to make the shoulders as high and square and the waist as long and slim as possible. This effect is gained by a shirring across the chest and on the shoulder seams, and the fulness drawn down as far as possible to the waist and there shirred more closely again. This gives the slim effect seen in French fashion plates, and while giving an improved slenderness and grace to thin, angular figures, hides all the pretty curves of good ones.

The tailor gowns of dark copper red, trimmed with the same shade of plush, are worn to afternoon teas by young women with small red velvet turbans without a brim, and adorned with gray or brown wings and breasts of birds. The heads are not used. With these are worn with lovely effect breast knots of pink roses. For carriage wear red becomes more and more popular. Several dark red suits are shown with trimmings of black mink, and bonnets of red velvet and jet.

For wear to the theatres by those ladies who are prepared to adopt the English fashion of appearing without bonnets, are shown little Marie Stuart coifs of silk and plush, the face being surrounded by pearl beads matching the hue of the coif. Attached to it is a long scarf of surah that is drawn around the throat. These can be worn without disarranging the hair and thrown off and on more easily than a lace scarf, while thoroughly protecting the head and throat from the night air.

Shoes for balls are still very open on top, the ends are pointed and they are worked with beads. They are trimmed with a small bow or "strass" buckle. These shoes are of satin to match the dress. Black satin and velvet shoes for dinner wear are worked with gold beads or tinsel. Those used by young girls under light wool or gauze dresses are of cream, blue or bronze kid. They either match the dress or trimmings in color. It is not necessary the stockings should match the dress. The favorite colors are rose color and black.

Some Recipes.

Lemon Cake.—One and a half cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of milk, two cups of flour, two eggs, juice and grate the rind of one lemon, one-half teaspoonful of soda; bake in small square tins and ice on sides and top.

Lemon Cakes.—Rub together in a dry state three-quarters of a pound of flour, two ounces of butter, then add three-quarters of a pound of pounded sugar, the juice and rind of one lemon and two eggs; mix well together with half a wineglassful of brandy, and make into small cakes; bake in tins (previously buttered) for about 20 minutes.

Ginger Cakes.—Beat to a cream half a pound of butter with four eggs, add half a pound of flour, half a pound of powdered loaf sugar, two ounces powdered ginger; mix these in by degrees; roll out, and to the thickness of about a quarter of an inch cut into biscuits with a tin cutter; bake in a rather cool oven for twenty minutes.

Lemon Turnovers.—Three dessertspoonfuls of flour, one of powdered sugar, rind of one lemon, two ounces of butter, two eggs and a little milk. Mix the flour, sugar and the grated rind of lemon with the milk to the consistency of butter, then add the eggs well beaten and the butter melted. Butter some tin saucers, pour in the mixture and bake them in a rather quick oven. When done take them out of the tins, cut them across, fold them together and place them on a napkin with sifted sugar sprinkled over them.

Chocolate Tarts.—A quarter of a pound of chocolate, one small stick of cinnamon, peel of one lemon, two spoonfuls of flour, six eggs, two spoonfuls of milk, sugar to taste, a pinch of salt, puff paste. Rasp a quarter of a pound of chocolate, the cinnamon, and add half the lemon-peel grated, then the salt and sugar. Well beat the yelk of eggs with two spoonfuls of milk, add it to the other ingredients and set them over the fire in a stewpan for about ten minutes, add peel of half a lemon cut small, and then set it to cool. Put the mixture into a tart dish lined with puff paste, cover with the whisked whites of eggs and bake it. When done sift sugar over it.

TAKING COLD.

An Old Soldier Relates His Experience During the War.

Writing to the Scientific American from Cincinnati, Andrew Van Bibber says: Reading in a recent issue of your paper an article of Dr. Brown Sequard on "Taking Cold," it occurred to me that colds are peculiar to civilized life and to our comfortable, warm rooms. I have had colds as frequently perhaps as any one, but during one period of my life I was entirely free from them, with one exception. I served through the war in the Fifth Ohio cavalry, beginning at Shiloh and ending my service with the march to the sea. We were an active regiment, always at the front and therefore always remarkably unencumbered with tents or comforts. We were exposed to all weathers and all seasons. Many a time we were rained on for a week or more. When the sun came out the next week or the week after, it dried us. Many a time, long after dark, after a march in rain and mud all day, we have been filed into miry woods, where we slept in the rain with the running water washing between us and our blankets. I have seen men wake in the morning with their hair frozen in the mud. But none of us caught cold. We swam the Tennessee river after midnight, when the mercury was at zero and among floating ice and came out with our clothes to our armpits frozen like sheet iron and then marched till morning. In the cold winter of 1863-64, we were in the mountainous country of East Tennessee, where it is as cold as Ohio. We were there from November until March, without any tents or shelter of any kind, moving every day and sleeping in a different place every night, with the temperature frequently below zero. I have, with my comrades, ridden upon the skirmish line when I could not lift a cartridge out of my box, nor even pick up a carbine cap. I have been on night pickets, mounted, when the pickets had to be relieved every fifteen minutes, because if left longer the men could not load and fire. But we never caught the slightest cold, nor did I ever in times of cold and exposure to wet see a soldier with a cold. But I did catch one cold in the army, and I never had such a one before or since. It came from excessive comfort, or what seemed comfort to us. We were at Camp Davies, Miss., the southern outpost of the great fortress of Corinth. Having been there some months, we began to build neat log cabins, with openings for doors and windows—no glass or doors, of course. One of our mess being a young bricklayer, we thought to surprise our neighbors in style and comfort, and we sent for brick, and he built us a large chimney and fire place, and we built a good fire. That settled us. Four of us had to go to the hospital with tremendous colds on our chests and in our heads. We never had such heavy colds in our lives. This was about the middle of our three years of service, and before and after that I never saw an exposed soldier with a cold. Of course a few days after our cabins were finished we got marching orders. I believe all old soldiers will bear me out that in active campaigns, where there was great exposure to the weather, no one had a cold. And, come to think of it, in my experiences in Colorado and Utah, in recent years, I never saw an Indian with a cold, though they stand more exposure than our cattle do. It is our hot rooms that give us our colds. If a person would camp out from fall till spring, exposed to the weather of a severe winter, he would never take either a cold, pleurisy or pneumonia, and would be absolutely free from them. But when you are in Rome you must do as the Romans do, and take warm rooms and colds.

The Greatest Men.

A prize was recently offered by the editor of Cassell's Saturday Journal for the best list of the twelve greatest living men. The result was decided by the votes of the competitors; and, as the poll was exceptionally heavy, the following catalogue of the distinguished names that headed it may be of general interest. It should be stated that Mr. Gladstone's name found a place in about 99 per cent. of the voting papers. The figures show the number of votes given to each celebrity:

1.	Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone	32,544
2.	Prince von Bismarck	32,245
3.	Baron Tennyson	28,064

No other distinguished man received a thousand.

Full of Stitches.

A Vienna tailor, says the Reichenberger Zeitung, wagered recently that it took more than forty thousand stitches to make a winter overcoat. To decide the question a coat was ordered and a committee of experts sat to superintend the work, as well as to see that no unnecessary stitches were made. The result was announced as follows: Body of the coat, 4,780 stitches; collar, 8,663; sewing collar on, 1,763; buttonholes, 2,520; sleeves, with lining, 980; pockets, 924; silk lining of body, with lining interior, 17,863; braiding, 2,726. Total, 39,619 stitches.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

A Boy, a Man, a Gun and the Consequence.

No matter how strong may be every link in a chain of circumstantial evidence there is always a doubt, a lack of certainty, that should weaken it and cause us to distrust it. I remember a story my grandfather used to tell of a case in which an innocent life was sacrificed for a guilty person. A boy on a farm, for some misdemeanor, was sentenced by his father, a stern man, with an eye to saving a half price ticket, to be deprived of his annual circus privilege, and, in addition, he was to hoe so many rows of corn while the rest of the family took in the lady's pad act, the bare back riding of Jack Robinson, the club that killed Captain Cook and other attractions of the great moral show. The boy watched the waggon drive away, with tears in his eyes, and then he went at his corn rows with a determination to make a short crop, if it could be worked without detection. But he grew hungry after awhile and went into the house and investigated the pantry. There were seven pies—it was an American household—seven blackberry pies, baked for Sunday. The boy, who was not feeling very well himself, soon placed his person anterior to six of the pies, but paused thoughtfully, and with keen regret midway on the seventh. One-half of that he left. He then caught the family cat, thrust her nose and feet into the remains of the pie, and dropped her on the clean, white sanded floor of the pantry that she might track around on it. Then he went back to his corn rows. Evening brought the family home. The boy saw them climb joyously out of the big waggon. He noted how the overripe apples fell from the trees when his sister jumped over the side and lighted flat-footed on the ground. He saw his father let himself down over the double-trees and get himself kicked twice by the roan colt. He saw his mother waiting patiently until somebody had time and inclination to take the baby. He saw his grandmother perch herself on the hub of the hind wheel on one foot, while she made va[illegible]ae, circumferential, wandering excursions for the wide, wide world with the other. He saw his brothers let themselves down over the tailgate and sneak away to avoid doing any work. At last the waggon was empty, and there were visible signs of excitement about the house. "The raid is discovered," said the boy, cutting the roots of a healthy stalk of corn and carefully hilling up a vigorous large weed. Presently he saw his father come out of the house with the gun over his shoulder and the cat under his arm. "The culprit is arrested," calmly remarked the young robber, as he leaned thoughtfully upon his hoe, and watched his father disappear behind the barn. The sharp report of a gun rang out upon the quiet of the sunset hour. "There," said the boy, with the confident expression of one who knows what he is talking about, "there goes another victim to circumstantial evidence."—Bob Burdette.

Death of a Man Rescued by Grace Darling.

On Tuesday, in the little village cemetery of Whitburn, the grave closed over the remains of James Nicolson, who was perhaps the only remaining survivor of the crew of the steamer Forfarshire, who were so gallantly rescued by the English heroine, Grace Darling, in 1838. Nicolson was then a young man of 22, and acted as fireman on board the steamer, when she was wrecked on the Farne Islands. He was not inclined to be very communicative on the subject of the disaster, and never recalled the subject without being deeply affected by the recollection of the sufferings he and his fellows endured on that terrible night. It was gathered from him that for three hours he hung on to a rope, using his teeth and nails as in a death-grip. He afterwards got a footing on the rock, and on exploring it in the darkness was gladdened by finding a sea-fowl's nest containing the remains of eggs which had been hatched. This gave the unhappy man a ray of hope that they had gained an elevation on the sea-washed island where the devouring element would not reach them. He also related the first impression of the unfortunate men on seeing a boat with a woman in it approaching them through the morning mist, and over the foaming billows. They "thought it was an angel," and this sufficiently indicates the severe strain their minds had endured through the long, dark hours of night. After the occurrence Nicolson gave up the sea. He was twice married, and is survived by a grown-up family.

A Mayor Honored.

One of the penalties of greatness is the obligation of sharing one's name with a new invention or fashion. Brougham gave his name to a vehicle, Wellington to boots, and the late Premier to a bag; but all this is nothing to the fate of the Mayor of Bolton. A lioness in a menagerie recently gave birth to three cubs at Bolton, and, as is often the case with the human race, a difficulty arose as to naming the newcomers. Eventually, while one was called Stella (probably at the instance of the circus proprietor) and another Commercial (at the instance, let us say, of the advisers who dropped in to share the discussion over the festive glass), it was decided to name the third lion Fletchers, after the Mayor of Bolton. This gentleman is doubtless now as proud as most godfathers, although a great difficulty is likely to arise, as he can hardly present the infant with a fork and spoon or a drinking mug.—St. James' Gazette.

TOO TIDY FOR COMFORT.

Don't Scrub the Floor Till You Fall Through it Into the Cellar.

"Recollections of My Mother," by Susan T. Lesley, gives an interesting picture of life in Northampton fifty years ago. The mother was Mrs. Lyman, famous for her hospitality and her devotion to reading. Here is a suggestive bit for housekeepers: "One day a friend came in who had just visited Mrs. ——, who was one of the exquisite housekeepers. She began to tell my mother about the perfect condition of that house from the garret to cellar, and rang the changes on the brightness of the brasses, the admirable shine of the glass and silver, the entire absence of dust on every carpet. My mother stood it just as long as she could, though fidgeting uneasily in her chair. Then she exclaimed: 'I think Mrs. —— is the dirtiest person I ever saw in my life.' 'Oh, Mrs. Lyman, what can you mean?' cried the friend. 'What I say is true,' said my mother, bringing down her hand with much force on the table. 'From the rising of the sun to the going down of the same that woman's mind is on dirt. She thinks dirt, sees dirt, is fighting dirt the livelong day. Now, I would rather see more of it on the carpet and less of it on her mind.'"—Boston Record

A Great Slave-Hunting Region.

The country between the Zambesi River and the lake regions of Central Africa is one of the great slave-hunting grounds of that dark continent. An English traveller who recently journeyed through the country says that every village shows the familiar sight of the slave in the yoke awaiting the departure of a caravan. This yoke is made from the forked branches of a tree; about five or six feet long—some are much longer—and from three to four inches in diameter at the thickest part. Through each prong of the fork a hole is bored for the reception of an iron pin. This ready, a soft fibrous bark is wrapped round until the whole forms a thick collar of bark, making a sort of pad much rougher than a horse's collar. It is often allowed to remain upon a slave for nine months or a year, night and day, without being once taken off. When a caravan is ready to start the men are coupled by the yoke being lashed so as to form a rigid pole, binding the pair from neck to neck together. With loads on their heads, they then turn their faces to the eastward and leave the homes forever.—Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.

Just what France wants to go to war for is not very clear. From the 1st of January to the end of June, 1886, there were only four more births than deaths in Paris. In Marseilles, Lyons, Bordeaux, Toulouse and Amiens the number of deaths was largely in excess of births. Peace and matrimony are what France needs, not war and widowhood.

THE PRICEVILLE MEETING.

Dr. Landerkin's meeting in Lamont's hall, Priceville, last Friday evening, was well attended. A. Butters, Esq., occupied the chair. Dr. Landerkin delivered a speech, which lasted from half past seven until ten o'clock—two hours and a half. We fully expected to hear a complete vindication—or an attempt at one—of his course in parliament during the past term. Naturally we expected he would tell his constituents how his time had been occupied in the House of Commons as their representative. A faithful public servant is usually expected to give a correct and unbiased account of his stewardship on such occasions. But we were doomed to disapointment. The speaker frittered away his valuable time over a lot of insignificant matters—such as salaries of civil service officials and the household furnishings of the Canadian High Commissioner's London residence. He did allude to the national debt, but only presented one side of a highly colored picture to his auditors. He did not tell them, however, how he helped to swell the debt and increase the burthen of taxation by obstructing the business of the House during the Riel debate and then cooly pocketing $500 indemnity for so doing. He had plenty of time to have done so, but he didn't. Not one word did he say about the great public works so successfully carried out by Sir John's Government. Not one word about the great transcontinental railway, the C.P.R.: not one word about the Intercolonial; and precious little did he say about the National Policy, which has helped to form the nucleus of a great nation North of the 49th parallel. All of which reminds us of that forcible little couplet, given with such vim and humor by Sir John at Owen Sound recently:—

> As bees on flowers alighting cease their hum, > so settling in their places Grits grow dumb!"

And it is mighty significant and suggestive that the worthy Doctor did not utter a solitary syllable concerning the Riel question.

The Doctor came out strong on the wheat question. But here he gave another one-sided picture and made a blunder as well. The blunder consisted in his stating that $1 per bushel had not been paid for wheat during the last four years, when as a matter of fact that amount and over was paid in the spring of 1884—a trifle under three years ago. But the Dr. gave the wrong reason for the present low price for wheat. He did not say it was owing in a large measure to the development and rapid growth of the great grain-producing districts in our Canadian North-West. He simply left it to be inferred that the Government was somehow or other to blame! He was quite witty on this subject. Seemingly his main object was to create a laugh at the expense of his opponents. This is alright when the witticisms are based on facts. But in the case they weren't. He never alluded to the indisputable fact, that if wheat is cheap, so also are the necessaries of life. When was cotton, sugar, or tea as cheap as now? When, in the history of this country, were any of the necessaries of life as cheap as they are at this moment? And if the price of wheat is low, are not the toiling masses of laborers benefitted in that the prices of breadstuffs are correspondingly low? Dr. Landerkin did not give the other side of the picture it would have dampened the ardor of his supporters too much. We have pleasure in supplying the omission.

With the Dr's views re the Senate and the Franchise Act we are more in harmony. So, also, is Dr. Jamieson, the coming M. P. for South Grey.

Dr. Landerkin said that the Dominion License Act allowed hotel bars to be kept open on Sunday, but in the absence of the proofs, we dispute the statement. Let the Dr. produce them or avoid reference to the Act altogether.

We were glad when we heard the Dr. state that he was a total abstainer and had been such all his life. Under these circumstances, however, can it be said that he was consistent when he voted in favor of the wine and beer clause in the proposed Scott Act amendment? We think not.

Dr Christoe addressed the audience for half an hour, making a far more practical speech than his predecessor—so far as the vital questions of the hour were concerned. He was well received and succeeded in creating a favorable impression in favor of Dr. Jamieson, by the calm, logical and convincing manner in which he presented the facts in connection with the leading political questions of the day. The meeting was prolonged to a late hour after Dr. Christoe took his seat.

"REVIEW" AND "POST."

Our article under the heading, "Questionable Tactics," has actually stirred up the languid Grey Review, and it positively became mildly enthusiastic in its endeavor to find a suitable apology for its unjournalistic treatment of Dr. Jamieson. It knows as well as we do, that it has misinterpreted the Dr's position politically, with the palpable object of assisting Dr. Landerkin's candidature. Such tactics are certainly questionable, not to use a stronger term. And the Review is begining to find this out, for it has already modified its tone quite considerably: it even admits that its tactics were questionable. There is always hope for a sinner who repents of his evil ways! So we have hopes of our Durham cotem.

The Hanover Post is quite mild. It has reason to be. It is very young politically and may be pardoned for attributing to Dr. Landerkin what Dr. Jamieson really possesses, viz., "backbone." The Post has evidently not studied Dr. Landerkin's political career, or, if it has, its memory is short. We would advise it to get the Hanzard for 1885-86 and read the Commons' debates carefully. Just make a note of how gracefully he tied himself to Hon. Edward Blake's coat tails during the memorable Riel discussion; how he talked in favor of the "wine and beer" clause in the proposed Scott Act Amendments: and how he cooly pocketed the $500 indemnity—the result of the laborious speeches of himself and fellow-obstructionists—and at the same time violently denouncing the alleged extravagence of the Government! There were chances for Dr. Landerkin to have shewn "back-bone"! But he was weighed in the balances and found wanting!

TO THE ELECTORS

—OF—

SOUTH GREY!

GENTLEMEN.—In pursuance of the constitutional principle, that when there is any material extension of the Franchise, the House of Commons has been dissolved, and a new election will take place on Tuesday, 22nd February.

Having been chosen by the Liberal Conservative party as their Candidate, I beg to solicit your suffrages in the approaching contest.

If elected I shall give a fair support on all vital questions to the present Government, believing that it has shewn by its past record to be heartily in accord with the progressive spirit of the age, and that under its care the laws have been fairly and impartially administered, but on some questions I may be compelled to differ with it.

I shall favor the repeal of the present Franchise Act, and the substitution for it of Manhood Suffrage.

I believe there should be some radical change made in the constitution and functions of the Senate, or if this be not practicable, then I should favor its abolition entirely.

The present fiscal system which gives protection to our manufacturies has shewn itself to be successful and should be continued.

The depression existing in our agricultural interestsand the small returns received by farmers from their investments and labor should engage the earnest and careful attention of our Legislators. Believing that the high rate of interest at which farmers are compelled to borrow money, causes a constant and large flow of their hard earnings to the capitalists of the old country, I think the Government should assume the control of the currency of the country, and that the necessary legislation should be passed to favor the establishment of Farmer's Banks, and the supply of cheap money to the agricultural classes.

Now that all the great public works rendered necessary by Confederation have been completed, I think the time has come to exercise the most rigid, careful and economical control of our expenditure, and to endeavor to carry out the affairs of the country without further increasing the public debt. Hoping my views will meet with your approbation and that you will favor me with your support and earnest co-operation. I am, gentlemen,

Your Obt. Servant,
DAVID JAMIESON.

Artemesia Council.

Feb. 7th, 1887.

The Agricultural Editor did not put in an appearance until after dinner; but the following was the business transacted during the session :—

Moved by Mr. Cairns, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that the County Treasurer be instructed to erase the taxes of 1886 against Lots 76&77, 3 N.D.R., the same having been paid this day to the Township Treasurer.—Carried.

Accounts.—From W. G. Pickell, $2, for letting and inspecting bridge on Valley Road; M. Richardson & Co., $3; C. W. Rutledge, $11, printing. On motion they were ordered paid.

Applications for the office of Assessor were received from Messrs. Wm. McLoughry, John McKee, sr., John Whitby, W. G. Pickell, Thos. Granger, W. J. Ekins, Wm. L. Wright and C. W. Bellamy.

Boland, McArthur—That petition re George Binnie and others be left over for further consideration and Clerk notify parties interested.—Carried.

A petition from Rev. J. S. Corcoran and 44 others, praying the Council not to grant to any house or person in Eugenia a License for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors, was presented and read.

Cairns, Sharp—That the sum of two dollars each be paid to H. Cairns, W. Sharp and J. Boland, for inspecting Valley Road.—Carried.

Messrs Meldrum & Boland, Auditors, presented Auditors' Report.

Christoe, Boland—That the petition presented to us and to be presented to License Commissioners, and over which we by statute have no control, this Council wish it to be placed on record, that we entirely endorse it, believing that for any public or private utility a public house at Eugenia is not necessary, and do heartily recommend the License Commissioners to refuse a License for the said village of Eugenia; and that a copy hereof be appended to the petition as set forth and forwarded as aforesaid.—Carried unanimously.

McArthur, Boland—That the Reeve and Mr. Sharp be appointed a Committee to finally audit the Auditors' Report.—Carried.

Christoe, Cairns—That inasmuch as a mistake occured in the Auditors' Report regarding work under the Commissioner of Ward 4, wherein Robert Genoa's name occurred for $10 twice, and it was supposed that Mr. Genoa had received the same, we find upon his statement, that it could not have been him; and notwithstanding any charges by the Reeve or any other person, we believe he is innocent of any suchcharge and do hereby exonerate him, entirely therefrom.—Carried.

Sharp, McArthur—That the acct. of R. Campbell for repairing scraper, 60 cents, be paid as certified by Pathmaster.—Carried.

By-Law No. 409, appointing Assessor, introduced and passed, in which John Whitby was appointed Assessor.

Boland, Cairns—That A. Carr be paid $85 on contract acct., Valley Road.—Carried.

Boland, Cairns—That Joseph Weber be paid $24 on contract acct., Valley Road,—Carried.

Council adjourned.

Letter from Mr. Reiley.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Sir:—I noticed in your last weeks issue a letter signed the Teacher. As this appears as a new correspondent or the old one in a new form, and as he makes several false statements, I ask you as a special favour to re-consider your decision in closing your columns and also the patience of your readers to give us an opportunity of refuting those unjust charges that he makes against so many respectable business men of this place.

Mr. Ed., now there was a day when sons of God came to present themselves themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them.

Mr. D. says in his letter of the 26th of Dec. 86 how that he taught the young mind. The introductory part of his letter in your columns of 3rd Feb. 87 goes to show the public his great teaching ability. He charges me with having the clique's assistance. Now Mr. Editor, I write my own letters and not like this wonderful Second Class Normal School &c Teacher, Copying from Mr. B's. letter, using the same words, he is not the model we care to copy from. He pities poor souls, well, Sir, a smaller soul than his is to be pitied. He also says that I had no means of knowing the attendance of his department. Well Sir, who should know better, for I had the Registers in my possession. His assistant did the greater part of the work and that lady only received one half the salary, I might say that was paid to Mr. D. He had a very small proportion of the work until the Trustees saw the injustice and sent some of the jr. pupils to his department. He attended the Temperance meetings for one quarter in this village and paid his dues, but resigned before the second fee was due, for fear of the almighty 25 cents.

He makes a great ado of supporting one of the resident ministers of this place. Why, Sir, I never mentioned in any of my letters about church matters, but it would be more interesting to the public the amount that he pays than this wonderful deploma &c. If the heathen abroad never heard the milk-sweets of the word only through his small pitance, we would not see the age of many converts in print. He alludes to the petition that was circulated on his first engagement. I still maintain it was against him. I will only ask him if some of the three families that he refers to when they became personally aquainted with him, if they did not sign the petition for his removal. And as to the Trustees endeavoring to keep him in Priceville. It is not so, as he engaged in a school in his own section where he lives in Nov. 1885, for $400 least he should not get Priceville school, and for the paltry sum of $20 he inconvenienced himself and bothered people to board him for $1.50 per week. Now, Mr. Editor, you or I wouldn't ask a respectable person to wash sheets or make a bed for the amount, and as to his persuasion, his nearest neighbors do not know to what church he belongs. I would never have touched this subject had he not refered to it himself, as the poet said a man's a man for a' that. He speaks of me being like the little boy who spent his money for candies. Herein, him and I agree, as there was very little value when the candies were eaten and the same in proportion when he was gone. Mr. D. refers to an Auction Sale in this place and how he was taken in by a false representation made about tea dust. There were four lbs of tea and it was stated so and all particulars about it. When put up for the highest bidder, Mr. D. wanted something cheap, so he expected he got it. He has no room for crying, for what he lost on the tea he made up on the one cent tie and then got a reduction for cash.

When e'er you meet an erring one,
That is doomable blam eless and thoughtless;
Consider e'er you cast the stone,
If yourself be pure and faultless.
BYRON.

Thanking you for the space,
I am, Yours Respct.

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie June Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

The Ae Gowden Link.

(By John Abercrombie, Bridgeport, Conn.)

I'm wae, wae tae see ye, my bonnie wee boy,
The pride o' my heart and yer fond mither's joy;
I'm wearyin' fu' sair yer blythe face tae see—
Ye're the ae gowden link that binds Lizzie an' me.

I miss ye at morn, and I miss ye at e'en;
The hoose is no hame without Charlie, I ween;
In yer wee bits o' toys scatter'd roun' I can see
The ae gowden link that binds Lizzie an' me.

The hours are like days, and the days are like years,
Ilk morn brings its hope, and ilk e'ening its fears;
Fain, fain wad I clasp tae my heart for a wee
The ae gowden link that binds Lizzie an' me.

I can see yer wee face lookin' doun on me noo,
But it's only a picture—it's no my wee doo;
But my heart fonder grows when I'm parted a wee
Frae the ae gowden link that binds Lizzie an' me.

May the guid Lord abune send ye safe hame ance mair;
I wad fain see my lamb in his high-backit chair;
Wi' yer wee bit roun' face rinnin' owre wi' its glee—
Ye're the ae gowden link that binds Lizzie an' me.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

Such an "Alice in Wonderland" sort of performance on the part of a tree could not but excite the curiosity of an intelligent youth. Accordingly, Roger pushed forward, and, getting round an intervening tree, this was what he saw. In a little glade about ten paces from him, flapping its ears, stood an enormous elephant with great white tusks, looking as large as a house, and as cool as a cucumber. Nobody, to look at the brute, would have believed that he had given them a twenty miles' trot under a burning sun. He was now refreshing himself by pulling up mimosa-trees as easily as though they were radishes, and eating the sweet fibrous roots.

Roger saw this and his heart burned with ambition to kill that elephant, the mighty great beast about a hundred times as big as himself, who could pull up a large tree and make his dinner off the roots. He was a plucky boy, was Roger, and in his sportsmanlike zeal he quite forgot that a repeating carbine is not exactly the weapon one would choose to shoot elephants with. Indeed, without giving the matter another thought, he lifted the little rifle, aimed it at the great beast's head and fired. He hit it somewhere, that was very clear, for next moment the air resounded with the most terrific scream of fury that it had ever been his lot to hear. That scream was too much for him; he turned and fled swiftly. Elephants were evidently difficult things to kill.

Fortunately for Roger, the elephant could not for some seconds make out where his tiny assailant was. Presently, however, he winded him, and came crashing after him, screaming shrilly, with its trunk and tail well up. On hearing the shot and the scream of the elephant, Ernest, who was standing some way out in the open in anticipation of a driving shot at the Guinea-fowl, had run toward the spot where Roger had entered the bush, and, just as he got opposite to it, out he came, scuttling along for his life, with the elephant not more than twenty paces behind him.

Then Ernest did a brave thing.

"Make for the bush?" he yelled to the boy, who at once swerved to the right. On thundered the elephant straight toward Ernest. But with Ernest it was evident he considered he had no quarrel, for presently he tried to swing himself round after Roger. Then Ernest lifted his shotgun and sent a charge of No. 4 into the brute's face, stinging him sadly. It was, humanly speaking, certain death which he courted, but at that moment his main idea was to save the boy. Screaming afresh, the elephant abandoned the pursuit of Roger, and made straight for Ernest, who fired the other barrel of small shot in the vain hope of blinding him. By now the boy had pulled up, being some forty yards off, and seeing Ernest just about to be crumpled up, wildly fired the repeating rifle in their direction. Some good angel must have guided the little bullet, for it, as it happened, struck the elephant in the region of the knee, and, forcing its way in, slightly injured a tendon, and brought the great beast thundering to the ground. Ernest had only just time to dodge to one side as the huge mass came to the earth; indeed, as it was, he got a tap from the tip of the elephant's trunk which knocked him down, and, though he did not feel it at the time, made him sore for days afterward. In a moment, however, he was up again and away at his best speed, legging it as he never legged it before in his life, and so was the elephant. People have no idea at what a pace an elephant can go when he is out of temper, until they put it to the proof. Had it not been for the slight injury to the knee, and the twenty yards' start he got, Ernest would have been represented by little pieces before he was ten seconds older. As it was, when, a hundred and fifty yards farther on, elephant and Ernest broke upon the astonished view of Mr. Alston and Jeremy, who were hurrying up to the scene of action, they were almost one flesh, that is, the tip of the elephant's trunk was now up in the air, and now about six inches off the seat of Ernest's trousers, at which it snapped convulsively.

Up went Jeremy's heavy rifle, which luckily he had in his hand.

"Behind the shoulder, half-way down the ear," said Mr. Alston, beckoning to a Kafir to bring his rifle, which he was carrying. The probability of Jeremy's stopping the beast at that distance—they were quite sixty yards off—was infinitesimal.

There was a second's pause. The snapping tip touched the retreating trousers, but did not get hold of them, and the contact sent a magnetic thrill up Ernest's back.

"Boom—thud—crash!" and the elephant was down dead as a doornail. Jeremy had made no mistake: the bullet went straight through the great brute's heart, and broke the shoulder on the other side. He was one of those men who not only rarely miss, but always seem to hit their game in the right place.

Ernest sank exhausted on the ground and Mr. Alston and Jeremy rushed up rejoicing.

"Near go that, Ernest," said the former.

Ernest nodded his head in reply, he could not speak.

"By Jove! where is Roger?" he went on, turning pale as he missed his son for the first time.

But at this moment the young gentleman hove in sight, and, recovering from his fright when he saw that the great animal was stone-dead, rushed up with yells of exultation, and, climbing on to the upper tusk, began to point out where he had hit him.

Meanwhile Mr. Alston had extracted the story of the adventure from Ernest.

"You young rascal," he said to his son, "come off that tusk. Do you know that if it had not been for Mr. Kershaw here, who courted almost certain death to save you from the results of your own folly, you would be as dead as that elephant and as flat as a biscuit? Come down, sir, and offer up your thanks to Providence and Mr. Kershaw that you have a sound square inch of flesh left on your worthless young body!"

Roger descended accordingly, considerably crestfallen.

"Never you mind, Roger, that was a most rattling good shot of yours at his knee," said Ernest, who had now got his breath again. "You would not do it again if you fired at elephants for a week."

And so the matter passed off, but afterward Mr. Alston thanked Ernest with tears in his eyes for saving his son's life.

This was the first elephant they killed, and also the largest. It measured ten feet eleven inches at the shoulder, and the tusks weighed, when dried out, about sixty pounds each. They remained in the elephant country for nearly four months when the approach of the unhealthy season forced them to leave it—not, however, before they had killed a great quantity of large game of all sorts.

It was on the occasion of their return to Pretoria that Ernest made the acquaintance of a curious character in a curious way.

As soon as they got to the boundaries of the Transvaal Ernest bought a horse from a Boer, on which he used to ride after the herds of buck that swarmed upon the high veldt. They had none with them, because in the country which they had been shooting no horse would live. One day, as they were travelling slowly along a little before mid-day, a couple of bull vilderbeeste galloped across the waggon-track about two hundred yards in front of the oxen. The voorlooper stopped the oxen in order to give Ernest, who was sitting on the waggon-box with a rifle by his side, a steady shot. Ernest fired at the last of the two galloping bulls. The line was good, but he did not make sufficient allowance for the pace at which the bull was travelling, with the result that instead of striking it forward and killing it, the bullet shattered its flank and did not stop its career.

"Dash it!" said Ernest, when he saw what he had done, "I can't leave the poor beast like that. Bring me my horse; I will go after him and finish him."

The horse, which was tied already saddled behind the waggon, was quickly brought, and Ernest mounting told them not to keep the waggons for him, as he would strike across country and meet them at the outspan place about a mile or so on. Then he started after his wounded bull, which could be plainly discerned standing with one leg up on the crest of a rise about a thousand yards away. But if ever a vilderbeeste was possessed by a fixed determination not to be finished off, it was that particular vilderbeeste. The pace at which a vilderbeeste can travel on three legs when he is not too fat is perfectly astonishing, and Ernest had traversed a couple of miles of great rolling plain before he even got within a fair galloping distance of him. He had a good horse, however, and at last he got within fifty yards, and then away they went at a merry pace, Ernest's object being to ride alongside and put a bullet through him. Their gallop lasted a good two miles or more. On the level Ernest gained on the vilderbeeste, but whenever they came to a patch of ant-bear holes or a ridge of stones, the vilderbeeste had the pull and drew away again. At last they came to a dry pan or lake about half a mile broad, crowded with hundreds of buck of all sorts, which scampered away as they came tearing along. Here Ernest at length drew up level with his quarry, and, grasping the rifle with his right hand, tried to get it so that he could put a bullet through the beast and drop him. But it was no easy matter, as any one who has ever tried it will know, and, while he was still making up his mind, the vilderbeeste slued round and came at him bravely. Had his horse been unused to the work, he must have had his inside ripped out by the crooked horns, but he was an old hunter and equal to the occasion. To turn was impossible, the speed was too great, but he managed to slue, with the result that the charging animal brushed his head, instead of landing himself in his belly. At the same moment Ernest stretched out his rifle and pulled the trigger, and, as it chanced, put the bullet right through the vilderbeeste and dropped him dead.

Then he pulled up, and dismounting cut off some of the best of the beef with his hunting-knife, stowed it away in a saddle-bag, and set off on his horse, now pretty well fagged, to find the waggons. But to find a waggon-track on the great veldt, unless you have in the first instance taken the most careful bearings, is almost as difficult as it would be to return from a distance to any given spot on the ocean without a compass. There are no trees or hills to guide one, nothing but a vast wilderness of land resembling a sea petrified in a heavy swell.

Ernest rode on for three or four miles, as he thought retracing his steps over the line of country he had traversed, and at last to his joy struck the path. There were waggon-tracks on it, but he thought they did not look quite fresh. However, he followed them faute de mieux for some five miles. Then he became convinced that they could not have been made by his waggons. He must have overshot the mark, and must hark back. So he turned his weary horse's head, and made his way back along the road to the spot where the spoor struck into it. The waggons must be outspanned, waiting for him a little farther back. He went on, one mile, two, three—no waggons. A little to the left of the road was an eminence. He rode to it and up and scanned the horizon. Oh, joy! there, far away, five or six miles off, was the white cap of a waggon. He rode to it straight across-country. Once he got bogged in a vlei or swamp, and had to throw himself off and drag his horse out by the bridle. He struggled on, and at last came to the dip in which he had seen the waggon-tent. It was a great white stone perched on a mound of brown ones.

By this time he had utterly lost his reckoning. Just then, to make matters worse, a thunder-shower came up with a bitter wind and drenched him to the skin. The rain passed, but the wind did not. It blew like ice and chilled his frame, enervated with the tropical heat in which he had been living, through and through. He wandered on aimlessly, till suddenly his tired horse put his foot in a hole and fell heavily, throwing him to his head and shoulder. For a few minutes his senses left him, but he recovered, and, mounting his worn-out horse, wandered on again. Luckily he had broken no bones. Had he done so, he would probably have perished miserably in that lonely place.

The sun was sinking now, and he was faint for want of food, for he had eaten nothing that day but a biscuit. He had not even a pipe of tobacco with him. Just as the sun vanished he hit a little path, or what might once have been a path. He followed it till the pitch darkness set in; then he got off his horse and took off the saddle, which he put down on the bare, black veldt, for a fire had recently swept off the dry grass, and, wrapping the saddle-cloth round his feet, laid his aching head upon the saddle. The reins of his horse he hitched round his arm, lest the animal should stray away from him to look for food. The wind was bitterly cold, and he was wet through; the hyenas came and howled round him. He cut off a piece of the raw meat and chewed it, but it turned his stomach and he spat it out. Then he shivered and sank into a torpor from which there was a poor chance of his awakening.

How long he lay so he did not know, it seemed a few minutes, it was really an hour, when he was suddenly awakened by feeling somebody shaking him by the shoulder.

"What is it?" he said, wearily.

"Wat is it? ach Himmel! wat is it? dat is just wat I wants to know. What do you here? You shall die so."

The voice was the voice of a German, and Ernest knew German well.

"I have lost my way," he said in that language! "I cannot find the waggons."

"Ah, you can speak the tongue of the Vaterland," said his visitor still addressing him in English. "I will embrace you," and he did so.

Ernest sighed. It is a bore to be embraced in the dark by an unknown male German when you feel that you are not far off dissolution.

"You are hungered?" said the German.

Ernest signified that he was.

"And athirsted?"

Again he signified assent.

"And perhaps you have no 'gui' (tobacco)?"

"No, none."

"Good! my little wife, my Wilhelmina, shall find you all these things."

"What the mischief," thought Ernest to himself, "can a German be doing with his little wife in this place?"

By this time the stars had come out and gave a little light.

"Come, rouse yourself, and come and see my little wife. Oh, the pferd!" (horse)—"we will tie him to my wife. Ah, she is beautiful, though her leg shakes. Oh, yes, you will love her."

"The deuce I shall!" ejaculated Ernest; and then, mindful of the good things the lady in question was to provide him with, he added solemnly, "Lead on, Macduff."

"Macduffer! my name is not so; my name is Hans; all ze great South Africa know me very well, and all South Africa love my wife."

"Really!" said Ernest.

Although he was so miserable, he began to feel that the situation was interesting. A lady to whom his horse was to be tied, and whom all South Africa was enamored of, could hardly fail to be interesting. Rising he advanced a step or two with his friend, who, he could now see was a large, burly man with white hair, apparently about 60 years of age. Presently they came to something that in the dim light reminded him of the hand hearse in Kesterwick church, only it had two wheels instead of four, and no springs.

"Behold my beautiful wife," said the German. "Soon I will show you how her leg shakes; it shakes, oh, horrid."

"Is—is the lady inside?" asked Ernest. It occurred to him that his friend might be carting about a corpse.

"Inside! no, she is outside, she is all over," and stepping back the German put his head on one side in a most comical fashion, and, regarding the unofficial hearse with the deepest affection, said in a low voice, "Ah, liebe vrouw, ah, Wilhemina, is you tired, my dear? and how is your poor leg?" and he caught hold of a groggy wheel and shook it.

Had Ernest been a little less wretched, and one degree further off starvation, it is probable that he would have exploded with laughter, for he had a keen sense of the ludicrous; but he had not got a laugh left in him, and, besides, he was afraid of offending the German. So he merely murmured, "Poor, poor leg!" sympathetically, and then alluded to the question of eatables.

"Ah, yes, of course. Let us see what Wilhemina shall give us," and he trotted round to the back end of the cart, which, in keeping with its hearse-like character, opened by means of two little folding doors, and pulled out, first, two blankets, one of which he gave to Ernest to put round his shoulders; second, a large piece of biltong, or sun-dried game-flesh, and some biscuits; and, third, a bottle of peach-brandy. On these viands they fell to, and though they were not in themselves of an appetizing nature, Ernest never enjoyed anything more in his life. Their meal did not take long, and after it his friend Hans produced some excellent Boer tobacco, and over their pipes he told him how he had lost his way. Hans asked him which road he had been traveling on.

"The Rustenburg road."

"Then, my friend, you are not more than one thousand paces off it. My wife and I we travel along him all day, till just now Wilhemina she think she would like to come up here, and so I come, and now you see the reason why. She know you lie here and die in the cold, and she turn up to save your life. Ah, the good woman!"

Ernest was greatly relieved to hear that he was so near the road, as, once upon it, he would have no difficulty in falling in with the wagons. Clearly he must during the latter part of his wanderings have been unknowingly approaching it. His mind, relieved upon this point, was at liberty to satisfy his curiosity about his friend. He soon discovered that he was a harmless lunatic, whose craze it was to wander all over South Africa, dragging his hand-cart after him. He made for no fixed point, nor had he any settled round. The beginning of the year might find him near the Zambesi, and the end near Cape Town, or anywhere else. By the natives he was looked upon as inspired, and invariably treated with respect, and he lived upon what was given to him, or what he shot as he walked along. This mode of life he had pursued for years, and, though he had many adventures, he never came to harm.

"You see, my friend," said the simple man, in answer to Ernest's inquiries, "I make my wife down there in Scatterdorp, in the old colony. The houses are a long way off each other there, and the church it is in the middle. And the good volk there, they did die very fast, and did get tired of carrying each other to be buried. And so they come to me and say, 'Hans, you are a carpenter, you must make a beautiful black cart to put us in when we die.' And so I set to, and I work, and work, and work at my cart till I gets quite—what you call him—stoopid. And then one night, just as my cart is finished, I dreams that she and I are traveling along a wide straight road like the road on the high veldt, and I knowe that she is my wife, and that we must travel always together till we reach the City of Rest. And far, far away, above the top of a high mountain like the Drakensberg, I see a great wide tree, rooted on a cloud and covered all over with beautiful snow, that shined in the sunlight like the diamonds at Kimberley. And I know that under that tree is the gate of the real Rustenburg, the City of Rest, and my wife and I, we must journey on, on, on till we find it."

"Where do you come from now?" asked Ernest.

"From Utrecht, from out of the east, where the sun rises so red every morning over Zululand, the land of bloodshed. Oh, the land will run with blood there. I know it; Wilhemina told me as we came along; but I don't know when. But you are tired. Good! you shall sleep with Wilhemina; I will sleep beneath her. No, you shall, or she will be—what you call him—offended."

Ernest crept into the cavity, and at once fell asleep, and dreamed that he had been buried alive. At dawn he emerged, bade his friend farewell, and gaining the road rejoined the wagon in safety.

CHAPTER XXXII.

ERNEST ACCEPTS A COMMISSION.

A young man of that ardent, impetuous, intelligent mind which makes him charming and a thing to love, contrasted with the young man of the sober, cautious, money-making mind (infinitely the most useful article), which makes him a "comfort" to his relatives and a thing to respect, avoid, and marry your daughter to, has two great safeguards standing between him and the ruin which dogs the heels of the ardent, the impetous, and the intelligent. These are, his religion and his belief in women. It is probable that he will start on his erratic career with a full store of both. He has never questioned the former; the latter, so far as his own class in life is concerned, are to him all sweet and good, and perhaps there is one particular star who only shines for him, and is the sweetest and best of them all. But one fine day the sweetest and best of all throws him over, being a younger son and marries his eldest brother, or a paralytic cotton-spinner of enormous wealth and uncertain temper, and then a sudden change comes over the spirit of the ardent, intelligent, and impetuous one. Not being of a well-balanced mind, he rushes to the other extreme, and believes in his sore heart that all women would throw over such as he and marry eldest brothers or superannuated cotton-spinners. He may be right or he may be wrong. The materials for ascertaining the fact are wanting, for all women engaged to impecunious young gentlemen do not get the chance. But, right or wrong, the result upon the sufferer is the same—his faith in women is shaken, if not destroyed. Nor does the mischief stop there; his religion often follows his belief in the other sex, for in some mysterious way the two things are interwoven. A young man of the nobler class of mind in love, is generally for the time being a religious man; his affection lifts him more or less above the things of earth, and floats him on its radiant wings a day's journey nearer Heaven.

The same thing applies conversely. If a man's religious belief is emasculated, he becomes suspicious of the "sweetest and best," he grows cynical, and no longer puts faith in superlatives. From atheism there is but a small step to misogyny, or rather to that disbelief in humanity which embraces a profounder constituent disbelief in its feminine section, and in turn, as already said, the misogynist walks daily along the edge of atheism. Of course there is a way out of these discouraging results. If the mind that suffers and falls through its suffering be of the truly noble order, it may in time come to see that this world is a world not of superlatives, but of the most arid positives, with here and there a little comparative oasis to break the monotony of its general outline. Its owner may learn that the fault lay with him, for believing too much, for trusting too far, for setting up as an idol a creature exactly like himself, only several degrees lower beneath proof; and at last may come to see that though "sweetests and bests" are chimerical, there are women in the world who may fairly be called "sweet and good." Or, to return to the converse side of the picture, it may occur to our young gentleman that although Providence starts us in the world with a full inherited or indoctrinated belief in a given religion, that is not what Providence understands by faith. Faith, perfect faith, is only to be won by struggle, and in most cultivated minds by the passage through the dim, mirage-clad land of disbelief. The true believer is he who has trodden down disbelief, not he who has run away from it. When we have descended from the height of our childhood, when we have entertained Apollyon, and, having considered what he has to say, given him battle and routed him in the plain, then, and not till then, can we say with guileless hearts, "Lord, I believe," and feel no need to add the sadly qualifying words, "help Thou my unbelief."

A well at Yakutsk, in Siberia, has been a standing puzzle to scientists for many years. It was begun in 1828, but given up at thirty feet because it was still in frozen earth. Then the Russian Academy of Sciences continued for some months the work of deepening the well, but stopped when it had reached to the extent of some three hundred and eighty-two feet, when the ground was still frozen as hard as a rock. In 1844 the Academy had the temperature of the excavation carefully taken at various depths, and from the data thus obtained the ground was estimated to be frozen to a depth of six hundred and twelve feet. As external cold could not freeze the earth to such a depth, even in Siberia, geologists have concluded that the well has penetrated a frozen formation of the glacial period which has never thawed out.

The Queen of Roumania has undertaken to deliver a course of lectures on national literature at the high school for girls in Bucharest. Her Majesty, who is well known as a poetess, under the pseudonym of "Carmen Sylva," has been accustomed for some time past to give lectures privately in her palace to the young ladies of the leading families in Roumania. These literary assemblies proved so attractive that the demands for admission to them grew inconvenient, so that the Queen thought of delivering her lectures in the high school to all pupils who cared to attend. Before Her Majesty could do this, however, she had to obtain a regular professor's diploma from the King and the Minister of Instruction. This required an examination, to which the Queen gaily and graciously submitted, and the diploma having now been won, not granted by favor, Her Majesty began her lectures at the opening of term, after the New Year.

Scarlet fever, which is epidemic in many cities on the American continent at the present time, and prevails to a limited extent in Hamilton, is essentially an infectious disease and breaks out from time to time, either sporadically or epidemically, in nearly all latitudes (except, perhaps, some semi-tropical regions). It is an imported disease in this country, having been first introduced from Europe into North America in or about the year 1737, and into South America in or about 1829. Recently it has established itself in India. Its propagation by means of infection is practically verified by the fact that it becomes speedily diffused among the predisposed when no preventive measures are adopted, and is rapidly stamped out when these have been vigorously enforced. Air tainted with the poison is the usual method of transmission, and may be carried by clothing, letters, bedding, toys, animals, etc. It may be communicated directly from the cow or through her milk, from polluted water, and by healthy individuals who have recently been in contact with scarlet fever patients. The contagion may be carried by the breath, as long as sore throat remains; by the perspiration, so long as desquamation continues, and by the digestion, as long as the alimentary mucous lining continues congested. Probably it is actively infectious for six or seven weeks from the third or fourth day of its inception. In England scarlet fever is responsible for about 2,000 deaths annually among the young. Second and even third attacks sometimes occur, but these are always without danger.

A new system of connecting several thicknesses of leather, either in making double or triple thickness leather belting or in affixing the soles of boots to the uppers, described in the Engineer, is being introduced in England, where machines are being exhibited as used for attaching the soles of boots. The new system partakes more of the character of riveting than of any other known method, the new rivets being made of metal-covered wax thread. Each fastener is thus a tubular rivet filled with firmly enclosed wax thread. One of the chief objects of this tubular rivet or piece of metal-covered thread is a firm fastening, with greater flexibility than has hitherto been obtained with machine work. It would be impossible to explain the construction of the machines used without drawings, but we may say that the covering process is performed on a machine in which a strip of brass is pulled through dies which inclose the wax thread fed to it. The tube-covered thread from this machine passes to another in which the tube is roughened or corrugated circumferentially by small rotating discs with fine teeth. The corrugation helps to give the fastener a firm hold, and also to make it more easily flexible than it would be if the metal tube were plain. The edges of the strip are not soldered or brazed so as to make it into an actual tube. The next machine shown in operation is one in which boot soles are affixed in a few seconds, the machine pierces the leather, cuts off a length of the metal-covered thread, automatically adjusting it according to the thickness of the leather being fastened. The covered wax thread is then driven vertically into the sole of the boot. It thus presents an end-wearing surface; the brass covering, as the leather wears, burrs over, forming a head on the outside of the sole, and prevents its working into the foot, an objection which attaches to other metallic fastenings.

An Old Man's Warning.

Lieutenant—"I would like very much to have a leave of absence for three days." Colonel—"Going on a picnic?" "Yes, colonel, we are going to have a little fishing party out in the woods" "Going to be ladies' in the party!" "Yes, colonel, quite a number of young ladies will be in the party." "You can go, and I hope you will enjoy yourself, but for heaven's sake, young man, be careful. It was on just such an innocent picnic that I came to be gobbled up by the old lady in there."—Fliegende Blætter.

About Lips.

I don't think lips ripen nowadays, and what would the old poets have done if they could not have filled their lines with effusions to ripe lips? Come to think of it, I don't know what ripe lips mean. I never met with a pair of green ones. Did you? The female lips of to-day are born ripe, it seems to me. But they don't wither very fast, and that's lucky.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Nameless Guest.

I wonder if ever the angel of death
  Comes down from the great unknown,
And soars away on the wings of night,
  Unburdened and alone;
I wonder if ever the angel's eyes
  Are filled with glistening tears,
As they grant to the souls unfit for flight,
  A few more weary years.

For it seems at times, when the world is still
  And the soft night winds are whist,
As though some spirit were hovering near
  In folds of dream-like mist,
And I feel, though mortals are nowhere near,
  That I am not quite alone,
And with gloomy thoughts of dying and dead
  My heart grows cold as stone.

But whether 'tis death that hovers near,
  And knocks at the door of my heart,
Or whether 'tis some bright angel come
  To be of my life a part.
I cannot tell, and I long in vain
  The secret strange to know,
While the moments of mirth, and grief, and pain
  Move on in their ceaseless flow.

And at night when I kneel to a Higher Power
  And ask His tender care,
One yearning cry of a wayward life
  Is the burthen of my prayer;
That I may bend, with willing lips,
  To kiss the chastening rod,
And learn the way through the golden gate
  To the great white throne of God.

PRETTY WOMEN IN LONDON.

Lady Colin Campbell a Target for Many Curious Glances.

(Cousin Madge in London Truth.)

Lady Colin Campbell was conspicuous among the celebrities of the Grosvenor Gallery private view. It was quite amusing to see how the people came up in twos and threes to stare at her as she stood talking to Mr. Whistler, till at last they accumulated and became quite a dense crowd. Lady Colin looks as though all the staring of the world could not for a single instant disturb her self-possession. Her fine figure was well displayed in a beautifully-made dress of dark red-brown cloth and plush. Her bonnet was one of those very fashionable but very ugly ones which ascend in a steep slope from the back. Her earrings were the envy of every diamond-lover in the room. They were large single stones of the first water, and they shone and glittered temptingly in the brilliant light. Lady Colin was with her father, Mr. Blood. Lady Randolph Churchill, in subdued tones of brown and beaver, shone star-like among the crowd of gazers. She was with an elderly lady who must once have been almost as pretty as she herself.

There were few pretty growns, but many magnificent mantles. Two or three costumes wholly red, usually unpardonable, were quite forgivable in the state of the atmosphere. They warmed one up to look at them. A lady in a well-cut redingote of light checkered cloth and a distressingly small waist puzzled everybody. "Has she dyed her hair then?" was the question asked by all who saw her. Two lovely girls in sombre seal and furs, with beautiful gold-brown hair falling round their child-faces, were followed by a buzz of admiration. There were many pretty women. A few wild heads lent added value to the neat. A gown and bonnet of ruby velvet, trimmed with costly sable-tail, caused pangs of envy in many a breast; but few would have changed identity with the wearer.

One or two actresses stood near us as we sat. They unconsciously pitched their voices so as to be heard by many, even when they addressed the individual only. The genial journalist was in great form. I heard him accuse a lady of being a captain of heavy drgoons. He declared he had seen the spurs under her gown. Perhaps she wears steel "tips" to her heels. That always gives a military ring to the footfall.

Managing Husbands.

A man of position and wealth is not always a pleasant fellow to have about the house. I have a friend, a lovely intelligent woman, who has an elegant home and wearing apparel, but I happen to know that she dare not invest 50 cents without consulting the lord of the mansion. Another, the wife of a millionaire, as she has no purse of her own, gets what she wants and sends the bill to her husband to storm over at his leisure. I believe Eve ate the apple because she wanted it, and she liked it just as well as Adam did, only she had too much honor to slip around and throw the blame on some one else. It is the lover's place to manage to get the girl he loves for a wife, and if both are what they should be there will be no effort in that line needed to live happily together as long as life shall last. No, we did not promise to manage our husbands; neither do many of the present generation promise to obey. My lover spoke to the minister himself, saying he wished that word left out, as he was marrying a woman, not a child, and I assure you it has always been my delight to please him in every way I could. Beside, I believe there are few women nowadays, if they find themselves bound to a stake with a log-chain, but would be glad to liberate themselves with a sly fib if they could. Then I don't believe that husbands have more care than wives do. I think these things are generally very fairly balanced, and if trials must come they should be borne by both unflinchingly. Yes, let us make home as bright as possible and with happy, sunshiny tempers keep the gray hairs out of both our heads—that is, if we don't like gray hairs; but I, for one, do, and gladly say let them come. There is one thing Solomon can remember—nearly every man who is worthy of a crown gets it. How is it that at the end of that stirring appeal should come in the just and natural but bitter cry against the laws that man has made? Does that husband you reverence so much believe that a woman who must obey the laws should have a voice in making them? If not, he needs a little managing.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A Modern Jenny Geddes.

It may be news to the most even of Scottish readers (says the Greenock Telegraph) that Mr. Sankey met with a modern Jenny Geddes the first time he sang in the Scotch metropolis. He tells the story in a very lively fashion to a New York "interviewer." The fact that most of his songs were purely American created misapprehension in the minds of some people as to how they would be received in England, and especially in Scotland, when he came hither with Mr. Moody. Not a few predicted that he would come to grief. In England, however, his sacred lyrics went like wildfire. Still Scotland was the place where the pessimists predicted that there would certainly be disaster. "They insisted that the people of Scotland loved the Psalms of David, and would tolerate nothing else. I remember well one reception in bonny Scotland. The first meeting was held in Edinburgh, in the Free Assembly Hall. When I arrived the place was literally jammed. I sat down at the organ and played a few tunes. I was just beginning to sing a solo when I heard a loud scream in the congregation. The voice yelled, 'Let me out, let me out; what would John Knox think of you?' I was surprised at the outburst. Finally a woman struggled through the crowd, reached the aisle and went out, still screaming that sentence. My solo was well received, and no more protests were made against music that John Knox knew nothing of in his lay."

A company of friends recently called at the house of a citizen of Middletown, Conn., to spend the evening. They were asked to lay their coats, cloaks, and shawls on a bed where a baby was sleeping. The little one was unusually good that evening, and neither stirred nor cried. When the guests had gone it was found to be dead. It had been smothered by the garments piled upon it.

CLEVER DIAMOND THIEVES.

Feeding Precious Gems to a Dog and Then Killing the Dog—Other Tricks.

Although there is a considerable and clever detective staff on the diamond fields, there are those at Kimberley who can outwit the police, at any rate for a time, and so it happens that such a number of stones is annually stolen as to prove a factor in disturbing the market price, says "Chambers' Journal." The chances of detection are no doubt great; but the hope of securing a few hundred pounds by a little peculation is so tempting that there are always hundreds of men at "the game. Some of the thieves—that is, the men who steal the stones they are paid for unearthing—display great ingenuity in carrying away the gems. The business of diamond-digging is naturally of a rough-and-ready kind, and presents opportunities for fraud which are not available in other industries. When diamond stealing first became a business those interested, suspecting no evil, were easily cheated. Stones were then carried away concealed about the person of the laborers. But as the thefts increased greater precautions were taken to insure the detection of the thieves. Some of the "dodges" which have been resorted to in order to carry diamonds from the diggings have been not a little remarkable. We have only room, however, for a sample or two. Upon one occasion it is related that an ingenious laborer wrapped the stones in a small piece of soft bread, the morsel being greedily snapped by a dog. The dog was carefully looked after till the mine was left behind, when it was ruthlessly killed to obtain the hidden diamonds in its stomach. Domestic fowls have been trained to swallow the smaller stones, which have afterward been cut out of their crops. A parcel of stolen gems has been known to have been got out of a well-watched digging by having been ingeniously fastened to the hair of a horse's tail.

Poor Birdie!

The vanishing bird-cage trick, which was done some years ago, required great strength on the part of the magician, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Contrary to the general impression, which was that the cage was made entirely of rubber, it was composed of strong steel bars, at the joints of which were powerful springs. The cage was held in the magician's hands, with the live bird twittering between its wires, unconscious of the cruel fate that awaited it. Often the magician went down into the audience and gave people a close inspection of the cage, which he always held between the palms of his hands, using all the strength of his arms to keep the steel bars in place. Returning to the stage, he faced the audience, telling them to keep their eyes on the cage. This they did, but to no avail. With a light muscular movement of the arms, and the usual "one, two three," the magician's hands parted company from the cage, and the latter, with its crushed and mangled little victim, was gone, nobody knew where. It went up the magician's coat-sleeve, often at the cost of lacerations and bruises to his arm, and as he bowed and smiled it was swinging at his back under his coat. The bars of the cage fell together in a line with the diagonal of the cube which it formed; or, a better illustration is offered if the opposite corners of a square are forced toward each other until two of the sides lie almost parallel to the other two. In 99 cases out of 100 the bird is crushed to death.

The Tallest Man of Modern Times.

There appeared at the London pavilion last evening (Jan. 10th), for the first time, the tallest man whose height has been recorded in modern times. The new giant is an Austrian named Winkelmeir, and his height is eight feet nine inches, which is one foot more than that of Chang, the Chinese giant. Winkelmeir was born at Freidburg, near Salsburg, upper Austria, in 1865, his parents being in an humble station in life. He is the youngest of a family of five children, none of whom are of abnormal stature, nor are his parents or grand-parents unusually tall. His fingers span two octaves on a piano, and the stretch of his arm is enormous. He showed no development of this extraordinary growth up to the age of 14, but since then he has been growing rapidly, and medical authorities in Berlin have expressed the opinion that he is likely to increase till he is 25. The young man is healthy, strong and intelligent. Beyond doubt he is one of the greatest curiosities of the day. A huge bed has been constructed for him in the building of the pavilion, which will be his home for some time to come.—London Standard.

A Billiardist and a Wizard.

Eugene Carter, the billiardist, was giving an exhibition of fancy billiards at the Press Club rooms the other night when Wizard Herrmann walked up to the table and seizing a red ball and a white ball, tossed them into the air, where they appeared to vanish. Carter looked on in amazement as the Mephistophelian prestidigitateur combed the spheres out of a night police reporter's whiskers and rolled them upon the table.

"Pretty good shot yourself," said Eugene, looking at the wizard.

"Oh, pretty fair at my game," replied the Frenchman.

"And what game is that?"

"Banking," retorted Herrmann, raking several hundred dollars out of a government building reporter's shirt front.—Chicago Herald.

The Poor Man's Paradise.

My servant is earning $18 per month. With that he can support his three wives and their children, have a little house of his own, together with a small garden, and eat three to four courses at every meal, besides paying for all the arrak and wine and tobacco he needs—and he needs a good deal. A man can keep house splendidly on 20 cents a day in Persia.—Letter from Wolf von Schlebrand.

Thoughtful Santa Claus.

THE DAY AFTER.

What May Happen to a Young Man Who Indulges Too Freely.

It was the day after New Year's, says the San Francisco Chronicle. He came up full of affected enthusiasm and affection, for his head was big enough for a No. 25¾, but she must not know it. She entered the room and greeted him coldly.

"My darling," he said, "is this how you greet me on the New Year? What's the matter?"

"Mr. Simpson," she said, "all is over between us."

"What—what have I done?"

"Mr. Simpson, I have loved you devotedly, passionately, for six months and three days. I naturally have permitted all those chaste liberties which engaged people concede to one another, but I cannot overlook your conduct yesterday."

Then he began to try and think back. I am told that it is one of the hardest things in the world to do to think back over New Year's day.

"My conduct!"

"Yes, Mr. Simpson. You were drunk last night.'

"Oh, come, Lucinda. I wasn't very bad, I was quite sober, indeed."

"Do not deny it, James Simpson; do you know that you kissed my eldest sister when you left, after your New Year's call?"

"I remember that, of course—only a bit of pleasantry."

"And you slapped my mother on the back and called her 'Old Gal.'"

"No, no. You misunderstood. I did not—"

"I could overlook all these things, but when you introduced me to the hackman as your intended wife, and told him there would always be a chair for him at our dinner table after we were married, I draw the line—and—all is over between us."

It cost him a small fortune to make up with the family.

Women's Names.

It is curious how difficult it is to tell truly what a woman's name is. It is as puzzling as her age, for instance. Recently in England a woman died and left a sum of money to "my cousin, Harriet Cloak." As it happened, however, she had a cousin who had been Harriet Cloak before marriage, but had married some one with another name, and she had also a cousin named Cloak, who had married a girl named Harriet, so that she had become Harriet Cloak. Therefore, when it came to deciding who was "my cousin, Harriet Cloak," the first judge who tried the case decided that it was the blood relative, the nee Harriet Cloak, but the court to which the case was appealed decided the other way—that it was the Harriet Cloak by marriage who was the Harriet Cloak of the present date.

And yet, for all of this decision, it might well be that the cousins had known each other from childhood, and that the old and familiar name, which had been changed by marriage, had still been used by the testatrix to designate her earlier friend. The court, however, decided that the woman knew the true names of both, and wrote accordingly.

All this suggests indirectly the general subject of women's names. What is a man to do who receives a letter in a manifestly feminine hand signed by a stranger, say, "M. L. Jones?" Is he to reply to Mr. M. L. Jones, or to Miss, or to Mrs.? Is it to be Dear Sir, or Dear Madam, or what? Suppose it is Mary L. Jones. He knows then that he musn't say "Mr.," but that is all he knows. Shall he address her as Mrs. or Miss Mary L. Jones? That he cannot tell. The chances are that he will make a wrong guess, and that she, on getting the letter, will laugh at his stupidity.—Hartford Courant.

Can the Magnet Cure the Dumb?

Dr. Charcot, of the Salpetriere Hospital has been continuing with considerable success his experiments on hysteric and hypnotic patients. Having satisfied himself as to the possibility of transferring paralysis, nervous contractions, and cataleptic systems from one patient to another, he next set to work, in conjunction with his able assistant, Dr. Babinski, to apply the test to hysteric dumbness. It is a well known fact in medicine, that people afflicted with hysteric epilepsy suddenly become tongue-tied, and remain so for many years. A female patient afflicted in this manner, but who was otherwise of robust constitution, was placed back to back with a woman who had been a long time cataleptic. By means of the magnet the dumbness was transferred from one patient to the other with the same regularity that marked the experiments in paralysis. By continuing the experiments Dr. Charcot hopes to be able to completely restore speech to the tongue-tied patient. The same experiment was repeated with male patients with the same promising results. It would, of course, be premature to call Dr. Charcot's wonderful studies pre-eminently successful in their immediate results as exemplied by the strange experiments which have been made at the Salpetriere, but no one can doubt that, like Claude Bernard's in another field, they open up a vast vista in pathological and physiological science.—London Telegraph.

Dinner Symphonies in Color.

In dinner-party arrangements a pretty custom is rapidly gaining ground; this is to make one color in varied shades rule the roost and to have one flower the presiding genius of the feast. Take the yellow, for instance. Golden-hued chrysanthemums would be the most appropriate bloom to harmonize with this color in the shades of the large lamps on the side tables and sideboard and the delicate fairy lamps marshalled on the dinner-table. Careless posies of the same flower are suspended over the heads of the diners, and separate sprays lie carelessly at their sides, and, grouped together, decorate the centre of the table. All the service used at the meal must be in harmony, and in some instances the very cloth covering the table is of pale canary satin. At one dinner of eight a well-known entertainer carried out the golden lead in the viands themselves—the soup was golden, so also were the fish and its sauce; entrees, sweets, and dessert all following suit.—London Globe.

INNUMERABLE RUINED CITIES.

Valuable Relics Which Await the Coming of Venturesome Explorers.

The ignorance and indifference of Hispano-Americans on the archæology of this country surpasses belief, even taking into account the natural indolence of Southern races and the fact that during the last few hundred years their energies have been mainly expended in uprisings against an ever-changing government, writes a Mexico correspondent of the Philadelphia Record. But since Stevens, M. Chasney, Dr. Le Plongeon and others have recently made important discoveries the Mexicans have awakened to a lazy consciousness of valuable possessions. With a dog-in-the-manger spirit they have enacted rigorous laws against the exportation of relics, idols, etc., which would enrich the museums of the world, yet in which they themselves are not sufficiently interested to bring to light. There are innumerable ruined cities buried deep in the wilderness of Mexico and Central America which still await in silence the coming of the explorer; there are hundreds of deserted temples and crumbling pyramids which were built so far back in the twilight of time that no traditions remain of the builders. In Yucatan alone no less than sixty-seven prehistoric cities have been discovered, despite the fact that this wildest territory of Mexico presents almost insurmountable obstacles to the traveller in the way of warlike savages and trackless deserts whose hot sands outrival Sahara. Even the all-conquering Spaniards never succeeded in making much impression upon the Mayas of Yucatan, and to this day there are aboriginal tribes in the interior still flourishing as before the conquest, but so powerful and bloodthirsty are they that no European who has ventured within their domain has returned to tell the story. By the way, a modern Mexican historian has lately made a new attempt to prove that America was discovered in the fifth century A. D. by a party of Buddhist monks from Afghanistan, of whom one—Hwui Shan by name—returned to Asia after an absence of forty-one years. A short account of the land which he visited, supposed to be Mexico, was included in the official history of China. There is proof that Hwui Shan actually did visit some unknown eastern region; and it is also true that all the traditions of ancient Mexico contain an account of the arrival of some monks, who came from the westward in the days of the Toltecs—the people who preceded the Aztecs in this country.

Why Hilltops are Cold.

There is, by the way, writes Professor Proctor, a mistake very commonly made in regard to the cold at mountain heights which is not the sole property of paradoxical minds. You hear it stated, indeed, as a sufficient answer to the paradox about the air being the source of heat, that mountain tops are cold because the air is rare there, as if rare air were necessarily cold. In reality, cold prevails at mountain tops not because the air is rare, but because it has become rarified—which is a very different matter. When streams of air flow up the mountain slopes, as they must needs do if there is any horizontal movement carrying the air against the slopes, the air, as it rises into regions of diminished pressure, expands—in expanding it does work, and whenever work is done heat is lost. Any one who has opened a soda water bottle must have recognized an illustration of this. So soon as the cork flies out—I am supposing the soda water well "up," and that the cork flies out through the action of the imprisoned gases—a sensation of cold is felt all around the neck of the bottle, and the neck itself becomes perceptibly cold in the hand which grasps it. In reality the sun's heat is quite strongly felt at mountain tops—more strongly there than in the valley—though the coldness of the air may often hide the fact. One of the strangest sensations observed in mountain travelling is the contrast between the scorching effect of the sun's direct rays on the face and body and the cooling action of aerial breezes.

What Cloves Are.

Cloves are the unopened flowers of a small evergreen tree that resembles in appearance the laurel of the bay. It is a native of the Malacca or Spice Islands, but has been carried to all warmer parts of the world, and it is now cultivated in the tropical regions of America. The flowers are small in size and grow in large numbers, in clusters to the very end of the branches. The cloves we use are the flowers gathered before they are opened and whilst they are still green. After being gathered, they are smoked by a wood fire and then dried in the sun. Each clove consists of two parts of a round head, which are the four petals or leaves of the flower rolled upenclosing a number of small stalks or filaments; the other part of the cloves is terminated with four points, and is, in fact, the flower-cup of the unripe seed vessel. All these parts may be distinctly seen if a few cloves are soaked for a short time in hot water, when the leaves of the flower soften and readily unroll. Both the taste and the smell of cloves depend on the quantity of oil they contain. Sometimes the oil is separated from the cloves before they are sold, and the odor and taste in consequence much weakened by such unfair proceedings.

Popular Names in London.

The new edition of the London post-office directory consists of 2,672 pages, plus 322 pages of advertisements, and contains 244,000 names. On each page there are 10,000 letters, the number of letters in the "Commercial" alone making a total of 7,080,000, and the weight of the type used for the volume is about 25 tons. Here is a small but interesting table which shows the difficulties of arrangement. In the new directory there are 2,125 Smiths, 1,104 Joneses, 708 Browns and 467 Robinsons.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Physically the Czar of Russia is the strongest man in Europe. When he was Czarewich he one day took a gold rouble in his hands and by main strength twisted it into a corkscrew. Throwing the mutilated coin at the Prefect of Police he said: "If you open one of my letters in the future I will treat you as I have this coin." The incident was the outcome of an order on the part of the Czar that all letters should be opened by the police.

Letter received from Mr. M. Richardson, re Dr. Landerkin's statements. Too late for this issue, but will appear in our next. We have been obliged to leave over other interesting matter on account of the very crowded state of our columns.

No other spring medicine has won for itself such universal confidence as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the most powerful combination of vegetable alteratives ever offered to the public, and is acknowledged by the medical profession to be the best blood purifier.

VOTE FOR DR. JAMIESON.

A number of our citizens attended parliamentary nominations in Durham last Tuesday. There was an immense gathering. Dr. Jamieson and Dr. Landerkin were duly nominated, and on Tuesday next it will be for the electors of South Grey to say which of the gentlemen they prefer sending to represent them at Ottawa. Let them very seriously enquir—Reformer and Conservative alike—whether they can trust Dr. Landerkin again or not. In face of the terrible blunders he has committed, we honestly do not think he is to be trusted in matters political.

Mr. J. E. Moore advertised for a servant girl in THE ADVANCE last week and as a matter of fact was deluged with applications for the position. It only cost him 25 cents. Who says advertising does not pay?

Don't Bet With Him!

A certain gentleman is working a nice little scheme in order to entrap Conservative electors. He approaches his man, talks politics and finally induces the victim to make a bet, which, of course, invalidates his vote. This little racket is being worked for all it is worth in certain localities, and we take this opportunity to caution supporters of Dr. Jamieson against betting.

Red Riding Hood.

This charming operetta will be repeated in the Town Hall, Flesherton, by special request, to-morrow (Friday) evening. Doors open at 7:30, performance commences at 8 o'clock. Admission 10 cents. In addition to the operetta, Professor Morgan and Fairy will give a number of their choicest selections. Miss Christoe accompanist.

Suppression and Insincerity.

Our contemporary the Herald in a somewhat hysterical article asks "the honest elector" if he approves of members of Parliament abandoning their principles and suppressing their convictions. Of course he does not. But this is just what he sees Mr. Blake doing on the trade question. That member of Parliament is not only abandoning his own principles and suppressing his own convictions in order to prevail on protectionists to vote for him, but he is endeavoring with all his might to persuade other members of Parliament to do the same thing on both the trade question and the Riel question. If the Liberal platform were an honest expression of the principles, convictions and aspirations of the leading Liberals and the great majority of their supporters, it would be a very different one from what it is. So much is this the case that the whole Liberal platform from one end to the other may be considered a platform of suppression and insincerity.—Montreal Daily Star.

From our own Correspondent.

POLITICAL.—As already noticed in the ADVANCE, Dr. Landerkin was in here trying to show to the people that he was the man that they should send back to Ottawa to represent them in the Dominion Parliament. Mr. M Richardson showed most conclusively that he was not and that he had taken a very mistaken policy on several of the great questions of the day, more especially in condemning the Government for allowing the law to take its course in the Reil matter.

MATRIMONIAL.—Mr. E. Lomas has again after a short widowhood, entered the marriage state. His partner is Mrs. Cooper. The boys celebrated the joyous event by giving the new married couple a grand musical serenade.

DEATH.—The grim monster has again visited this place, his victim this time being Mr. Wm. Pritchard who had been ailing for some time past.

Little Red Riding Hood.

This charming operetta was rendered in the Town Hall here, last Friday evening, in a manner which reflected the highest upon the musical director, Prof. Morgan, and every boy and girl that took part in it. The choruses were given with a vim and realisticness which delighted the auditors and drew forth round after round of genuine and unstinted applause. As a musical director, Prof. Morgan is a brilliant success; and as a vocalist—taking age into consideration—Miss Fairy has probably no superior in this Province. The solo by little Richard Russell as "Butter Cup"—a child only five or six years of age—was simply wonderful and created an enthusiasm seldom observed on such occasions. Mr. Wm. Dinwoody made a capital wolf; and Master Wm. Bellamy, as Robin and Master Geo. Pickell as woodman did well considering everything. Miss Ella Gordon as Grandmamma was splendid, while Miss Frances Beecroft filled the role of Mamma to the general satisfaction of all present. Miss Lizzie Richardson made a charming "Rose." In fact every one of the school children who took part acquitted themselves most creditably, showing that Flesherton's juvenile musical talent is of no mean order. Fairy, as "Red Riding Hood," was a decided success in every particular, maintaining her well deserved reputation as the Queen of juvenile vocalists. The operetta lasted precisely one hour and gave unbounded satisfaction to the large audience assembled on the occasion—so much so, that it will be repeated, at the special request of many prominent townsmen, to-morrow evg.

Mr. Pickell's Letter.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Mr. Editor,—The question arises in my mind and no doubt will in the minds of many of the ratepayers of this Township, why has the old assessor been re-elected in preference to six other applicants. This would not seem strange were it not generally known that the assessment of this Township is in a most deplorable condition and shows beyond a doubt that the present assessor is a thoroughly incompetent officer. Should any one doubt this fact he has only to visit the clerks office and spend an hour looking over the roll and then if not convinced that what I say is correct, I will admit I am mistaken. In addition to this let us go back to the court of revision last spring when it was plain to all that the assessment was very unequal. After doing all that could be done on that day it was found necessary to have a special sitting in order to try and make some improvement upon the work of the assessor. This caused a great deal of unpleasantness, also the expense of an unnecessary session of Council which in due time will appear in the Auditors report and loss of time to parties summoned to attend as well as much ill will arising between members of Council and ratepayers by putting the assessor work upon the council. And even this special attempt to rectify the assessment was largely abortative by the determined stand the assessor took in opposition to the council.

Now at that time it was apparent that no two of that council were more determined to have a change and get the assessment of Artemesia in proper shape if they were again given the power than two of the assessor's present supporters—the third being a new man who probably did not give the matter due consideration.

Now it is only a short time since one of these men told myself that I ought to apply for that office and said to me "you could sit in your own house and make a better assessment than we have now."

I want it understood that I thoroughly respect and esteem our assessor as a man and a gentleman but after years of experience and ample opportunity for improvement it is evident that for this office he is an utter failure and a failure in a public officer in any department is a serious matter and in this particular instance it effects every ratepayer in the Township.

In conclusion I daresay some will say that because I was one of the rejected applicants I speak—this I utterly deny and say that my only reason for writing this letter is in view of all the facts which I have given that the proceedings are altogether incomprehensive to myself and doubtless will be to many others as surely some one of the remaining half dozen applicants was worthy a years trial at least and also that those who should be the guardians of the peoples interests continue in the face of past incompetancies to run this branch of the public service in the same inadequate manner.

Respectfully yours,
W. G. PICKELL.

Obituary.

BADGEROW.—At the residence of her son, Samuel Badgerow, Esq., Artemesia, Feb. 8th 1887, Keziah Badgerow, aged 89 years.

[Deceased was born in the state of New York, U. S., of Pennsylvania parents, on Oct. 19th, 1797. She lived there until her marriage with Mr. David Badgerow about the year 1817, when she removed to the state of Kentucky, where she resided about sixteen years. From there she came to Canada, to Markham Township, where she lived until about three years ago when she came to Artemesia and put in the remainder of her life peacefully and calmly with her esteemed and highly respected son, Samuel Badgerow, Esq., one of the leading yeomen of this section of Grey. She passed calmly away to the eternal world on the morning of the 8th inst., and on the evening of the following day her remains were consigned to their last resting place in the Flesherton cemetery, whither they were followed by a large concourse of relatives and friends. Deceased was a faithful and consistent member of the Baptist church from the age of 16 years until the day of her death.

Her family consisted of five sons and six daughters, of whom six are living. The four eldest were born in the state of Kentucky, the others in Markham Township, Ontario. The youngest son lives in Michigan, U. S., the rest are citizens of Canada. Our esteemed friend, Mr. Samuel Badgerow, Artemesia, was born in Kentucky. The husband of deceased (also deceased) served with distinction, under Capt. Culver, during the American war of 1812, and took part in the memorable battle of Queenston Heights. He received a pension from the American Government after his discharge, and this amount was sent regularly to his wife until her death.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Shadow Faces.

'Tis said that down the dimly-lighted aisle
Of some old world cathedral strangely borne,
On quivering wings that are unseen the while,
The ancient song of dedication morn
Still weirdly lingers in the stately pile.

So in the inmost chamber of my soul
The shadowy forms of radiant faces dwell,
Which, when the shades of darkness gain control,
Break through the slumbrous dream and them dispel.

The face of one I love—that perfect face—
So wondrous in its strength of purity;
Those eyes of blue, that gentle stately grace,
Which one might hope in angel forms to see;
O thou whose name too sacred is to voice,
Whose face thus lingers near a shadow star,
I watch thy gentle radiance from afar,
And make thine upward way my nobler choice.

And now, amid the shadow and the gloom,
My wayward fancy paints a tender face,
Whose soft brown eyes from out my soul would chase
Each other thought than those that are of home;
And o'er that gentle face there seems to play,
As from some world unseen, a holy light,
That out the deeper density of night
Would weave the glory of a Sabbath day.

O thou that wert the source of life in me,
More sweet and hallowed far than any other
Is thy pure life, and thus most reverently
I whisper low the sacred name of mother.

Again night wavers, morn eternal breaks
And out the shattered gloom a haloed head
Comes forth; the flesh that wraps my spirit quakes,
And I a captive heavenward am led.
The joyous chant of angels fills the air,
That in an early day spoke "peace on earth."
I see their faces radiant and rare,
I hear the story of a wondrous birth.

* * * * *

The sun is dead, the trembling stars die out;
A world rolls through the gloom a mighty hearse,
The solemn whisper that a God is dead
Low echoes through a startled universe.

* * * * *

Earth disappears, immortal music falls
Upon my ears from choiring throngs that come
Expectantly to welcome from afar
A mighty conqueror returning home.

* * * * *

O glorious vision of a wondrous life,
Thou hast my soul almost to heaven enticed;
I feel no wonder when the angels say,
The face is that of him that is the Christ.

O matchless face, my guiding star to be;
O face that now my guiding star hast been;
O haloed face, most wondrous of the three,
That bid me seek a brighter goal to win.
O shadow faces linger in my soul;
Stay with me through the wasting of the years,
And when death's solemn waters round me roll
Let fall thy gentle radiance on my fears.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

Now these are more or less principles of human nature. They may not be universally true, probably nothing is—that is, as we define and understand truth. But they apply to the majority of those cases which fall strictly within their limits. Among others they applied rather strikingly to Ernest Kershaw. Eva's desertion struck his belief in womanhood to the ground, and soon his religion lay in the dust beside it. Of this his life for some years after that gave considerable evidence. He took to evil ways, he forgot his better self. He raced horses, he went in with great success for love-affairs that he would have done better to leave alone. Sometimes, to his shame be it said, he drank—for the excitement of drinking, not for the love of it. In short, he gave himself and all his fund of energy up to any and every excitement and dissipation he could command, and he managed to command a good many. Travelling rapidly from place to place in South Africa he was well known and well liked in all. Now he was at Kimberley, now at King William's Town, now at Durban. In each of these places he kept race-horses; in each there was some fair woman's face that grew the brighter for his coming.

But Ernest's face did not grow the brighter; on the contrary, his eyes acquired a peculiar sadness which was almost pathetic in one so young. He could not forget. For a few days or a few months he might stifle thought, but it always re-arose. Eva, pale queen of women, was ever there to haunt his sleep, and, though in his waking hours he might curse her memory, when night drew the veil from truth the words he murmured were words of love eternal.

He no longer prayed, he no longer reverenced woman, but he was not the happier for having freed his soul from these burdens. He despised himself. Occasionally he would take stock of his mental condition, and at each stock-taking he would notice that he had receded, not progressed. He was growing coarser, his finer sense was being blunted; he was no longer the same Ernest who had written that queer letter to his betrothed before disaster overwhelmed him. Slowly and surely he was sinking. He knew it, but he did not try to save himself. Why should he? He had no object in life. But at times a great depression and weariness of existence would take possession of him. It has been said he never prayed; that is not strictly true. Once or twice he did throw himself upon his knees and pray with all his strength that he might die. He did more, he persistently courted death, and, as is usual in such cases, it persistently avoided him. About taking his own life he had scruples, or he perhaps would have taken it. In those dark days he hated life, and in his calmer and more reflective moments he loathed the pleasures and excitements by means of which he strove to make it palatable. His was a fine-strung mind, and, in spite of himself, he shuddered when it was set to play such coarse music.

During those years Ernest seemed to bear a charmed existence. There was a well-known thoroughbred horse in the Transvaal which had killed two men in rapid succession. Ernest bought it and rode it, and it never hurt him. Disturbances broke out in Sikukini's country, and one of the chief's strongholds was ordered to be stormed. Ernest rode down from Pretoria with Jeremy to see the fun, and, reaching the fort the day before the attack, got leave to join the storming party. Accordingly, next day at dawn they attacked in the teeth of a furious fusillade, and in time took the place, though with very heavy loss to themselves. Jeremy got his hat shot off with one bullet and his hand cut by another; Ernest, as usual, came off scatheless; the man next to him was killed, but he was not touched. After that he insisted upon going buffalo-shooting toward Delagoa Bay in the height of the fever-season, having got rid of Jeremy by getting him to go to New Scotland to see about a tract of land they had bought. He started with a dozen bearers and Mazooku. Six weeks later he, Mazooku, and three bearers returned—all the rest were dead of fever.

On another occasion, Alston, Jeremy, and himself were sent on a political mission to a hostile chief, whose stronghold lay in the heart of almost inaccessible mountains. The "indaba" (palaver) took all day, and was purposely prolonged in order to enable the intelligent native to set an ambush in the pass through which the white chiefs must go back, with strict instructions to murder all three of them. When they left the stronghold the moon was rising, and, as they neared the pass, up she came behind the mountains in all her splendor, flooding the wide valley on every stone and tree. On they rode steadily through the moonlight and the silence, little guessing how near death was to them. The weird beauty of the scene sank deep into Ernest's heart, and presently, when they came to a spot where a track ran out loopwise from the main pass, returning to it a couple of miles farther on, he half insisted on their taking it, because it passed over yet higher ground, and would give them a better view of the moon-bathed valley. Mr. Alston grumbled at "his nonsense" and complied, and meanwhile the party of murderers half a mile farther on played with their assegais, and wondered why they did not hear the sound of the white men's feet. But the white men had already passed along the higher path three quarters of a mile to their right. Ernest's love of moonlight effects had saved them all from a certain and perhaps from a lingering death.

It was shortly after this incident that Ernest and Jeremy were seated together on the veranda of the same house at Pretoria where they had been living before they went on the elephant-hunt, and which they had now purchased. Ernest had been in the garden watering a cucumber-plant he was trying to develop from a very sickly seedling. Even if he only stopped a month in a place he would start a little garden; it was a habit of his. Presently he came back to the veranda, where Jeremy was as usual watching the battle of the red and black ants, which after several years' encounter was not yet finally decided.

"Curse that cucumber-plant!" said Ernest emphatically, "it won't grow. I tell you what it is, Jeremy, I am sick of this place; I vote we go away."

"For goodness' sake, Ernest, let us have a little rest; you do rattle one about so in those confounded post-carts," replied Jeremy, yawning.

"I mean, go away from South Africa altogether."

"Oh," said Jeremy, dragging his great frame into an upright position, "the deuce you do! And where do you want to go to England?"

"England! no, I have had enough of England. South America, I think. But perhaps you want to go home. It is not fair to keep dragging you all over the world."

"My dear fellow, I like it, I assure you. I have no wish to return to Mr. Cardus' stool. For goodness' sake don't suggest such a thing; I should be wretched."

"Yes, but you ought to be doing something with your life. It is all very well for me, who am a poor devil of a waif and stray, to go on with this sort of existence, but I don't see why you should; you should be making your way in the world."

"Wait a bit, my hearty," said Jeremy, with his slow smile; "I am going to read you a statement of our financial affairs which I drew up last night. Considering that we have been doing nothing all this time except enjoy ourselves, and that all our investments have been made out of income, which no doubt your respected uncle fancies we have dissipated, I do not think that the total is so bad," and Jeremy read:

"Landed property in Natal and the Transvaal, estimated value	£2,500
This House	940
Stock—waggons, etc., say	300
Race-horses

I have left that blank."

"Put them at £800," said Ernest, after thinking. "You know I won £500 with 'Lady Mary' on the Cape Town plate last week."

Jeremy went on:

"Race-horses and winnings	£1,300
Sundries—cash, balance, etc	180
Total	£5,220

Now of this we have actually saved and invested about twenty-five hundred, the rest we have made or it has accumulated. Now, I ask you, where could we have done better than that as things go? So don't talk to me about wasting my time,"

"Bravo, Jeremy! My uncle was right, after all, you ought to have been a lawyer; you are first class at figures. I congratulate you on your management of the estates."

"My system is simple," answered Jeremy. "Whenever there is any money to spare I buy something with it, then you are not likely to spend it. Then, when I have things enough—waggons, oxen, horses, what not—I sell them and buy some land; that can't run away. If you only do that sort of thing long enough you will grow rich at last."

"Sweetly simple, certainly. Well, five thousand will go a long way toward stocking a farm or something in South America, or wherever we make up our minds to go, and then I don't think that we need draw on my uncle any more. It is hardly fair to drain him so. Old Alston will come with us, I think, and will put in another five thousand. He told me some time ago that he was getting tired of South Africa, with its Boers and blacks, in his old age, and had a fancy to make a start in some other place. I will write to him to-night. What hotel is he staying at in Maritzburg? the Royal, isn't it? And then I vote we clear in the spring."

"Right you are, my hearty."

"But I say, Jeremy, I really should advise you to think twice before you come. A fine upstanding young man like you should not waste his sweetness on the desert air of Mexico, or any such place. You should go home and be admired of the young women—they like a great big chap like you—and make a good marriage, and rear up a large family in a virtuous, respectable, and Jones-like fashion. I am a sort of wandering comet without the shine; but I repeat I see no reason why you should play tail to a second-class comet."

"Married! get married! I! No, thank you, my boy, look you, Ernest, in the words of the prophet, 'When a wise man openeth his eye and seeth a thing, verily he shutteth it not up again.' Now, I opened my eye and saw one or two things in the course of our joint little affair—Eva, you know."

Ernest winced at the name.

"I beg your pardon," said Jeremy, noticing it; "I don't want to allude to painful subjects, but I must to make my meaning clear. I was very hard hit, you know, over that lady, but I stopped in time, and, not having any imagination to speak of, did not give it rein. What is the consequence? I have got over it; sleep well at night, have a capital appetite, and don't think of her twice a week. But with you it is different. Hard hit, too, large amount of imagination galloping about loose, so to speak—rapturous joy, dreams of true love and perfect union of souls, which no doubt would be well enough if the woman could put in her whack of soul, which she can't, not having it to spare, but in a general way is gammon. Results, when the burst-up comes: Want of sleep, want of appetite, a desire to go buffalo-hunting in the fever-season, and to be potted by Basutus from behind rocks. In short, a general weariness and disgust of life—oh, yes, you needn't deny it, I have watched you—most unwholesome state of mind. Further results: Horse-racing, a disposition to stop away from church, and nip Cape Sherry; and, worst sign of all, a leaning to ladies' society. Being a reasoning creature, I notice this, and draw my own deductions, which amount to the conclusion that you are in a fair way to go to the deuce, owing to trusting your life to a woman. And the moral of all this, which I lay to heart for my own guidance, is, never speak to a woman if you can avoid it, and when you can't, let your speech be yea, yea and nay, nay. Then you stand a good chance of keeping your appetite and peace of mind, and of making your way in the world. Marriage indeed! never talk to me of marriage again," and Jeremy shivered at the thought.

Ernest laughed out loud at his lengthy disquisition.

"And I'll tell you what, old fellow," he went on, drawing himself up to his full height, and standing right over Ernest, so that the latter's six feet looked very insignificant beside him, "never you speak to me about leaving you again, unless you want to put me clean out of temper, because, look here, I don't like it. We have lived together since we were twelve or thereabout, and, so far as I am concerned, I mean to go on living together to the end of the chapter, or till I see I am not wanted. You can go to Mexico, or the North Pole, or Acapulto, or wherever you like, but I shall go too, and so that is all about it."

"Thank you, old fellow," said Ernest, simply; and at that moment their conversation was interrupted by the arrival of a Kafir messenger with a telegram addressed to Ernest. He opened it and read it. "Hullo," he said, "here is something better than Mexico; listen:

"'Alston, Pieter Maritzburg, to Kershaw, Pretoria. High Commissioner has declared war against Cetywayo. Local cavalry urgently required for service in Zululand. Have offered to raise small corps of about seventy mounted men. Offer has been accepted. Will you accept post of second in command? you would hold the Queen's commission. If so, set about picking suitable recruits: terms, ten shillings a day, all found. Am coming up Pretoria by this post-cart. Ask Jones if he will accept sergeant-majorship."

"Hurrah!" sang out Ernest with flashing eyes. "Here is some real service at last. Of course you will accept."

"Of course," said Jeremy, quietly; "but don't indulge in rejoicings yet; this is going to be a big business, unless I am mistaken."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

HANS PROPHESIES EVIL.

Ernest and Jeremy did not let the grass grow under their feet. They guessed that there soon would be a great deal of recruiting for various corps, and so set to work at once to secure the best men. The stamp of man they aimed at getting was the colonial-born Englishman, both because such men have more self-respect, independence of character, and "gumption," than the ordinary drifting sediment from the fields and seaports, and also because they were practically ready-made soldiers. They could ride as well as they could walk, they were splendid rifle-shots, and they had, too, from childhood, been trained in the art of travelling without baggage, and very rapidly. Ernest did not find much difficulty in the task. Mr. Alston was well known, and had seen a great deal of service as a young man in the Basutu wars, and stories were still told of his nerve and pluck. He was known, too, to be a wary man, not rash or over confident, but of a determined mind; and, what is more, to possess a perfect knowledge of Zulu warfare and tactics. This went a long way with intending recruits, for the first thing a would-be colonial volunteer inquires into is the character of his officers. He will not trust his life to men in whom he puts no reliance. He is willing to lose it in the way of duty, but he has a great objection to having it blundered away. Indeed, in many South African volunteer corps it is a fundamental principle that the officers should be elected by the men themselves. Once elected, however, they cannot be deposed except by competent authority.

Ernest, too, was by this time well known in the Transvaal, and universally believed in. Mr. Alston could not have chosen a better lieutenant. He was known to have pluck and dash, and to be ready-witted in emergency; but it was not that which made him acceptable to the individuals whose continued existence would very possibly depend upon his courage and discretion. Indeed, it would be difficult to say what it was: but there are some men who are by nature born leaders of their fellows, and who inspire confidence magnetically. Ernest had this great gift. At first sight he was much like any other young man, rather careless-looking than otherwise in appearance, and giving the observer the impression that he was thinking of something else; but old hands at native warfare, looking into his dark eyes, saw something there which told them that this young fellow, boy as he was, comparatively speaking, would not show himself wanting in the moment of emergency, either in courage or discretion. Jeremy's nomination, too, as sergeant-major, a very important post in such a corps, was popular enough. People had not forgotten his victory over the Boer giant, and besides, a sergeant-major with such a physique would have been a credit to any corps.

All these things helped to make recruiting an easy task, and when Alston and his son Roger, weary and bruised, stepped out of the Natal post-cart four days later, it was to be met by Ernest and Jeremy with the intelligence that his telegram had been received, the appointments accepted, and thirty-five men provisionally enrolled subject to his approval.

"My word, young gentleman," he said, highly pleased, "you are lieutenants worth having."

The Bee's Sting a Useful Tool.

From lengthened observations, Rev. W. F. Clarke, of Guelph, has come to the conclusion that the most important function of the bee's sting is not stinging, but its use by that wonderful creature as a tool. Mr. Clarke says he is convinced that the most important office of the bee's sting is that which is performed in doing the artistic cell work, capping the comb, and infusing the formic acid by means of which honey receives its keeping qualities. The sting is really a skilfully contrived little trowel, with which the bee finishes off and caps the cells when they are filled brimful of honey. This explains why honey extracted before it is capped over does not keep well. The formic acid has not been injected into it. This is done in the very act of putting the last touches on the cell work. As the little pliant trowel is worked to and fro with such dexterity, the darts, of which there are two, pierce the plastic cell surface, and leave the nectar beneath its tiny drops of the fluid which makes it keep well. This is the "art preservative" of honey. Herein we see, says Mr. Clarke, that the sting and the poison bag, with which so many of us would like to dispense, are essential to the storage of the luscious product, and that without them the beautiful comb honey of commerce would be a thing unknown. This is certainly a most wonderful provision of nature.—Iron.

A Specimen of Australian Reporting.

The following is a cutting from a Queensland paper: "Matthews started on foot, alone, to walk over the range to Thornborough, but, overcome with grief and whiskey, lay down on the banks of the Barron River to sleep. Now, the alligators of the Barron River are both numerous and ferocious. They assimilated Matthews, with the exception of one leg, which was recognized by the boot on it. This, after having been identified, was afforded Christian burial in the Cairns Cemetery, the funeral being largely attended. There it still reposes, while the balance of Matthews is wandering about the Barron River as an alligator."

The Pink of Propriety.

A 5-year old friend of ours, starting out for a children's party the other afternoon, remarks to the maid who is taking him to the place of entertainment:

"Well, I've made up my mind to be a perfect gentleman to-day; I don't mean to kick a single girl."—Harper's Bazar.

The Dacoits in Burmah are quick to catch an idea and ingenious in applying it. They chop down a tree, hollow it out, cut down several miles of telegraph poles, and wind the wire round the tree, and their cannon is finished.

A long line of Chicago horse cars was stopped the other day because some needles blocked the way. There were, however, a good many of them—6,183,000, weighing 2,500 pounds. The box which contained them was on a truck and for some time resisted the efforts of a dozen men with crowbars to move it. The needles had just arrived from the establishment of William Clarke & Sons, in Redditch, England, which was founded in 1679. It is said that 500,000,000 needles are annually imported to the United States, the Chicago agents of this single house handling more than a third of them.

AMAZONS OF THE HOUR.

How Some Girls in New York Develop the Biceps and Grow Beautiful.

There is near Central Park a gymnasium for girls. The young women wear blouses, short skirts and trousers, and go through all the performances that men do. Their proficiency becomes very great. One case will illustrate what a young woman can learn to do. A girl was promised a seal-skin sacque by an admirer if she would learn to turn a back somersault. She set diligently at it, and practiced until she was able to perform the feat. The gymnasium is liberally patronized and is in every way a success. A look inside of it is enough to convince anybody that there is "room" for the gymnasium. The hall is filled during the sessions. Some girls are swinging on the trapeze, others are climbing ropes, others are vaulting, turning cart-wheels and the like, and others are pounding sandbags to work up their muscles. The exercise often converts delicate girls into strong and healthy ones, it is claimed. Boxing has become almost a craze among the fashionable girls. One thing said in commendation of it is that it imparts self-possession and confidence. The idea is rather novel, but, after all, it is not unreasonable. Fencing has long been practiced by society girls, and ought to accomplish as much as boxing is improving their bearing. Nearly all, or at any rate a good share, of the belles play billiards, which are declared to be healthful and also to improve the judgment. The claims for the different things may seem rather absurd, but they nevertheless have many believers. There are dozens of riding schools, but they are not new like some of the other things. They are very popular, though.—New York Notes in Brooklyn Union.

The Measurement of the Year.

The length of the year is strictly 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 49 seconds, and seven-tenths of a second—the time required for the revolution of the earth round the sun. About 45 B. C., Julius Cæsar, by the help of Sosigines, an Alexandrian philosopher, came to a tolerably clear understanding of the length of a year, and decreed that every fourth year should be held to consist of 366 days for the purpose of absorbing the odd hours. By this rather clumsy arrangement the natural time fell behind the reckoning, as, in reality, a day every fourth year is too much by 11 minutes, 10 seconds, three-tenths of a second, so it inevitably followed that the beginning of the year moved onward ahead of the point at which it was in the days of Cæsar. From the time of the Council of Nice, in 325 A. D., when the vernal equinox fell correctly on the 21st of March, Pope Gregory found in 1582 A. D. that there had been an over-reckoning to the extent of ten days and that the vernal equinox fell on the 11th of March. To correct the past error he decreed that the 5th of October of that year should be reckoned as the 15th, and, to keep the year right in future—the overplus being 18 hours, 37 minutes and 10 seconds in a century—he ordered that every centennial year that could not be divided by four (1700, 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200) should not be bissextile, as it otherwise would be, thus, in short, dropping the extra day three times every four hundred years. While in Catholic countries the Gregorian style was readily adopted, it was not so in Protestant nations. In Britain it was not adopted until 1752, by which time the discrepancy between the Julian and Gregorian periods amounted to eleven days. An Act of Parliament was passed dictating that the 3rd of September of that year should be reckoned the 14th, and that three of every four centennial years should be leap years. The year 1800 not being a leap year, the new and old styles now differ twelve days, our 1st of January being equivalent to the 13th old style. In Russia alone of Christian countries is the old style retained. The old style is still retained in the treasury accounts of Great Britain. In old times the year was held to begin on the 25th of March, and this usage or piece of antiquity is also still observed in the computations of the Chancellor of the British Exchequer. So the first day of the financial year is the 5th of April, "Old Lady Day."

A Remarkable Family.

Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Nickerson, of Shag Harbor, N. S., aged respectively 87 and 83, live with their only son, Mr. Theodore Nickerson, and across the street directly opposite lives his only son, Mr. Charles Nickerson, who has an only son named Adelbert. This lad takes a meal daily with his grandfather and grandmother, great-grandfather and two great-grandmothers, as Mrs. Theodore Nickerson's mother is living with them, aged 84. As the six sit around the table their united ages are 377, and the lad is only 12 years. Only a few yards from their door is his great-great-uncle, Mr. Nehemiah Nickerson, aged 83 years, living with his only son, who has an only daughter, and only child.—Cape Sable Advertiser.

Just as Good.

"Must be pretty cold out your way," he observed to a farmer who had just come into market with his whiskers full of frost.

"Yes, tolerable."

"What did your thermometer register?"

"I hain't got none."

"I should think you would want to know how cold it was."

"No, I don't keer much. I kin allus tell by touching my tongue to the axe whether it's last summer or this winter."—Detroit Free Press.

The inhabitants of Baku, the centre of the great Russian petroleum fields, are much alarmed over a subterranean explosion which shook the houses and caused considerable damage. At the same time a volcano burst on Lakbatan, ten miles from Baku. For two nights the volcano threw a column of fire and mud 350 feet high, illuminating the country for miles. The mud emitted already lies from seven to fourteen feet deep over a square mile of territory.

$127 FOR A POUND OF COAL.

A Canadian Farmer's Adventure With New York Confidence Men.

A despatch from New York says: A tall countryman carrying a gripsack went into Chief Drummond's office, in the Post-office building, yesterday, and said that he had come here from Canada, and that he had been swindled by a young man from whom he had bought counterfeit money and who had palmed off on him a bag containing paper.

"I'm sorry he didn't give the counterfeits to you," Chief Drummond answered consolingly, "for then I might have locked you up for having them in your possession." At this the Canadian hurried away without even telling his name. It was learned later, however, that he is Henry C. Hill, whose home is near Stratford, Ontario, Canada. In summer he is a farmer, but sells jewellery in the winter. Not long ago he got the regulation letter from the "green goods" man offering to let him have some beautiful counterfeits for almost nothing. He answered it, and got a second letter directing him to come to this city and put up at the International Hotel. He came on the West Shore road. At the ferry a man dressed as a policeman asked him where he wanted to go, and when he said the International Hotel took him into a side street and pointed out a saloon, over which was a lodging house. Hill was met in the office by two men, who took from him the two letters, and put him in a cab, which took the whole party to another saloon. There Hill thought he saw one of them put $500 in greenbacks into a small hand satchel. When it was handed to him he gave the man $127.

"The best thing you can do," the "green goods" man said, "is to drive to the depot and get off for home, and don't open the bag until you get there."

They bundled Hill into the cab, which took him to the depot. There he opened the bag. In it were two old newspapers and about a pound of hard coal.

Pointers for Advertisers.

Don't expect an advertisement to bear fruit in one night. You can't eat enough in a week to last you a year, and you can't advertise on that plan either.

People who advertise only once in three months forget that most folks cannot remember anything longer than about seven days.

If you can arouse curiosity by an advertisement it is a great point gained. The fair sex don't hold all the curiosity in the world.

A NOVEL INDICATOR.

How Married Men Can Avoid Domestic Storms.

The latest genius who has applied for a patent is the man who has invented what is known as "the married man's indicator." It is a wonderful sensitive arrangement of the ordinary thermometer in convenient pocket size, and is graded to a scale of cabalistic marks which show the exact state of the domestic atmosphere at any hour of the night. The hard-worked and belated husband arrives home, say, about midnight. He takes out the indicator, thrusts it in the keyhole and lets it remain there a few seconds. Pulling it out quickly, he scans the dial by the moonlight's fitful gloaming. If it marks "S. A." (sound asleep) the poor husband pulls off his boots noiselessly, uses the night key with bated breath, gives the door a quick pull to keep it from creaking, steals trembling to bed, and when his dear wife wakes up about two seconds afterward and wants to know how long he has been home he is sound asleep. If the indicator scores "A., A. C., B. D. N. K. W. T." (awake, awful cross, but does not know what time it is), the husband puts a few more grains of coffee in his mouth, opens the door boldly and walks in with a slam-bang air, hits his boots intentionally against the chair, wants to know why the devil chairs don't keep out of the way, gets desperately mad on general principles, scares his wife clean out of her crossness and curtain lectures, refuses to let her get up and strike a match—never did like a light at night anyhow, remarks gruffly in response to a timid query that "it's about twenty minutes after 10," and then turns into bed with such an apparent awful state of mind that the wife of his bosom is afraid to speak to him, at which he is very sad, of course.

There are other marks on the indicator showing just where it will do to play the "lodge dodge," or the "sick friend," or "been standing on the corner talking to so and so for more than an hour," or "General or honorable this or that, from you know where, was in town, and had to go away in the 2 o'clock train, and he insisted so strongly that the whole party stayed up to see him off, although he was a great bore, and we only did it through courtesy." But the most awful of all cabalistic signs is the one on the top, about two marks above boiling point.

When the weary husband comes home about 4 a. m. from the direction of the butcher shop, with a roll of meat held high in the air, so that every one who passes cannot fail to see it, and sticks the indicator in the keyhole, he is almost too weak to draw it out. With hair on end he reads it by the faint light streaming in upon him from over the eastern hills, and sweat breaks out upon his noble brow in drops as large as walnuts as he sees the bulb of the indicator jammed smack up against "R. H. S. W. F. Y. I. T. D." (red hot, still waiting for you inside the door). The inventor of the instrument says that when a man has this terrible misfortune to overtake him he feels there is nothing left in life worth living for.

He slings the meat into the yard and braces himself for the coming fray, but says nothing, for nothing can be said. Be he ever so gifted a liar his accomplishment is more than valueless. No dodge, no sick friend, no talking on the corner, no sitting up to see the general off, no swearing that he will never do it again—in fact, nothing will prevail. It is an indefensible case.

He is caught. Even the ghastly gayety with which two hours previously he had said to the boys he guessed he would see it out—"might as well be killed for a sheep as a lamb"—had all vanished. The indicator having told him the exact state of things, he knows exactly what to do, and that is nothing but get in bed at once and wrap the drapery of his couch about him, pull the pillow over his ears and wait for his wife's breath to give out. It's awful while it lasts, but it has its use in relieving the unfortunate husband of his great load of anxiety. The indicator is a great invention.—London Exchange.

A YOUNG MONARCH'S 5,000 SLAVES.

The Host Which Guards the Harem of the Chinese Emperor.

I have been told that there are about 5,000 slaves in the Chinese Emperor's Palace, a figure which it is, of course, very difficult to control, says the Pekin correspondent of a Paris paper. The number, however, must be large, since that class of individuals is alone called upon to fill posts which everywhere else are usually given to men. Their business is to keep sharp watch over the Emperor's harem, an institution of no great service for the time being, since His Majesty is yet a minor, but in view of its becoming serviceable some day, and to pay meet homage to the rites of religion. The Empress selects the young beauties admitted into this Chinese seraglio, and she has to renew the personnel every three years. These young girls are recruited among the families of the Mandchou officers, who look upon the honor of having the prettiest of their daughters in the Imperial harem as a means of attaining high rank. These young ladies make their debut at the age of 14, and remain inside the harem until they are 25 years old. If in the interval they give birth to offspring they by rights become "daughters of the imperial blood," and remain bound with the fate of the child, for he may become a "son of heaven," and sovereign heir to 10,000 kingdoms. If, on the other hand, the young lady reaches the age of 25 without yielding increase to the imperial household, she is sent home to her illustrious parents, and honestly weds a mandarin of the place.

MADAME DE MONTHOLON, widow of the celebrated Count Charles Tristan de Montholon, who accompanied the first Napoleon to St. Helena, has just died at Bordeaux. She was 85 years old. Her husband helped Napoleon in most of his bold strokes of business, such as that of the Eighteenth Brumaire and the return from Elba. The Comte de Montholon also aided the late Emperor Louis Napoleon in his famous Boulogne escapade, and was imprisoned with him at Ham. M. de Montholon had received about $400,000 from the first Napoleon, who made him a Count and an Imperial Chamberlain after the battle of Wagram; but most of this sum was wasted in bad speculations after the Count had retired into private life.

THE IRON HAND.

How a Would-be Robber Found a Friend in His Intended Victim.

John Reamer, of the firm of Kern & Reamer, poultry dealers, is a strong, active, and wiry young man, whose right hand was amputated at the wrist, writes a Toledo correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. In place of the original member he carries a heavy iron hand, which stood him in good turn recently, preventing his robbery and probably murder, and, as the sequel shows, causing him to turn philanthropist under peculiar circumstances. There has been but a brief reference to the matter in the Toledo dailies, which have neglected an opportunity to give particulars of a very interesting case.

The night was dark as Mr. Reamer walked down Cherry street on his way to his home in West Toledo, with a considerable sum of money on his person. When he reached a lonely spot in the woods near the Metropolitan Park he was halted by a man who demanded his money or his life. Mr. Reamer instinctively dropped a small basket which he carried on his left arm, so as to make resistance, when the highwayman drew a knife and thrust it at him, grazing his body and passing it under the arm and partly through his intervening clothes. Mr. Reamer struck his assailant a terrific blow in the face with his iron hand, felling him to the ground, and followed this up by pounding his prostrate antagonist with all his might and main, until he finally groaned and cried for mercy. Presently he left the man leaning up against a fence, and with the remark, "I wasn't fixed for you this time, but next time I will be," started out on the road. But before he had gone far he felt the blood trickling down his left side, and the thought that after all he might be seriously if not fatally wounded so enraged him that he started back to further wreak his vengeance on the would-be-road agent. The latter saw him coming and, making a desperate effort, succeeded in getting away into the woods and disappearing in the darkness.

Some days after the encounter Mr Reamer chanced to hear through a physician about a man being very sick in the vicinity of Tremainsville. His suspicions being aroused, he went to see the man, and found him dangerously ill in a hovel. Two persons lay on a wretched couch—a man and wife—both very low, the attendant told him. As soon as the sick man saw Mr. Reamer he tried at first to hide his features from him by turning away, but his visitor thought he recognized the face of the patient, swollen, disfigured and black-and-blue as it was. The sick man, with great emotion, said: "I see you know me—I will have to confess." He then told Mr. Reamer how he had seen him display a roll of bills on the eventful night, and that he heard him tell someone that he could not get back from a certain place until late that night. He added: "My wife was sick, my children hungry, and I out of money, and I determined to take this chance of making a raise. How I have been punished, God knows. You certainly will not inform on me, will you?"

Mr. Reamer was deeply affected. Subsequent inquiries convinced him that the man was driven to the deed of desperation by poverty and sickness, and he decided to help him. From intended prosecutor he turned friend, and is now helping the miserable family daily.

A Progressive Donkey Party.

You cut a big silhouette of a tailless donkey out of cloth or paper and fasten it to the wall. Each of the guests receives a cambric tail and a pin, and is then blindfolded and placed in a corner opposite the donkey. After whirling around three times he starts out to pin the tail to the donkey. Wherever he strikes the wall, there he must pin the tail. The result generally is a still tailless donkey surrounded with a galaxy of tails and lots of fun.—Springfield Union.

A Royal Divorce Talked Of.

A London cable says: The actual presentation of the complaint for divorce of Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise against her husband, the Marquis of Lorne, has been stopped, for the time at least, through the personal efforts of the Queen. But the strain existing is so severe that it is believed that before long, despite the scandal it would create, application will be made for divorce.

A BISHOP IN HIS COFFIN.

After Lying Dead 700 Years, an Old Churchman's Body is Found.

An interesting account is given in some German papers of the discovery a little time ago, in the Cathedral of Worms, of the body of a mediæval bishop, who has been identified as Conrad de Sternberg, who died in 1154, being a contemporary of our Henry II., and of the great German Emperor, Frederick Barbarossa, says the London Times. During the progress of some restorations which are being carried out in the cathedral, a stone coffin was found deep under the floor of the choir. It was closely cemented, and on its being opened in the presence of a special commission the body was found in perfect preservation, and arrayed in vestments denoting episcopal rank. On the head is a low miter, the low border of which is formed by a band of thick gold embroidery, of a lozenge-shaped pattern; the fillets of the miter are composed of the same sort of work, with deep, heavy gold fringes. The peaks of the miter have their edges adorned by similar embroidery. The alb and amice are made of thin linen, very openly woven. The chasuble, of the old bell shape, is made of very thick twilled silk, and falls in long folds around the body, forming a sort of pad round the neck. In the usual way a richly embroidered band runs perpendicularly down the front; it has no special design. The edges of the chasuble are simply hemmed. The tunics under the chasuble are also of silk. The upper one is of lighter texture; it shows a pattern consisting of lozenges connected by rays. The under tunic shows a very fine interlacing pattern of geometrical design. The stole is worn crossed on the breast, the lower portions being broader than the upper. Its ornamentation is a pattern of scale-like design, which shows alternately figures of lions and birds set in a pattern of fine-traced leaves. The girdle is of silk, but only long, untwisted strands remain. The feet and legs up to the knees are covered with silk stockings, which seem to be of a fine network texture. Three broad parallel bands and as many smaller ones are wound round in spiral fashion and fasten them. The shoes, which comes up above the ankle and have two deep slits, are made of gold brocade; they are ornamented by circular embroideries, sewed on. The soles of the shoes are of leather. The pastoral staff lies in the arms, from the right shoulder to the left foot. It is of soft wood, ending with a ferule and spike; at top there is a spherical ball and hammered bronze, out of which issues a crook of soft wood, which ends in a bronze lily set in a socket. At the feet stands the chalice, also of soft wood, very finely turned; the cup is a hemisphere, and on it rests the patina.

WHAT WE WOULD DO.

A Chicago Canuck Exposes to a Terrified Nation Our Plan of Campaign.

What would Canadians do in case of war with the United States? Why, they would fight—fight as their ancestors fought—fight like devils! And what would they do to inaugurate the campaign—to give it tone, as it were? They would enter the field as if they had been prepared for such an event for the past twenty-five years. In twenty-four hours they would have the twenty-seven miles of Welland Canal completely guarded from one end to the other. In the neighborhood of that important public work would instantly be placed several field batteries, and ten thousand picked men from the forces in Ontario. Early the second day of the war a couple of batteries, after the destruction of the bridges at Niagara Falls, would turn their attention to poor, exposed Buffalo. Its big breweries and malt houses would topple over like nine pins under the accurate shelling of the Canuck gunners, who would also wipe the water with the shipping in the harbor, and even play havoc with the historic spot of ground upon which Col. John Finnerty stood watching the Fenians run in the raid of '66. About the time that the Toronto, Hamilton and Welland field batteries would be taking care of Buffalo and vicinity, the London and Guelph batteries and ten or fifteen thousand burly Scotch-Canadians from the counties of Oxford, Huron and Bruce would be opposite Detroit, razing that pretty city to the ground, shaking it up so badly that Brudder Gardiner would not be able to find a brick of the celebrated Lime-Kiln Club; all of which would vividly remind Detroiters of a certain warm incident of the war of 1812. With the Welland Canal open, a few Canadian gunboats would soon anchor off Cleveland and Toledo and bring to time, in short order, about 240,000 of those rampant Ohioans (not forgetting Petroleum V. Nasby), who now want to invade the Dominion. East of Toronto everything would favor the Canadians and not a foot of territory from Toronto to Halifax could be successfully attacked by the American forces. On the other hand Ogdensburg and Oswego would have to go down before the rattling fire of the Canucks; and thus it would go all along the line. Oh, the carnage and destruction of property would be frightful.—Canadian American.

Beyond the Court's Jurisdiction.

Judge Hall, of North Carolina, became terribly sea sick when going down the Chesapeake Bay on an excursion, the wind being fresh and the whitecaps tumultuous; so he spent most of his time leaning on the bulwarks.

"My dear Hall," said Chief Justice Waite, who was one of the party, and was himself quite comfortable, "can I do anything for you? Just suggest what you wish?"

"I wish," groaned the sea-sick man, "that your honor would over-rule this motion."

Under a new rule at the United States Penitentiary at McNeil's Island, Puget Sound, every convict brought there has the hair on the right side of his head shaved off. The other side is untouched.

A newspaper was received the other day at the Boston Post-office addressed "Mr. George H. Handel, care of the Handel and Haydn Society." Some thirty years ago there came to the society a letter addressed "Messrs. Handel and Haydn, musicians," and there was the same perplexity as to its disposition as there is now about the newspaper for Mr. Handel.

POLITICAL POINTERS.

Electors of South Grey! Remember that Tuesday next, Feb 22nd, is polling day. Let every voter in the riding go to the several polling booths and record their votes according to the honest dictates of their consciences. The ratepayers are the real legislators and will have only themselves to blame if incapables are sent to Ottawa to make laws. Vote for Dr. Jamieson and good Government.

Never in the history of this great and growing young country was it more important that every available vote should be polled than it is at the present juncture. The policy of Sir John Macdonald's Government has tended to develop the resources of Canada, foster home industries and promote the national weal. A reversal of that policy would be simply ruinous—blighting home industries and seriously retarding our growth from boyhood into a robust and sturdy national manhood. Don't be blinded by petty, unimportant side issues! Calmly and dispassionately examine the records of both parties and you will not be long in coming to the conclusion that Dr. Jamieson's platform will be most conductive to our national prosperity.

The political meeting at Eugenia, on Wednesday evening, of last week, lasted six hours. Dr. Landerkin completely lost his temper while Dr. Christoe and Mr. M. Richardson were speaking. The solid array of facts and incisive utterances presented by the latter gentlemen utterly floored the Reform candidate, and he flew into a terrible passion. Indeed it was at one time feared that he would resort to physical force. Fortunately he got cooled off before he fairly boiled over.

Mr. Allan, Mr. Coumee, and Sir Richard Cartwright addressed a political meeting in Chatsworth lately. The chairman was asked by Mr. Creasor if any person would be allowed to reply on behalf of Mr. Masson. He at first replied in the negative, then said half an hour would be allowed after Mr. Allen finished speaking! In fact it was determined that only one side of the questions at issue should be heard. The whole thing was cut and dried in order to suppress that terror to incapable politicians, D. Creighton, Esq., M.P.P. for North Grey.

The following deliberate falsehood was clipped from last week's Grey Review, and shows to what extent Dr. Landerkin and his friends will go during an election campaign:—"In last week's ADVANCE the tory candidate and his Flesherton friends announced a meeting in the Town Hall Flesherton, for Thursday and invited Dr. Landerkin, who made arrangements to be present. As soon as the tories found out that he would be with them that day, posters were issued for a mass meeting on Saturday when they knew that the Dr. has other arrangements for that day and thereby "Gerrymandering Flesherton." The meeting was postponed simply because one of the speakers invited could not attend on Thursday. Afraid to meet Dr. Landerkin! Pshaw! He has been fairly whipped out of his boots at every meeting held in Artemesia, and that, too, by our own local men. He will not care to come into this Township on an electioneering tour again in a hurry, considering the hot reception he got recently. Riellites are at a discount in Artemesia.

John Weber, David Graham, J. I. Graham and Wm. J. Shannon, of Meaford Road, are put forward, in the same issue of the Review, as vouchers to a statement said to have been made at Eugenia by Dr. Jamieson relative to the proposed Scott Act amendment. The "vouching" of the gentlemen—may safely be taken with a big chunk of salt. But supposing the yarn to be founded on fact, it is not what Dr. Jamieson or anybody else might have done that interests the electors so much as what Dr. Landerkin actually did do, viz., voted to destroy the usefulness of the Scott Act by adding the wine and beer clause. It will require a mighty amount of tortuous reasoning on the part of the Review to convince the electors that Dr. Landerkin's course was consistent with the principles he professes to be governed by.

One fact in connection with the above paragraph is significant. It is this: Why did not the Review's informant supply that journal with the names of a few Conservative "vouchers" who were present at the meeting in question? Another interesting fact remains to be noted, viz., that Mr. M. Richardson denies emphatically Dr. Landerkin and the Review's version of the affair.

The Review gives currency to another story, this time with four Neustadt names as vouchers. The whole thing looks so much like a clumsy canard that we do not imagine it will hurt our Temperance platform "one iota." The fact that our Durham cotem. gave currency to a falsehood concerning the mass meeting here, leads us to entertain very serious doubts as to the honesty and truthfulness of its other statements.

Electors will make a note of the fact, that—unless positively dragged into it—Dr. Landerkin has repeatedly avoided the slightest reference to the Riel question. The subject is not only distasteful to himself but to many of his friends and admirers, who would willingly bury the hateful thing out of sight forever. But Dr. Landerkin is a public man and it is right that the people, whose votes and influence he seeks, should know something of his record. He voted in the House of Commons last year, that it was wrong to hang the traitor and murderer, Louis Riel. It is as clear to us now as the noon day sun, that the whole disgraceful affair was a deliberate bait to catch the disaffected French Canadian vote. The Riel question is a popular cry in Quebec but quite the reverse in Ontario. Hence Dr. Landerkin is ashamed to stand up before the enlightened, loyal and patriotic electorate of South Grey and acknowledge how he misrepresented them in that and other important particulars, how he put a premium on treason and murder by his vote on the hanging of one of the blackest hearted scoundrels who has ever disgraced the annals of our beloved country. We much mistake the spirit of our fellow-electors in this riding if they do not defeat Dr. Landerkin by a large majority and elect Dr. Jamieson in his stead on the 22nd inst.

NORTH GREY.

Mr. James Masson is making a gallant fight in North Grey, and, from what we hear, will be elected by a good majority. His opponent, like Dr. Landerkin, voted that Riel should not have been hung; that he was insane, and a lot of other ranting nonsense. The electors of North Grey will leave Benjamin where he ought always to have been—at home!

SOUTH GREY.

In our own constituency the Reform candidate has been soundly whipped and floored on nearly every hustings throughout the entire campaign. South Grey doesn't want a representative who is afraid to give a full account of his stewardship, but fritters away his time quite boldly in discussing matters of the least possible importance. South Grey doesn't want a representative who, when opportunity presents itself, will, endeavor to destroy the balance of even-handed justice by condoning the acts of a traitor to his country and a shedder of innocent blood. No! we don't want such a man; and every loyal, patriotic elector in South Grey will, we confidently trust, arise in their might and by placing Dr. Jamieson at the head of the polls on Tuesday next, 22nd inst., administer a fitting rebuke to partizan, apron-stringed parliamentarians. Let every vote be polled! Friends of Dr. Jamieson, should get down to work in real earnest—only a few more days and the battle will be fought and won—by Dr. Jamieson.

Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood."

EAST GREY.

Of all the gentlemen who have ever sought the support of the electors of the banner riding of Grey, none deserved more hearty, enthusiastic or unstinted support at the hand of the electors than does our worthy friend, Dr. Sproule, at the present important epoch in the history of our country. A more faithful, a more hard-working, a more energetic or a more upright guardian of the people's best interests it would be impossible to find in this broad Dominion. Dr. Sproule is a gentleman of whom any constituency might be proud, and it is a fact worthy of note that there are many gentlemen in the Reform ranks even, who are ardent admirers and who will undoubtedly mark their ballots for him on the 22nd. inst. Under any circumstances, however, it is the duty of all loyal Conservatives to give the Doctor a united and hearty support.

MEETING AT EUGENIA!

Dr. Landerkin Utterly Floored by Messr. Christoe and Richardson. The Riel Question, &c.

From our own Correspondent.

Last Wednesday evening Dr. Landerkin held a political meeting at Eugenia, which was largely attended by the electors of the surrounding community. The Dr. spoke at considerable length—some 2½ hours. A free, voluble speaker he is; but when his speech was ended, for the life of one it was difficult to say what in the world he was driving at. One thing had been noticeable, viz., he gloried in his vote against the Government in the hanging of Louis Riel, the North-West rebel, murderer and usurper!—thus casting a contemptible, humiliating slur on the patriotism and loyalty of this constituency—a slur which was passed on into the pages of history, and will be repeated for all time to come.

Perhaps one might be accused of being dull of comprehension, but it really appeared like lots of thunder yet no rain. Truly it was a wonderful harangue, of ingenious, plausible policy, spiced with a plentiful supply of misleading sophistry as to what had been accomplished by his side of the house at Ottawa, Very little he appeared to advance as to what they intended to accomplish in the near future if put in power, except, perhaps, general intimations of their propositions to upset matters in a mixed and promiscuous way—similar to what they were some 10 years ago. He appeared to have no very clearly defined ideas, and it impressed us his conceptions of just what they did or did not intend to do for the better government of this great Dominion, in his or their purified estimation, was, to say the least, very vague and misty indeed. Of course the intelligent audience was not captured and carried away by Dr. Landerkin's really grotesque, picturesque, sophisticated and in some places explosive speech. There were a goodly number of Artemesia's sons there, who were not to be bluffed by even a member of parliament. They were watching the correctness and justness of the Dr's remarks in the light of the past record—of the work of the two great political parties at Ottawa. (It really augurs well for the welfare of our country, when we find numbers of local members of our communities taking an intense interest in the Government of the Dominion in which we live.) The Dr. emphatically depreacated partyism, yet he proved himself one of the strongest supporters of party present.

At the close of Dr. Landerkin's speech, Dr. Christoe was called to the platform in behalf of Dr. Jamieson. Dr. Christoe made direct advances at the great questions and issues of the recent past, the present, and future. Quite to be expected, he took a very different view of the subjects raised to that of Dr. Landerkin, who frequently sought to contradict and object to the Dr's statement, yet being generally founded on fact, as published by the government, concerning their past management, the Dr. was enabled to floor many inaccurate insinuations as to alleged mismanagement on the part of Sir John McDonald's government. After a lengthy review, and a breeze or two in which Dr. Landerkin took part, Dr. Christoe retired with applause.

Mr. Thorp Wright spoke in favor of Dr. Landerkin and the Opposition to National Policy, endeavoring to show that the farmers had suffered because of it in the markets, as to cattle, butter, cereals, &c. But most of those present could not see those things in the same light as Mr. Wright—perhaps not having had his business experience in these matters.

Mr. M. Richardson was called to the platform and at once entered into a very gentlemanly and intelligent consideration of the live questions at issue in this campaign. He graphically and forcibly exposed the position taken by Dr. Landerkin against the Government in the North-West rebellion and the hanging of the rebel and traitor, Louis Riel. Landerkin said the Gov't did wrong to hang him, but Richardson proved and maintained the Gov't did right, which sentiment was received with hearty applause. The speaker attacked boldly—face to face—Dr. Landerkin's position on other vital questions, and once so exasperated did Landerkin become, that he interrupted Mr. Richardson, with the announcement that he should not remain on the platform another moment if he persisted in thus expressing his views. (A voice—"Remember, Landerkin, you're in Artemesia now. Have a care what you say!") Mr. Richardson, like the man he is, went ahead all the same—unruffled, cool and collected, and maintained his views and the policy of the Gov't, in the light of the public records, as correct. Mr. Richardson's speech abounded in telling points. Mr. Gordon, of Flesherton, filled the chair in a patient and gentlemanly manner.

Snaring Rabbits.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir.—Information has come to me that parties in and around Flesherton are in the habit of snaring hares and that quite a trade has sprung up in exporting them to Toronto. As those who are guilty of breaking the law may be doing so unconciously. This is to notify them that snaring or in any way taking hares other than by shooting is illegal, and that a penalty of $20 in each case is the fine imposed by law for every snare trap or other device used for purpose. The Grey & Bruce Fish & Game P. Socy. are determined to see the law enforced and the undersigned will feel obliged for information of any infringment of the game laws. If I again receive information as to a further disregard of the law being shown I shall prosecute a couple of parties as an example. Yours Truly,

A Dialogue.

Good morning, John, how are you making it go this winter;

JOHN.—Well, to tell you the truth, Joe, I am feeling much better, but during the fall my lower lip was pretty long. I had $300 or $400 against me all told. My crops were short and funds low, and how to meet my payments was a conundrum. My wife and I had many a chat over the matter; so one night as we were talking over our affairs, Abigail made a suggestion. Says she, John go up to Flesherton and call on W. J. Bellamy; he lends money. So next morning I goes up and called at his office near the Town Hall, on Toronto street. After talking the matter over with him and telling my troubles, says he, I can get you out of that fix. How, says I. Well, says he, you have a good farm and I will lend you all the money you want at six and a half per cent. straight loan, and you can have your own terms to pay the principal. So I borrowed enough to let me out alright. I paid all my debts and am a happy man to-day, and Abigal says she hardly knows me.

JOE.—Do you think I can get any from him;

JOHN.—Yes, yes, all you want.

JOE.—Well, I shall see him on election day. I desire to consolidate my liabilities and owe only one, so I shall let you know how I get along.

BELLAMY.—Others may do likewise, as the North of Scotland has lots of money.

LOCAL SKETCHES.

To the Editor of the Advance.

THE ROYAL TEMPLARS.

This Society which is also among the foremost in Flesherton, is represented by Fountain Council No. 146, the success of which since its institution in October 1884 with 23 charter members has been so remarkable as to astonish the most sanguine and energetic of its members and is looked upon by the temperance people of Grey as the centre from which the most earnest and progressive work in the Temperance cause emanates. The progress of the Council at first was slow, and not until March 1886 when in conjunction with the other Councils of this county a District Council was formed, the first meeting being held in Kimberley when it was determined to take hold of the Temperance work and push it with vigor until it was an ultimate success.

From that period till the present time, Fountain Council has had a steady increase in membership which is at present 35, with several applications now to hand.

In its membership are many of the most earnest workers in this county, every week brings solicitations from the surrounding localities to the District Councillor (who is a member of this Council) to conduct Temperance meetings and which are always responded to with pleasure being always ably assisted by the membership.

The Society is one that commands the respect of all who have ever joined it.

From the time the candidate for admission steps over the threshold of the Council until he has received the final in the initiation he is so solemnly impressed with the earnestness of the work upon which he has entered that it can never be entirely effaced from his memory.

The business of the Council is conducted in a manner similar to that usual in every well regulated society and its business character tends to be of great service to the youth for instruction in thorough business habits. The Good of the Order is well sustained with entertainments which is calculated to improve and refine the minds of the members. The great principle of Total abstinence never being lost sight of, every exercise tending to the advancement morally and intellectually of all the members, such are the social features of this order. We now come to the Beneficiary Classes which consist of 1st the sick and funeral benefit fund which is open to all Royal Templars physically and sound upon the payment of a small entrance fee and the monthly payment of a sum fixed according to the age at date of application, as per the following graded scale :

From 16 to 35	25 cents.
From 35 to 40	30 cents.
From 40 to 44	35 cents.
From 44 to 48	40 cents.
From 48 to 52	45 cents.
From 52 to 55	50 cents.

For which they are secured in the amount of $5.00 per week for males and $3.00 per week for females for a period of not less than one week o more than twelve weeks continued sickness, also a funeral benefit at death of $50.00. Death benefits are also conferred on members in good standing :—An applicant for a death benefit must pass the medical examination and the ballot of the select Degree, paying the initiation fee imposed by the Degree where he seeks admission. If accepted he will be raised to the Select Degree, and receive his Certificate on payment of an assessment, according to age and amount as per the following table :

		for $500	$1000	$2000
Class A, from	16 to 25	$0 25	$0 50	$1 00
" B, "	25 to 30	0 28	0 55	1 10
" C, "	30 to 35	0 30	0 60	1 20
" D, "	35 to 40	0 34	0 67	1 35
" E, "	40 to 45	0 38	0 75	1 50
" F, "	45 to 50	0 43	0 85	1 70

An assessment of the same amount will be due and payable on the first of every subsequent month so long as the member remains in the society. In case of PERMANENT total disability for life, one half of the death benefit is advanced during life, and the remainder payable at death. Only one death occurred during the last six months.

The Knight Templar Degree which is also the Law and Order department which secures benefits to its members of a similar nature and equally liberal up to their sixtieth year. These advantages have proved a bulwark of strength to the order and have been the means of making glad the hearts of many widows and orphened children who would otherwise have been destitute.

Another department claims the attention of this order which although last mentioned is not by any means the least important and is devoted to "White Cross" Templary.

The name is a peculiarly happy one. The white of the pure Alpine snows, of the delicate lily, of the indestructible marble. The cross that embodies for us the truth that the whole movement is based on the perfect manhood of our Lord. Templary consistent with the title of our Order, and suggestive of the chivalry, which sent the sons of Christianity in discipline, strength, and organized force to fight and die for the holy sepulchure.

The White Cross Templar's vows are.

FOR CHRIST'S SAKE AND BY HIS HELP :

1. To treat all women with respect, and endeavor to protect them from wrong and degredation.
2. To endeavor to put down all indecent language and coarse jests.
3. To maintain the law of purity as equally binding upon men and women.
4. To endevor to spread these principles among my companions and to try and help my brothers.
5. To use every possible means to fulfil the command, 'Keep THYSELF pure.'

Such are the aims and objects of this noble order, we welcome all good and true men and women to our ranks, and likewise esteem all who are engaged in this noble work it matters not by what name they are called and the hope is that by united action the day is not far distant when the drink traffic will be driven from this fair Dominion.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The coming Elections are causing considerable excitement here and a very large vote will likely be polled on the 22nd.

Maggie A., daughter of Duncan Heron who died a short time ago. Although only a child, has been lingering with that fatal disease Consumption, and died on Monday last and her remains laid beside her father in the Methodist cemetery on Wednesday.

What might have proved a serious accident but was happily avoided, occurred on the people returning from the above funeral. A young man who thought he owned a very fast horse undertook to run him past some other teams, and in doing so the horse ran against Mrs. Robert Heron, knocking her down on the ice from which she received some bruises of a slight nature.

Mrs. Milne of Toronto, who has been laid up here with Inflamation of the Lungs, is now in a fair way of recovery.

Mr. F. Schimaman is laid up with a sore leg.

Two of what is said to be Dudes from Feversham, drove into our village one day last week and stopped at the hotel, where they found a few of the same species engaged with dice and bad whiskey and soon all hands became jovial. The horse was then brought into the hall of the hotel, and between Dudes, whiskey and horse, they enacted what they called a good time which may be imagined better than described.

A grand Temperance concert was given in the Methodist church here on Monday evening by the Royal Templars of Flesherton. The church was well filled and a very enjoyable evening spent. Quite a number have given in their names and a Council is to be organized in this place. The chair was very ably filled by Thos. Gamey, Esq. A bounteous spread was provided for the visitors at the residence of Johnson Little, Esq., to which ample justice was done. Prof. and Fairy Morgan added considerably to the interest of the proceedings by rendering a choice selection of their most popular songs. Messrs. Barnhouse and Russell and Miss Christoe also contributed materially to the evening's enjoyment.

my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

DASHED TO DEATH.

The Terrible Railway Holocaust in Vermont.

SIXTY PEOPLE BURNED TO DEATH.

Heartrending Incidents and Horrible Death Scenes.

A last Saturday night's White River Junction (Vt.) despatch says: At half-past 2 o'clock this morning the Montreal night express on the Vermont Central Railroad went through the bridge at Woodstock, some five miles north of here, and fell 70 feet into the White River, causing a terrible loss of life, the disaster being the most appalling that has occurred in the history of New England, and rivalling the famous disaster at Ashtabula, which it resembled in many respects. The train consisted of an engine, baggage, postal and smoker, two ordinary passenger coaches, and two Pullman sleepers, the "Pilgrim" and "St. Albans." The train, with the exception of the last Pullman, left Boston at 7 p. m., its usual time, arriving here at 12.30 a. m., when it was connected with the sleeper "St. Albans" from Springfield, containing passengers from New York and the West who had come to Springfield via the Boston & Albany, and the New York, New Haven & Hartford road. The Boston sleeper "Pilgrim" was full, as the night was cold, and those passengers who could afford it preferred a bed with covers to the chilly passenger cars. The Springfield sleeper was about three-quarters full, and the whole train contained some

NINETY TO ONE HUNDRED PASSENGERS.

In the passenger coaches were most of the local passengers, while in the sleepers were the through people for St. Albans and Montreal, most of the latter being en route for the coming ice carnival. The train reached here on time, but was delayed waiting for the Springfield car, and it was exactly 2.10 a. m. when it pulled out of the depot. It had to pass a freight at South Royalton, twenty miles north of here, and so ran ahead of schedule speed to make up for lost time. At what is known as Woodstock, an old abandoned station, the high bridge, a Howe deck structure some 200 feet long by 50 to 70 high, was reached, and here by some means the cars left the track while on the bridge. All that portion of the train behind the postal car plunged into the river, two cars breaking through the ice and being partially submerged. The forward part of the train passed over in safety. The forward coach left the rails first and dragged the others after it, the shock of striking the bare ties breaking the coupling between the postal and the coach. George Parker, a rear brakeman, was going from one Pullman to another, when he heard a great crash and the cars trembled. He jumped to the step, and giving a glance ahead saw the coach going down through the bridge. Without waiting he leaped off, striking the frozen snow and rolling 30 feet down an embankment. He was terribly bruised, for he says the train was going 40 miles an hour. One side of his face was badly torn and his right arm broken. When he got to his feet he says met his eyes. The cars all mixed up, some on their tops and others on their sides were lying on the ice, while a bright flame was leaping up from different parts of the wreck. The cries were terrible, but not minding them, and knowing that the engine could not recross the shattered bridge, he ran to a farm-house some rods removed from the bridge and kicking at the door awoke the owner, Thomas Pingree, and told of the accident. Pingree got him a team and, wounded as he was, Parker drove at breakneck speed through the dark all the way here and gave the alarm. The station agent found Dr. Ira Chase, of Bristol, at the Depot Hotel, and with a number of citizens with linen and brandy started in a box car for the scene. Before they had left the depot a bright light in the northern sky too plainly told the horrible scene that was being enacted at the fatal bridge. The relief party reached the scene one hour and fifteen minutes after the accident, and by that time the bridge was one mass of flames, and nothing was left of the cars but glowing frames and redhot iron braces Stretched out upon the ice were a number of

A FEARFUL SIGHT

BLACKENED, BLEEDING FIGURES, covered up with what could be snatched from the broken cars, and, assisted by some dozen country people, the trainmen were carrying the wounded to the house of Pingree and the postal car, which was being extemporized as a hospital. Your correspondent was one of the relief party, and can say that the sickening, terrible sights cannot be described. The wounded, most of whom were suffering from horrible burns, were writhing and twisting upon their beds, while shriek after shriek would be given out by what seemed but a bundle of half burned rags. Every few moments some tortured victim, while being assisted up the bank, would break away from the helpers and rush screaming, half-naked, across the frozen snow. One young woman, scarcely 18, who lives near Quebec, and who was said by a trainman to have entered the train wearing a magnificent fur robe to keep her warm, stood crying on the ice with nothing on but a pair of stockings and a chemise. She refused to budge when assistance was offered, and she had to be carried by force to Pingree's house. The smoking ruins of the burnt cars gave forth a sickening which made the small band of helpers ill and faint. It was a remarkable feature of the accident that not one of the passengers who went over the bridge escaped scot free. All were injured, and, to show how fast the flames spread, only those survive who were got out of the cars ten minutes after the first crash came. Most of the fortunate ones were taken from the sleepers, all those on the two forward cars, with few exceptions, having been killed outright at the outset by the heavy sleepers falling upon them and grinding them to pieces. The rescued number 30 all told, and deducting this from the low estimated number of 90 on the train, leaves 60 victims who met a dreadful death.

ODOR OF BURNT FLESH,

THE FATALLY WOUNDED

were: F. L. Wesson, of Springfield, son of the famous arms manufacturer; E. F. Dillon, of Dartmouth College; Henry Tewkesbury, of Randolph, Vermont, and Smith Sturtevant, the conductor, who was taken from a burning car half roasted. All these died soon after being taken from he wreck.

THOSE WHO SURVIVE

are: J. H. Cushing, of Middleboro', Mass, back injured; A L Abouef, of Lynn, Mass, legs broken; Miss Lovell, of Montreal, sister-in-law to Mr. Wesson, back injured and dangerously ill through nervous prostration; O. Boisvert, Angelina, Que., internally injured; L. Combremont, New York, hip and back bruised; Mitchel Lacaillaide, Lawrence, Mass., head, chest and back; Moses Paulet, Quebec, right leg broken and head wounded; Mrs. W. S. Bryden, Montreal, contusions on back; George Gennett, Syracuse, N. Y., head cut open and back wounded; Horace Juean, East Pepperell, Mass., face, back and legs bruised; Anna Murphy, 116 Prince street, Boston, right cheek badly cut open and back bruised; Mrs. Charles Kaster, Boston, contusion on back and limbs; Katy Kahl, Boston, severe scalp wound; J. C. Hutchinson, Montgomery, Vt., spinal column injured; Joseph E. Jacques, Fitchburg, Mass., contusion over the eyes, and hips and legs bruised; Henry Mott, a hay dealer from New York State; Andrew A. Wheeler, Fitchburg, Mass., cut over the eyes and face burned; Mrs. John Graham, Medford, Mass., ankle sprained and spinal column injured; James Kiley, Burke, N. Y., left arm fractured and head bruised; C. M. Hosmer, Lowell, Mass., legs and body bruised; Joseph Maignet, Three Rivers, Que., body wounds.

THE SLIGHTLY INJURED

are: George Parker, brakeman, St. Albans; Fred. A. Fisher and Howard F. Smith, Gloucester, Mass.; Miss Maria Sadler, Ormstown, Que.; Polly Aril, Chicopee, Mass.; Herbert Cushing, Middleboro', Mass.; Andrew A. Wheeler, Fitchburg, Mass.; Napoleon Rosseau, of Les Trappeurs Club, Montreal; Edward Bangs, brakeman, West Lebanon; S. S. Westcott, Burlington, Vt.; Cephas Mills, Iroquois, Ont.; Charles Kastner, Boston, contusions of back and limbs, and Lee, of Burlington, Vt.

PERISHED IN THE FLAMES.

Besides those who died it is known that the following perished in the flames: The two colored porters of the sleepers; W. E. Adams, of St. Albans, Vt.; Euclid Chagnon, of Manchester; Charles W. Sandford, Boston; Drummer Bousiequet, of Attawagan, Conn., with his sister, his wife Mary and two children; Conductor Burgess, of the sleeping car, and B. Atkinson, of Lowell, Mass. All the bodies recovered were burned beyond recognition, and it was past mid-day before they could be identified. So far what are supposed to be the remains of forty individuals have been brought here and laid out. The debris of the burned cars is full of pieces of bones and charred flesh, which is being carefully picked out and assorted. The two forward cars have broken through the ice, and it is supposed that some of those there were drowned and have been washed out by the water. If so, they may be carried down the Connecticut River under the ice and never recovered. The death of the man Bousiequet was PARTICULARLY SAD.

He had gone to the rear of the car to get a drink, when the crash came, and was separated from his family who, being in the forward part of the car, must have been killed instantly. He was pinned down by a seat, but managed to get his head through a window, when he shrieked at the top of his voice, "Mary, Mary," for fully five minutes. Mr. Lee, one of the survivors, tried to rescue him, but he only asked where his wife was. Before any answer could be given the fire reached him, and crying out "dead," he deliberately threw himself on the floor into the fire. Those who were able to speak from experience say that it was simply an inferno. Frank Winch, a New York drummer, who was on the postal and escaped, was seen en route for Boston this afternoon, and he says the only name given for the burning wreck was "Hell." During the day great crowds of people arrived on the scene, coming from all sections by trains and sleighs. They all were willing to help and many were put into service. All who were on the sleepers agreed that those in the upper berths perished by the beds closing up when the cars turned over and holding the occupants fast. Mr. Charles Hosmer, of Lowell, had his friend and travelling companion burned to death before his eyes by being in an upper berth. When the two entered the car at Lowell they tossed up for the berth and Mr. Hosmer won the lower one. Mr. Hosmer says that out of five ladies in his car only one escaped.

LOOKING FOR THE DEAD.

Early this afternoon Walter H. Wesson and his son, accompanied by Rev. Dr. Eustis and an undertaker, reached the scene looking for young Wesson's body. Miss Lovell insisted, ill as she was, in helping. They at length decided that a terribly disfigured mass of flesh, minus head or arms, was that of the unfortunate man and took it away. Miss Nancy Dunbar, of Somerville, is supposed to have been lost in the accident. She was in the sleeper. Her brother is looking for her remains. Ed. Brocklebank, a brakeman, is also among the dead. The accident and burning of the bridge have blocked all traffic, and trains have to be run around by the way of Well River. The ice on the White River is three feet thick, which prevented the rescuers getting water when the wreck took fire, and the flames had it all their own way. There is a great difference of opinion as to the cause of the disaster, many contending that it was a broken rail, and others that it was due to the iron framework of the bridge contracting by the intense cold, the temperature being some 20° below zero when the disaster occurred. A broken rail some little distance back from the bridge is given as the real cause of the train leaving the track, and it is supposed that the jarring of the wheels over the bridge ties started the under supports and caused them to give way.

Of those collected twenty-five are minus head or limbs, and it is almost impossible to distinguish the sexes. The company will open the baggage in the baggage car and learn, if possible, the names of those who were on the train. The wounded are being brought to this place as rapidly as possible, and are doing quite well. Some ten of those who are under physicians' hands are not expected to live. The railroad people are thankful that the accident did not occur to-night, which, being Saturday, the traffic would have been twice as heavy. The railway does not consider itself accountable for the disaster, but its officials are very uneasy over the probable magnitude of the damage suits growing out of the affair, especially as the financial affairs of the company are not the best just at present.

HORRIBLE INCIDENT OF THE WRECK.

One of the first passengers to escape from the burning wreck was Joseph Maignet, a French-Canadian boy. He was with his father, David Maignet, on their way from Holyoke to their home in Shawenegan, Quebec. The boy sat three seats behind his father in the third car from the rear. He was dozing in his seat when he felt the car shiver. This motion was kept up for a few seconds and then the car dashed over the bridge upon the ice. By hard work the boy succeeded in getting out of one of the windows. He at once went in search of his father, and discovered him by the light of the burning wreck just above him, pinned down by a part of the top of the car, which had fallen directly across his chest and legs. The old man was as firmly held as if in a vise. Joseph was the only one who escaped from the car, as he says.

HE RUSHED TO HIS FATHER'S ASSISTANCE,

and spoke words of encouragement to him. The father was very cool, and told his son to help him out as soon as possible. The boy seized his father, and struggled with all his strength to extricate him, but in vain. The flames were approaching rapidly. "Joseph," said the father, "run and get an axe or a saw," but the boy could not find either. "Pull me out then," said the father, "even if you have to break my legs to do it." Joseph tugged away with all his might, but could not stir his father an inch. With wonderful coolness the father then gave himself up to his fate. "It's no use, my boy," he said, "there is no hope for me. Remember the dying words of your father: Always be a good boy. Farewell, my son, I will meet you in the other world." The flames were then so close that the boy could remain no longer. He left his father and got out of reach of the flames, and watched his father slowly burn to death in the flaming debris.

MRS. BRYDEN'S ACCOUNT OF HER ESCAPE.

A Montreal despatch says Your correspondent has just seen Mrs. W. S. Bryden, wife of Mr. Bryden, of Pillow, Hersey & Co., of this city, who had a miraculous escape. She was in the last Pullman car near the front end. She was awakened from sleep by a crashing sound, and found herself pinned down and almost suffocated. She had presence of mind enough to husband her strength until she heard parties outside. She then freed one arm and by knocking with her hand, on which were her rings, she attracted attention from outsiders, who chopped a hole through the roof of the car. When they attempted to move her she found she was hemmed in, and with remarkable presence of mind she asked them for a penknife, with which she cut her clothes free from around her body and was pulled out. She was wrapped in a blanket and laid in the snow, whence she was removed three times to get her out of reach of the flames. She says the whole four cars were burned up inside of twenty minutes, and when she was rescued one end of the car she was in was already in flames. She was saturated with coal oil from a lamp that had burst. She was removed to a farm house.

PLACED AMONG DEAD AND DYING.

She says the scene was an indescribably pathetic one. A poor little boy, who could not speak a word of English, was alone, having lost both father and mother. Mrs. Bryden says most of the people seemed to be French Canadians coming to friends in this city. The whole thing happened so quickly that there was no time to do anything, although one old farmer living near did some heroic work. Mrs. Bryden herself seems to have but slight injuries to her back. The thermometer was at zero when she lay on the ice with nothing but a Pullman blanket around her, and she burrowed a hole in the snow and kept herself fairly comfortable. While Mrs. Bryden lay on the floor several persons died in the room, among whom was Mr. Wesson, of Smith & Wesson. Mrs. Bryden's pluck and presence of mind saved her life.

CONSUMED BEFORE HIS BROTHER'S EYES.

Mr. Mills arrived here to-day. He was travelling with his brother, who was in the next berth. After getting out he worked away frantically to rescue his brother, and was just getting him out when the flames rushed on him, and he had to retreat and gaze on the horrible picture of his brother being consumed under his eyes and within reach of his hands.

She Thinks Prayer Saved Her.

An Adrian (Mich.) despatch says: Mrs. Walter S. Mead, aged 29 years, has suffered two years with an abscess in her side, and for the past few weeks has been confined to her bed. On Sunday she was very low, and up to Monday night doubts were entertained whether she would live. Yesterday the physician found his patient dressed, sitting up and eating with fair relish. She said last night the Lord, in response to her prayers, healed and restored her strength. A reporter who called later found the woman firm in the faith that she was cured. Medical men are puzzled.

At Prof. Proctor's dancing academy in Washington, seven of the girls displeased several of the boys by occasionally refusing to dance with them. Thereupon a boycott was laid, and at the next meeting of the class the seven offending girls were horrified to find that not a single young fellow asked them to dance, and they sat the whole evening out without dancing and without partners.

THE France publishes some statistics relative to the number of Germans in Paris. It says there are 45,000 in the city, among whom there are between 9,000 and 10,000 belonging to the German army. The German colony there is, the France affirms, composed chiefly of young men. On the other hand, according to this journal, there are not more than 1,800 Frenchmen in the whole German empire.

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Two Trains Collide on a Trestle Eighty Feet High.

Mr. W. H. Wadland, cousin to Mr. Wadland, of the Bell Telephone Company, had a thrilling experience on the C. P. R., which he describes in a letter (dated at Schreiber, Algoma,) to a relative as follows:

DEAR BROTHER,—I write you this time to tell you of my wonderful escape yesterday morning. We had a terrible collision. Our train and another freight met on a trestle 300 feet long and 80 feet high, and we did not see each other until we were both on the trestle, as there is a sharp curve at each end. We were both running about 15 miles per hour. You cannot imagine our feelings when we saw ourselves running into the jaws of death, as we supposed; my first thought was to jump over the trestle, but knew that was as good as death; my mate went to jump too, but ran back in the cab again just as they struck, and he went head first against the boiler and the coal on the tender on top of him; something caught his coat and tore it nearly off his back and to-day he is going around with a swelled nose, sore side and bruised foot. The engineer and fireman on the other engine were both hurt, but not seriously. The fireman got his eye cut and some thing struck him on the back. The engineer was as black as any darkey you ever saw. The steam escaping on the coal flew all over him. He struck against the levers and hurt himself. You will want to know where I was all this time. Well, I got down on the step of the engine and held on to the hand rail and just as the crash came, it shook me off, and I fell right beside the driving wheels. One foot slipped between the timbers which kept me from falling off. The other engine was on top of ours. I could not tell or describe the scene. Big heavy irons were bent like wire; the smoke stack of ours is lying at the bottom of the trestle. Two cars went over our tender and down the trestle. I could hear them rolling over my head; one stood on end. Our old engine stood it better, but it was badly broken. On the other one the cab was knocked off and mounting broken which allowed so much steam to escape that you could not see your hand before you. The accident happened about eight miles west of Schreiber at a little after 9 a. m. The conductor and engineer of the other train are to blame. They had orders to keep clear of us, but came right along. I never got a scratch or hurt in the least, but I felt as sure that I was gone as I am writing at the present moment. Every person considers this the greatest collision that has happened and no person killed, not for the speed we were running but to happen on such a high trestle. This makes the sixth serious accident that I have passed through and only got hurt to amount to anything once and that was when the boiler bursted last winter. I was on engine 134, the one that run into us was 263; I have 262 now, will be glad when my own 282 is repaired again and get on the express again.

Some Singular Accidents.

Ebert, the 4-year-old son of Dr. Spicer, of Acton, Ind., swallowed a copper cent about two weeks ago, and is rapidly wasting away in spite of all that can be done for him, the physician having failed to give relief.

Little Willie, the son of an Omaha man, swallowed a silver dollar when he was 3 years old. The coin remained in his stomach for two years, but was finally extracted. The boy now has symptoms of blood-poisoning.

Freeman Arrington, of Augusta, Ga., attempted to fix the electric light in his billiard hall recently, when his hands came in contact with both carbons of the lamp and a strong current of electricity passed through his body. He will recover, but his tongue and throat are paralyzed and he is unable to utter a word.

A merchant of Florence, Ala., named Barber, was approached by a friend from the rear who threw his arm over Barber's neck, drawing his head downward and bringing his right eye in contact with a lead-pencil which his friend had in his pocket. The lead poisoned the optic nerve, the brain became affected and he died insane.

Changing a Farthing.

A little man, with the inappropriate name of Charles Gross, announced to the Police Magistrate yesterday that the case in which he was charged with having assaulted his wife had been amicably settled. His wife had gone off to Hamilton with another man—probably to see the carnival—and the charge against him had been withdrawn. Mr. Gross seemed quite happy at his relief from both charges at one and the same time, and was not envious of his successor in the affections of Mrs. Gross. A little inquiry, however, brought out the information that Mrs. Gross wore her title as matron by courtesy only, having never abandoned her own name as Mary Farthing while she remained with Gross. The companion of her flight to Hamilton, however, married her before leaving for the Ambitious City, and thus made change for a Farthing.—Toronto Mail.

Sugar in Court.

"Now, young lady, you may take the stand," said the lawyer in a case in one of the justices' courts the other day. "Yes, sir," she replied with a beaming smile. "That does me up!" whispered a man on one of the benches; "I'm her husband, and she's 49 years old, but the sugar on that lawyer's tongue will cost me $30 for millinery before the 1st of May."—Detroit Free Press.

HOW EYE DISEASES SPREAD.

Towels and Spectacles Help to Carry Contagion.

To mention a few of the modes of contagion I have to speak, in the first place, of towels, especially of that abominable institution known as the roller towel, which has been used so much in asylums, where forty, fifty or more children use the same towel, whether they have granular lids or not. True, in a great many of these cases the existence of granular lids was not known, but even in cases in which the existence of the disease was evident, the ignorance or carelessness of the persons in charge has allowed transmission by means of towels to be one of the most frequent sources of contagion. As a carrier of contagion the horse-fly plays an important role, especially in case of young children who are not able to protect themselves against the visits of this little animal. Attracted by the sweetish odor of the discharge, it will settle upon the eyes of children affected with the disease, especially infants, and carry the contagion in its claws to the other eye or the eyes of sleeping infants. Spectacles may be the carrier of the contagion. I remember the case of a young lady who could not explain satisfactorily how she came to have granular lids. Upon her return to school she mentioned that she had granular lids, where upon one of her classmates said: "Why that is the disease which I have been suffering form the last six months." This classmate was near-sighted and used glasses. My patient was also near-sighted, but had not used glasses, and whenever she wanted to see anything at a distance she was in the habit of borrowing the spectacles of her friend, and there is no doubt in my mind that this was the means of carrying the poison from the classmate's eye to my patient's eye.

Children with granular lids are very apt to rub the eyes, because the secretion, as it begins to dry on the edge of the lids, causes an irritating, itching sensation. They will now play with other children, and from their hands transfer the poison to the hands of the other children, and these latter, rubbing their eyes, contract the disease. Handling objects which have been used by persons with granular lids may be the means of carrying the contagion. A young lady who volunteered to teach children with granular lids that had been isolated from other children in a certain institution was warned to be extremely careful with regard to using handkerchiefs, towels, or anything belonging to the children. She was well aware of the danger and promised to be very careful. She handled nothing whatever, she said, that belonged to the children, left her cloaks outside, and in the class room kept away from the children a distance of five or six feet. But upon examination of her eyes 14 days after she had taken office, it was found that she began to suffer from granular lids. Upon inquiry I found that she had been taking the copybooks and slates of the children for correction, and in all probability she got the poison from the slates and books on her hands and then conveyed it to her eyes. A teacher of another section in the same institution was more careful; she simply walked into the class room, did not touch anything belonging to the children, and for two or three months during the duration of the epidemic she was not affected by the disease. The atmosphere had evidently not been the carrier of the contagion in the first case.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

NO MORE USE FOR HIM.

A Divorced Catholic Excommunicated in Louisville, Kentucky.

A Louisville, Ky., despatch says: The facts in a case which illustrates the rigid rules of the Catholic Church concerning divorced people have been made public here. Michael McCoy, a grocer of this city, has been excommunicated from St. Patrick's Catholic Church owing to his marriage with a Miss Emma Long after having secured a divorce from his wife. Miss Long lived next door to the McCoy family, and Michael became infatuated with her, so much so that he is accused by his neighbors of having mistreated his wife in order to compel her to secure a legal separation from him. On the night of his nuptials with Miss Long his neighbors and his former church associates surrounded the house and threatened him with violence until quelled by the police. In reading McCoy out of the church Father Lawler denounced him and the marriage, and declared that he would not tender the man his services though he were upon his dying bed. He also forbade any of the members of his church to speak to or in any way recognize McCoy.

WHAT ALEXANDER MAY BECOME.

Prince Alexander's Different Prospective Positions of Honor and Trust.

A London cable says: Owing to the friendly reception accorded to Prince Alexander, late of Bulgaria, while here, some of the continental papers contain the wildest rumors. One journal announces his impending appointment by the Queen as viceroy of Her Majesty's Provinces of the Oriental Indies, while another asserts that Prince Alexander is to be appointed Governor-General of Egypt by the English Government in the place of the Khedive, who is to be deposed. A well-known Moscow paper informs Russia that the Battenberg Prince will shortly become the husband of Queen Victoria, while several German papers predict his union with Her Majesty's widowed daughter-in-law, the Duchess of Albany. The real fact is that Prince Alexander has gone south for the benefit of his health, which has suffered both physically and mentally by the events of the last six months. He contemplates a visit to the United States in the autumn.

In clearing away behind the Temple of Hadrian, at Athens, the foundations of a temple to Pluto have been discovered in the rock of the Acropolis. Three natural caves have been found, and in them three fine sculptures. One is a statue of a draped man with a bare breast and long flowing hair. Another, about three feet long, consists of two reliefs, one compartment showing Pluto and his wife in Hades seated at table. The third piece is a fragment containing well-carved heads of the sacred deities.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Entire dresses of English crape are made for widows.

The tournure is neither greater nor less—it remains stationary.

Skirts are short for the street, demi-trained for evening and full trained for dinners and receptions.

The black-and-white striped silks are used for basques and demi-trained skirts, and make striking toilets. They are combined with black satin, velvet, jet or lace.

The shape of wrappings changes little and innovations would be difficult, since all shapes are being worn now, the sling sleeve being seen on most of them, whether long or short.

Pointed gimp above a band of astrakhan or of the long-waved Russian lamb skin is a fashionable trimming for cheviot dresses. White cheviot dresses are worn in the house.

The square-meshed Russian net, point d'esprit and tulle are now made up in mauve and heliotrope shades for those about laying aside mourning. Mauve and purple velvet dresses, with trimmings of black lace, are worn by older ladies.

Corsages are extremely varied, as well for day as for evening dresses. Corselets are much worn, the waist below the shoulders being plain and tight, and shirred on the front with soft puffings or folds over the bust; these, however, are best adapted to slim figures.

The fashion of low inner bodices, with the outer waist of transparent material, high in the neck and with half-easy sleeves, is returning and promises to be popular. This is worn at informal dinners and those occasions in the evening where decollete would seem more than the occasion required.

The fancy for wearing ribbons in the neck and sleeves instead of linen finds a prompt response in the shops where ruchings are shown on the edge of which is sewn narrow ribbons of all colors. The taste for colored ruching grows and it is shown in all shades, to contrast with or exactly match the costume.

The dresses get more and more voluminous, and these full skirts, unless draped by the hand of an experienced modiste, are apt to have a bunchy and awkward effect. Almost all the smart, short frocks, not only ball gowns, are fulled right around the waist, and when they are of very rich material the effect is beautiful.

A beautiful new plush is just out for carriage wraps that is exactly the shade of the blue fox fur which is so much worn this winter. Ruby and heliotrope plush are much worn and the blue fox looks very well on ruby. A very handsome and new little mantle, just imported from England, is made of heliotrope velvet, trimmed richly with gold and green Egyptian passementerie.

China crape without lustre is made up into handsome dinner dresses for ladies in mourning, which are trimmed with passementerie and pendants of dull jet, and if lace is admissible the point d'esprit is used with fine dots and feather-edges like those on ribbons, or else with scollops; entire dresses are made of the piece lace with these fine dots, which is preferred by many to the beaded nets.

For wear with black lace skirts are corsages of black velvet veiled by another corsage, almost high, which consists of a trellis of very narrow gold galloon. Sometimes this corsage covers only the shoulders and neck and the upper part of the arm, and terminates in pampilles which drape on the upper edge of the low corsage. Sometimes the network veiling the skin is of jet instead of gold.

Black lace dresses continue to fill their useful function in the toilet, being as they are at once elegant, capable of being worn on the most diverse occasions and suitable for all ages. Only for evening receptions they are a little sombre, and to remedy this defect the outlines of the lace are run with gold thread, which is charming in effect, very rich and yet quite in good taste. Black lace dresses are not worn over black only, but over an underdress of any color, ciel blue, old rose, tilleul green and red of all shades.

Useful Recipes.

Madelins.—Cream one cup of butter with one cup and three-quarters of sugar; add three eggs, two cups of sugar, one-half cup of corn starch, three teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, and one teaspoonful of extract of vanilla. Bake in patty pans in a quick oven.

Celery Croquettes.—Mince the white part of the celery and mix well with an equal quantity of bread crumbs; to a quart of the mixture add the yolks of two eggs, a heaping saltspoonful of salt and a pinch of cayenne; moisten with a little milk if the moisture from the celery is not sufficient. Shape in cones, dip in eggs and crumbs and fry in a liberal quantity of fat.

Snow Cake.—Three-fourths of a cup of butter, two cups of sugar, one cup of milk, one cup of corn starch, two cups of flour, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder; mix corn starch, flour and baking powder together; add the butter and sugar alternately with the milk; lastly add the whites of seven eggs; flavor to taste.

Marble Cake—For white part: One cup of butter, three cups of sugar, five cups of flour, one-half cup of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, whites of eight eggs; flavor with lemon. Dark part: One-half cup of butter, two cups of brown sugar, one cup of molasses, one cup of sour milk, four cups of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, yelks of eight eggs, one whole egg, spices of all kinds, put in a pan first a layer of dark, then a layer of light, and finish with a dark layer.

Rich Coffee Cake—Two cups of butter, three of sugar, one of molasses, one of very strong coffee, one of cream of rich milk, the yelks of eight eggs, one pound each of raisins and currants, one-half pound of citron, the same of figs, and five cups of brown flour after it is sifted. Put the flour in the oven until a rich brown, being careful not to burn it. When cold sift with it three tablespoonfuls of good baking powder and a little salt. Cut the figs in long strips, dredge all the fruit with flour, beat the cake well up, and bake in moderate oven from four to five hours.

Lemon Rice.—Pick and wash one cupful of rice, put it into a deep earthen dish; with one quart of water and a little salt cover tightly and place on the back of the range or stove, where it may gradually cook without danger of burning. If the water should be consumed before the rice is done, add enough to swell it out tender. Care has to be taken that the grains remain whole. When the rice has become tender put in a colander and pour cold water over it until the grains appear to separate; drain it well and replace in the dish. Then add white sugar to taste—it needs to be very sweet—the grated rind of one and the juice of two lemons, set back on the stove and let it simmer ten or twelve minutes; then pour it into a wet mould, and when cooled off put on ice until wanted. Turn out like a blanc mange.

A Hen Story From the East.

Last Christmas morning Mrs. Peter Boudreau, of Saulnierville, Digby County, went to the barn as usual and got a mess of oats which she gave to her fowls. Later in the forenoon she noticed very strange actions amongst them, and the rooster was stretched on the ground apparently dead. Mrs. B., to make the best of it, plucked him slick and clean, with the exception of a few tail and wing feathers and consigned his remains to the manure heap, feeling convinced that he had been poisoned. Towards noon to the great surprise of the whole family he was up again, strutting about as gay as ever, though deprived of his costly and necessary apparel. But our good lady, being equal to the emergency, took him in the house and fitted him with a fine suit of overalls, and at last accounts he was doing as well as could be expected under the distressing circumstances. Mrs. B., determined to find out the cause of this strange phenomenon, went to her oat-barrel and found that a bottle of liquor had been placed in the barrel and the liquor had leaked out in the grain which explained the whole mystery. The rooster was drunk, as many other bipeds in bigger communities were on Christmas day.

What Four Sparrows Can Do.

Two pairs of sparrows were watched by an observant naturalist feeding their young in their nests in only one half hour with the larvæ of the bluebottle fly from a dead cat. They fetched these in all 104 times, and one of the birds also caught 14 flies on the wing. Now the common house fly is computed to produce in one season, so prolific is its progeny after progeny, no less than 20,900,000, say, in round numbers, 21,000,000, and thus were prevented by these two pairs of birds no fewer than 280,000,000 by the capture of 14 flies and 2,800,000 by the destruction of the 104 larvæ. Again, there figured in the parish accounts of one parish in Gloucestershire a charge for 17 dozen of (so-called) tomtits heads; in another parish, Melbourne, in Derbyshire, a sparrow club destroyed in one year 4,577 small birds, and in yet another 3,500. Take the smaller of these two last numbers, and multiply it by the number of flies just calculated as prevented by the two pairs of sparrows, and it gives what we may very well call a grand total of 7,280,000,000,000.—London Times.

Trying to Get Her.

A telegraph operator in Milwaukee was one day trying to call up an office in a small town in the interior of the State, where the instrument was presided over by a woman.

He was about giving up in despair when the operator in another small town a few miles distant from the first ticked out the query:

"What in heaven's name do you want?"

"I want Miss Brown at Burgville," replied the Milwaukee man. "I have been trying to get her for the last half hour."

"That is nothing," came the reply. "There is a young fellow clerking in a dry-goods store there who has been trying to get her for the last three years and he has not succeeded yet. Do not get discouraged.'—The Rambler.

The Value of Crying.

A French physician contends that groaning and crying are two operations by which nature allays anguish, and that those patients who give way to their natural feelings more speedily recover than those who suppose it unworthy to betray such symptoms of feeling. He tells of a man who reduced his pulse from 126 to 60 in the course of a few hours by giving full vent to his emotion. If people are unhappy about anything let them go into their rooms and comfort themselves with a loud boo-hoo and they will feel 100 per cent better afterward.—American Homeopathic.

Sorry He spoke!

A gentleman went home a few evenings ago and casually remarked as he hung up his hat: "I see women are sold at actual value in Indianapolis. A wife was bought there this week for five cents." "Well, I know a woman, about the time I was married, who was sold for nothing," replied his wife. Then the man put on his hat and came down town.

PREPARING FOR THE FIELD.

The New Uniform for the French Infantry.

Gen. Boulanger, just now the idol of the French fire eaters, is making many changes in the French army designed to increase its effectiveness.

He proposes to change the dress of the soldier. For one thing, he has recommended the wearing of a beard—a full beard—close cropped. He has set the example by cultivating one upon his own chin and cheeks. Since Napoleon III. the Frenchman has worn a moustache and imperial in the fashion set by the late Emperor. But Gen. Boulanger knows the weakness of his fellow countrymen, which is their vanity. A Frenchman would prefer to go without his bath rather than to leave his moustache without being waxed till its two ends stuck out like steel pens. But this operation takes time, far too much time; so does the elaborate shaving and trimming around the moustache. Therefore, says Boulanger, let the soldier wear a full beard and save all this time.

The changes in uniform proposed by the Minister of War have been carefully looked into by a military board, and recommended. They were ordered to be submitted to the French Assembly for approval.

The recommendations were that the round jacket be abolished altogether, and the tunic serve for all occasions. The new tunic is large and loose, rendering movements and respiration easy. It will be roomy enough to permit a woolen waistcoat to be worn underneath. It has pockets interior and exterior. The belt is of black leather, as it has been heretofore.

The infantry are to wear epaulettes. Cartridges are to be carried in an outside pocket of the tunic, thus doing away with the cartridge box.

The Wheelbarrow Pedestrian.

James Gordon, the Dundee porter, who undertook to wheel a barrow from his native city to London and back in 60 days, reached the Royal Aquarium, London, on Nov. 29th, and thus completed the first half of his journey. He left Dundee on Nov. 2nd, and travelled along the Great Northern Road, taking care to let the course of his journey be known beforehand, which had the effect of bringing crowds into the streets of all the towns and villages through which he passed, and everywhere, he says, he was well greeted by the people. So far as the money result of the journey is concerned, Gordon does not seem to have been particularly fortunate. In walking through Scotland by Stirling, Falkirk, Edinburgh, Alnwick and Newcastle, to Darlington, he got on very well, was lodged and fed well, and gathered sufficient money to send his wife weekly remittances, but between Darlington and London he does not seem to have fared so well; though he anticipates that his engagement at the Aquarium and the sale of a pamphlet about his adventures may put in his pockets a good round sum. Questioned as to the manner of his reception he stated that men and women everywhere encouraged him to go on, but in Newcastle he was rather roughly treated. The streets through which he passed were densely crowded, and he was kicked accidentally, of course, several times, but a rotten egg or two were thrown at him, and that, he judged, could not have been accidental, but he bears no malice to the lusty men of Newcastle, and hopes upon his return that he will have a different greeting. In all the big towns of England he "got a good clearance, and the people were pleased to see me walk so clean. I was never in the least out of 'joint.'" From Darlington his route lay through York, Huntington, Royston, to Waltham Cross. In due time he had reached Dalton, and from that point through Bell's Pond, along Essex Road, by the Angel, over Pentonville Hill, through Euston, along Oxford street, and Regent street by Charing Cross. He was greeted with immense cheering by great crowds of people, many hundreds of whom followed him until he reached the Aquarium. The distance traversed he calculates was 507 miles, and besides that he went about 30 miles altogether out of his way by being misdirected in the villages through which he passed. He never began his work before half-past 8 in the morning, and always finished about 5 o'clock. He ate moderately during the day, and drank—no spirits, but at night, after the day's work was done, he confessed to having bathed his joints in "pure whiskey, and then taken a wee drap in the inside of me." People about the streets of London called out, "Well done, old Scotty," and "Bravo, old man." Sometimes in the villages the people shouted, "Here comes General Gordon," which he mentioned with very great pride. Gordon was introduced to a crowded house at the Aquarium soon after his arrival, and exhibited his light cart or wheelbarrow.

Gen. Middleton Wounded.

An Ottawa despatch says: Whilst a spirited contest was in progress last night at an exhibition of the fencing club, the foil of one of the competitors snapped and a bit of the steel flew across the room, grazing the chin of Major-General Fred Middleton in no gentle manner. The cut bled freely and a little excitement followed until the exact extent of the wound was learned and the bleeding stopped. Sir Frederick sat out the entertainment.

Not to Be Accounted For.

De Baggs—Bagley, I want to ask you a delicate question. What was my condition when we parted last night?

Bagley—You were largely loaded, my friend.

"Quite. Why do you ask?"

"Because my wife never mentioned it this morning. I thought perhaps I might have gone home sober by mistake."—Philadelphia Call.

THE fact has been satisfactorily established by various scientific researches that many substances absorb luminous rays during the day, and at night emit these rays in such a manner as to impress photographic plates, although they may not be perceptible to the unaided eye. Artists have not only succeeded in photographing the visible night phosphor essence of Mont Blanc's summit, but have even secured an impression of a midnight landscape—invisible to the eye—on the terrace of the observatory at Prague.

NEW USES FOR IRON AND STEEL

Suggestions Regarding the Making of Roadways and Pavements Out of Metal.

The production of iron and steel in Europe and the United States is now so large and the surplus stocks in the country are so heavy that there is urgent need for the invention of new uses to which these metals in their various forms may be applied, says the London Ironmonger. Every now and then we hear of some departure in the direction just indicated, but in a general way it is to be feared that the producers of iron and steel allow others to lead the way instead of doing so themselves. This ought not to be the case. Manufacturers should exercise their wits and devise new methods of using up the materials they turn out in such large quantities. In some instances this has been done with excellent results. Steel sleepers, for example, are excellent and economical substitutes for wood. Their manufacture has been most serviceable to the steel concerns during the late severe depression, and it is quite within the bounds of probability that they will entirely replace the wood sleepers at home as well as abroad. What has been done in that respect may very well be effected in others, particularly in the substitution of iron or steel for wood. Timber is gradually growing scarcer all over the world, owing to the recklessness with which North America and other parts of the world have been disafforested. Climatic and economic considerations will sooner or later put a stop to this wholesale destruction of trees, and timber will become scarcer and more valuable as a natural consequence. There are many purposes for which wood is used for which iron is equally well suited, and it should be the function of those interested in the metal to formulate the substitution and educate the public up to it. For building and structural purposes there appear to be many openings for the more extended use of iron and steel, especially for ornamental exteriors, while more could be done with the metal for roofing and similar uses. It might be possible also to substitute iron for stone in pavements and roadways, in which case the consumption would be enormous. Reliable paving-stones are high in price, and it might be worth while working out the comparative costs and durability, etc., of the two materials. Surveyors would no doubt make all sorts of objections on the point of slipperiness in frosty or wet weather, difficulty of repairs, rust, and so on; but by properly roughing the surface, and proceeding on the basis of slabs or pieces of moderate sizes, the objections might be met, always provided the first cost did not prove absolutely prohibitive. In the rolled or otherwise manufactured forms iron or steel would seem to be applicable to a much greater variety of uses than are on record at present. Both metals are capable of artistic or utilitarian treatment to any extent.

In a history of thimbles it is related that the cult of the thimble reached its height when, in 1586, a firm of rich Nurnberg tailors presented a magnificent silver drinking-vessel in the shape of a thimble to the tailors' guild of that town. Sometimes the top of the thimble was ornamented with a hollow lid filled with perfume.

An ingenious smuggling system has just been discovered in San Francisco. Opium, which the incoming Chinese steamers brought over, was arranged in metallic cases, and, as the steamer approached the coast, these were dropped overboard and immediately sunk. After the lapse of a few hours the cases would rise to the surface, and then could be picked up by small boats off the coast.

Frightful Ravages of Cholera.

Though the cholera has subsided at Buenos Ayres, it would seem to be making frightful havoc in the interior provinces of the River Plate country, though for some reason or other the cable has said little or nothing about it. The Buenos Ayres Standard of the 17th ult. has a column of despatches on the subject, of which the following is an example:

MENDOZA, Friday 17.—Half the houses of the city are vacant, the inmates having perished miserably or fled under the influence of the prevalent panic. So numerous are the cases, fresh and fatal, that even the most zealous activity on the Government cannot tender the necessary assistance, medical or otherwise, to the victims. The inhabitants of the suburban districts and environs have been decimated. Affrighted, the survivors fly over the plains, abandoning children and wives. Dead children, dead women, dead men, are found scattered over the plains and fields, overtaken in their flights by the terrible scourge. And the Government, the municipality, the very doctors are helpless.

"That may be, but she is small. Do you give her enough to eat?"

"That's it, Harry! We feed her on condensed milk. Of course she'd be small!"—Chicago Ledger.

DO BIRDS FLY DOWN?

The Way the Winged Creatures "Slide Down Hill" in Air.

I see in a back number of "St. Nicholas" that one of our young correspondents appeals partly to me in regard to birds flying down. But all who have written seem so well posted that I doubt if I can add anything to their knowledge. However, I have seen a California quail, a wood dove and a humming-bird flying downward; but in slow flyers, with large wings and heavy bodies, the wings are used more or less as parachutes in going down; in other words, the birds spread their wings and rely upon gravity. This I have noticed in the sand-hill cranes in their migrations along the Sierra Madres. A flock of say 100 will mount upward in a beautiful spiral flashing in the sunlight, all the while uttering loud, discordant notes, until they attain an altitude of nearly a mile above the sea level. Then they form in regular lines and soar away at an angle that in five miles or so will bring them within 1,000 feet of the earth. Then they will stop and begin the spiral upward movement again until a high elevation is reached, when away they go again sliding down hill in the air toward their winter home. It is very evident that a vast amount of muscular exertion is saved in this way. In some of these slides that I have watched through a glass birds would pass from three to four miles, I should judge, without flapping their wings.—"St. Nicholas" for February.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THE MASS MEETING!

LARGE GATHERING OF ELECTORS IN FLESHERTON.

The Town Hall, Flesherton, was filled to overflowing on Saturday afternoon last, by a most intelligent and enthusiastic gathering of Artemesia ratepayers and others. The presence of a fair representation of the fair sex elicited warm remarks of approval from the various speakers. S. Damude, Esq., was unanimously voted to the chair, and made a very neat and appropriate speech—short and to the point.

Mr. M. Richardson was the first gentleman to address the electors, and, upon taking his place on the platform, was received with great applause. He rapidly but clearly reviewed the condition of the country under the regime of Hon. Alex. Mackenzie. Then with a few masteriy touches of real oratory, the changed condition of the country under the beneficent influences of the National Policy was vividly presented to the electors amidst cheers and much applause. The policy of Mr. Mackenzie and the policy of Sir John, relative to the construction of our great national highway, the C.P.R. were contrasted in a most powerful and telling manner. The first was a half-hearted policy, while the second was decidedly the reverse, for under the latter the C.P.R. is an assured fact—stretching its iron bands from ocean to ocean and tending to unite the provinces of the Dominion in one grand and harmonious whole—developing the resources of the country and laying the foundation for a great and progressive nation. The Riel question was reviewed, from the events which led up to the first rebellion down to the time when Louis Riel, the black-hearted traitor and murderer expiated his crime on the scaffold at Regina. The attitude of the Reform press before and after the execution, the race and revenge cry and everything else in connection therewith were reviewed by a master hand, eliciting enthusiastic cheers and round after round of applause.

Owing to the absense of Dr. Landerkin in another part of the riding, Mr. Wm. Brown spoke in his behalf. He said the Riel question was a dead issue, but that the Tories persisted in entrenching themselves behind the dead body of that unfortunate lunatic. He was willing to discuss the question with Dr. Christoe at any time and place he might mention. He had stated this at the Priceville meeting.

Dr. Christoe.—I was not present when the statment was made.

Mr. Brown.—You challenged me to discuss the question and I accepted it.

Dr. Christoe.—I did not; but I'm ready to meet you any time you choose. (cheers)

Mr. Brown (continuing) defined the meaning of the word Tory, which, he said, signified "robbers," from the word Toree to rob. He said Tories well deserved the name, for they had been robbing the public treasury, when opportunity presented itself, from first to last. He then drifted into provincial politics, and referred to the alleged "Tory conspiracy" in 1884. From this he struck out on another tack, and, amid derisive cheers, referred to the Conservative party as the "Party of False Pretences." He spoke in kindly terms of Dr. Jamieson whom, he said, would no doubt support Mr. Blake in the House; but reminded the electors that it was the Government which was on trial before the public tribunal of this country, and care must be exercised to prevent gentlemen—however estimable as citizens—being sent to Ottawa to perpetuate a regime of extravagance and misappropriation of the public funds.

D. Creighton, Esq., M.P.P. for North Grey next addressed the electors. He was received with loud cheers. He expressed his surprise at the introduction of provincial politics on such an occasion as this and proceeded to dissect Mr. Brown's remarks in this direction in a most scathing and satisfactory manner. He soon proved that not one Conservative member in the Ontario Assembly was cognizant of the alleged attempt to bribe members of the Government. He next proceeded to discuss the live issues in the present election. The National Policy, the C.P.R., and other important matters were ably and impartially dealt with. Both sides of the questions under discusion were fairly presented and contrasted. The national debt was clearly shown, from the public records produced by speaker, to have increased much more under the Mackenzie regime than under the administration of Sir John Macdonald's Government. Mr. Brown made statements which he did not and could not prove from the public records. Every assertion made by himself (Mr. Creighton) was based upon facts gleaned from the blue books, and could not be gainsayed (cheers). The speaker then drew a most graphic and thrilling picture of the Riel rebellion; of the real originators of that rebellion; of the letters which passed between—not half-breeds, but white settlers on the banks of the Saskatchewan, and of which he read an extract from the blue book relating thereto; of the Frog lake massacre; of the dreadful murders and all the other terrible things in connection with that fearful drama in real life. Mr Creighton closed one of the most brilliant political speeches ever delivered here amidst loud and long continued applause.

Dr. Jamieson was received with much applause and enthusiasm, and created a most favorable impression by the liberal tone of his remarks, his gentlemanly treatment of opponents, and by his calm and pointed allusions to the public questions of the day. He is a fluent speaker, a pleasing speaker, and last but not least an honest speaker. Who could listen to his sturdy and manly utterances without being convinced that he is a politician to be trusted anywhere and everywhere—at home and abroad. He introduced his remarks in a most happy manner, and alluded to Mr. Brown in a humorous but gentlemanly style. He intended, he said, to have had another shot at Mr. Brown, but Mr. Creighton had so thoroughly demolished Mr. B. that there was scarcely enough of the latter left to shoot at (cheers and laughter, in which Mr. Brown heartly joined). He then proceeded to review the questions at issue which he did in a manner to convince all that he is composed of the material only found in broad-minded and honest legislators.

Dr. Christoe made a most energetic speech, meeting Mr. Brown's statements with an overwhelming array of facts, which were presented in a forcible and logical manner. Point followed point in rapid succession, each one being greeted with great applause and cheering. He would meet Mr. Brown or any other man on the public platform and discuse the Riel question. (applause). Those who knew him were cognizant of the fact that he was not the kind of man to shirk such a meeting. (cheers and a voice: "How does that suit you, Mr. Brown!")

Mr. John Lyons, of Markdale, delivered a short but rousing speech, confining his remarks chiefly to the important nature of the fisheries question, the belligerent attitude of the U. S senate and a portion of the press, and to the Riel question His remarks were greatly applauded.

Three rousing cheers each were given for the Queen, Dr. Jamieson, and D. Creighton, Esq. M.P.P. A hearty and unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to the chairman. Four-fifths of those at the meeting were in favor of Dr. Jamieson.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF—
SOUTH GREY!

GENTLEMEN.—In pursuance of the constitutional principle, that when there is any material extension of the Franchise, the House of Commons has been dissolved, and a new election will take place on Tuesday, 22nd February.

Having been chosen by the Liberal Conservative party as their Candidate, I beg to solicit your suffrages in the approaching contest.

If elected I shall give a fair support on all vital questions to the present Government, believing that it has shewn by its past record to be heartily in accord with the progressive spirit of the age, and that under its care the laws have been fairly and impartially administered, but on some questions I may be compelled to differ with it.

I shall favor the repeal of the present Franchise Act, and the substitution for it of Manhood Suffrage.

I believe there should be some radical change made in the constitution and functions of the Senate, or if this be not practicable, then I should favor its abolition entirely.

The present fiscal system which gives protection to our manufacturies has shewn itself to be successful and should be continued.

The depression existing in our agricultural interestsand the small returns received by farmers from their investments and labor should engage the earnest and careful attention of our Legislators. Believing that the high rate of interest at which farmers are compelled to borrow money, causes a constant and large flow of their hard earnings to the capitalists of the old country, I think the Government should assume the control of the currency of the country, and that the necessary legislation should be passed to favor the establishment of Farmer's Banks, and the supply of cheap money to the agricultural classes.

Now that all the great public works rendered necessary by Confederation have been completed, I think the time has come to exercise the most rigid, careful and economical control of our expenditure, and to endeavor to carry out the affairs of the country without further increasing the public debt. Hoping my views will meet with your approbation and that you will favor me with your support and earnest co-operation. I am, gentlemen,

Your Obt. Servant,
DAVID JAMIESON.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The Old Quebec Daily Mercury comes to us in an enlarged and improved form thus giving evidence of renewed vitality in the hands of Mr. W. J. Maguire its youthful Editor and publisher.

Everybody needs a spring medicine. By using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the blood is thoroughly cleansed and invigorated, the appetite stimulated, and the system prepared to resist the diseases peculiar to the summer months. Ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take no other.

"Squire Squib."

This charming little story, from the facile pen of our genial and talented friend, "Deacon Smikes," will appear in our next week's issue. "Squire Squib" is the Deacon's latest and, we believe it is his best contribution. It has been especially prepared for the columns of THE ADVANCE.

The circulation of THE ADVANCE is going up. Two quires extra were ordered (by telegraph) to commence this week. Support your home paper, because it supports your home industries and tends to promote the best interests of the locality in which it is published as well as the surrounding districts generally.

We should like very much to see a mechanics institute started in Flesherton. A large stock of excellent works has been forwarded to us by a Woodstock publishing house for inspection; and from the generous offer made by the publisher, a splendid library could be established here with a trifling outlay of capital. The works are to be left with us for a short time when they will be returned. "Strike while the iron is hot," gentlemen.

There is a growing demand for a larger public hall in this town than we now possess. In fat Flesherton is growing to be a big healthy boy and is inclined to wear long pants. The place has outgrown the aciltics afforded by our rather antiquated Town Hall for entertainments an such like. Even on Division Court days its seating capacity is often overtaxed. What we want, therefore, is either our Town Hall enlarged and modernized tomit the times, or an entirely new structure erected on the latest and most aproved architectural plans that can be prepared to suit our altered circumstanes. Which shall it be?

This beautiful opretta was performed in the Town Ha, here, last Friday evening. The children went through their parts well—even better than the first time. The parts of Blue Bells, Rose, Butter Cup, Grandmamma, and the Wolf were encord and responded to in a very pleasing manner. The Flesherton Band was in ttendance and enlivened the proceedgs by giving some very beautiful airs. After the cantata, Prof. and Fairy Mogan gave some excellant selections, wich were very much appreciated by th audience. Miss Christoe presided at the organ with her usual grace and digty. Notwithstanding the rough weath the hall was well filled.

District Deputy Grand Master.

At the meeting of the Grand Lodge of A.O.U.W., held in the city hall, Toronto, last week, our popular townsman, S. Damude, Esq., was appointed District Deputy Grand Master of Dufferin District, which comprises the Counties of Grey, Bruce and Dufferin. Bro. Damude well deserves the distingnished honor conferred upon him by our brethren of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. The Grand Lodge could not possibly have made a better selection in the counties named. He will fill the position with credit to all concerned.

Our Old Dog Tax.

Some years ago there was a tax of $1 levied on all the do[illegible] in Flesherton. The assessor called on our well-known boot and shoe dealer, Mr. Wm. Clayton, and after going through the usual routine of questions, asked Mr. C. if he possessed a dog. Mr. C. of course replied that he did, whereupon the tax of $1 was duly imposed and paid without a murmur. Some time afterwards, Mr. Clayton discovered to his astonishment that he was the only man in the village who contributed to the dog tax fund—although it was well known that there were some thirty or forty canines in the village at the time! It seemed that when the assessor made his visit, all the dogs, except Mr. Clayton's, were away visiting "their sisters and their cousins and their aunts," or had changed hands and were owned by parties whose names where not on the assessment roll. Mr. C. very naturally tried to get back his dollar but it had been irretrievably incorporated with the Township funds.

There seems to be something lacking in the municipal machinery, for it is a well known fact that many of our Township by-laws are mere dead letters, or, at best, very seldom put in operation—something like the dog tax we have alluded to, in fact. By the way, has this dog tax ever been repealed? We should like to know for we possess a dog ourself, and—if the by-law is to be enforced this year—we would like to be cognizant of the fact before the assessor comes around.

Lines in Memory of Mrs. Alexander McIntyre who died 1st December, 1886.

Oh! mother, dearest, kindest, best,
Thou art gone to thy peaceful rest,
Into the mansions of the Blest;
But we are left alone
Thou'rt free from every care and pain:
How can we wish thee back again?
And yet 'tis with heart-breaking pain
We say, "God's will be done!"

In early infancy thy hand
Led us along the toilsome strand,
For 'twas God's will that thou shouldst stand
A widow, sad, and lone.
God called from us a father dear,
But did not leave us without cheer,
But day by day, through our life here,
Helped thee to lead us on.

When we were troubled sore, and tried,
Where could we go, as to thy side?
Thou sweetly gav'st, and ne'er denied,
Thy loving sympathy.
Or, if o'erjoyed by some success,
What lips like thine could praise and bless?
With reverential tenderness,
Thank God so fervently?

When other friends could fick'le prove,
No child could sin against thy love—
E'en as our changeless Friend above—
Thou wert the same true friend.
E'en should the outside world entire
Allow its friendship to expire,
Thy care, thy love, could never tire:
Thou lovedst us to the end.

We could lose a sister, friend, or brother,
And sadly grieve; but, oh! dear mother,
No brother, sister, friend, or other,
Can take thy sacred place.
In thee we've lost our stay, our guide,
Our comfort, joy, and all beside.
God help us all to reach thy side,
And see again thy face!

And now, as through the world we roam,
Fatherless, motherless, sad and alone,
We ne'er can return to the same beloved home,
For thou canst not greet us.
But rememb'ring thy words, ere death closed thy eyes,
We'll press upward, 'midst smiles, and 'midst sighs,
Until beyond those fair blue skies,
Thou there shalt meet us.

And bid us welcome home again
In heaven, where we shall know no pain;
Where we shall know thy present gain,
And never more repine;
But round the bright and glorious throne.—
With father and mother, each daughter and son—
We shall no more feel sad and lone
In fellowship divine.

BY MARY MCINTYRE.

SIR JOHN SUSTAINED

A Sweeping Majority in Face of Tremendous Opposition.

Conservative Majority, 45!

The greatest political struggle ever witnessed in Canada is over, and both parties have breathing time enough to count their respective gains and losses. Notwithstanding the "race and revenge" cry in Quebec; the wild secession cry in the maritime provinces; the borrowing of Government planks re the N. P.; the misrepresentation in connection with the national debt, and a thousand and one grossly exaggerated petty side issues, the people of Canada have arisen in their might and extended the warm right hand of power and fellowship to our truly great and grand old man, Sir John A. Macdonald, saying, in effect, "We believe your policy is conducive to the progress and growth of this young but sturdy and healthy nation; we have no faith in the no-policy (except stolen N. P. planks and "race and revenge cry") statesman, Hon. E. Blake."

And so the battle has been fought and won by the Conservative Government by the splendid majority of 45.

NOTES.

M. C. Cameron, a prominent Reformer, was badly beaten in West Huron by Mr. Porter, Conservative. Mr. Fleming (Reformer) was completely "snowed under" in Peel, by Mr. McCulla, Conservative, which was certainly the greatest victory in the whole contest.

Mr. Hector Cameron, Reformer, was beaten in West Middlesex, by Mr. Roome.

Ex-Speaker Wells (Reformer) was defeated in East Bruce by Mr. Cargill.

Mr. James Masson, Conservative, signally defeated Mr. Allen (Riellite) in North Grey.

Mr. Robt. Gilray, the Toronto lawyer, got badly left in East Grey by Dr. Sproule.

Dr. Sproule's majority in East Grey is given at 600.

Toronto returned three Conservatives, Hamilton two, Kingston one, London one, Ottawa two, Montreal three.

The Globe says Sir John has "apparently three majority!!!" Of course the Globe is very truthful paper! It is edited by one "Deacon" Cameron.

Dr. Landerkin (Riellite) has been reelected in South Grey, although Artemesia rolled up the magnificent majority of one hundred and forty-nine for his opponent, Dr. Jamieson.

SOUTH GREY ELECTION.

THE VOTE IN ARTEMESIA.

Our Township did right nobly by showing her disapproval of the unstatesmenlike tactics of that extreme party man and Riellite, Dr. Landerkin, M. P., to the tune of 149. The rest of the riding of South Grey, however, counterbalanced our efforts by electing the Riellite by a majority variously estimated at 80, 95, 120, and 135. In 1882 Artemesia gave Geo. Jackson, Esq. a majority of 114, while in the late contest she gave Dr. Jamieson 149—a clear gain of thirty-five. Had the other Townships in the riding been equally as loyal to the cause of good government Landerkin would have been "snowed under" beyond the shadow of a doubt. Below we give Jamieson's and Landerkin's majorities in Artemesia.—The complete returns for riding will be published next week.

The Destiny Maker.

She came, and I who linger'd there,
I saw that she was very fair;
And, with my sighs that pride suppress'd,
There rose a trembling wish for rest.
But I, who had resolv'd to be
The maker of my destiny,
I turn'd me to my task and wrought,
And so forgot the passing thought.

She paused; and I who question'd there,
I heard she was as good as fair;
And in my soul a still, small voice
Enjoin'd me not to check my choice.
But I, who had resolv'd to be
The maker of my destiny,
I bade the gentle guardian down
And tried to think about renown.

She left; and I who wander fear
There's nothing more to see or hear;
Those walls that ward my paradise
Are very high, nor open twice.
And I, who had resolv'd to be
The maker of my destiny,
Can only wait without the gate
And sit and sigh: "Too late! too late!"

The Tired Mother.

Oh, who can tell the troubles,
The trials and the cares,
The heavy daily burden
That the patient mother wears?

In cooking, washing, sweeping, dusting,
All her days are spent;
No wonder that before she's old
Or gray, her back is bent.

She's up and sends the children off
To school at early morn,
And she had their dinner ready
When they at noon return.

When supper's over, and she's washed
Plates, knives and forks and spoons,
Then she must sit up half the night
Half-soling pantaloons.

So patient and unselfish,
She's as loving as she's brave,
But when she gets a rest, 'twill be
When she is in the grave.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

The next fortnight was a busy one for all concerned. The organization of a colonial volunteer corps is no joke, as anybody who has ever tried it can testify. There were rough uniforms to be provided, arms to be obtained, and a hundred and one other wants to be satisfied. Then came some delay about the horses, which were to be served out by Government. At last these were handed over, a good-looking lot, but apparently very wild. Matters were at this point, when one day Ernest was seated in the room he used as an office in his house, enrolling a new recruit previous to his being sworn, interviewing a tradesman about flannel shirts, making arrangements for a supply of forage, filling up the endless forms which the Imperial authorities required for transmission to the War-office, and a hundred other matters. Suddenly his orderly announced that two privates of the corps wished to see him.

"What is it?" he asked of the orderly testily for he was nearly worked to death.

"A complaint, sir."

"Well, send them in."

The door opened, and in entered a curious couple. One was a great, burly sailor-man, who had been corporal-at-arms on board one of Her Majesty's ships at Cape Town, got drunk, overstayed his leave, and deserted rather than face the punishment; the other a quick, active little fellow, with a face like a ferret. He was a Zululand trader, who had ruined himself by drink, and a peculiarly valuable member of the corps on account of his knowledge of the country in which they were going to serve. Both the men saluted and stood at ease.

"Well, my men, what is it?" asked Ernest, going on filling up his forms.

"Nothing so far as I am concerned, sir," said the little man.

Ernest looked up sharply at the quondam tar.

"Now, Adam, your complaint; I have no time to waste."

Adam hitched up his breeches and began:

"You see, sir, I brought he here by the scruff of the neck."

"That's true, sir," said the little man rubbing that portion of his body.

"Because he and I, sir, as is messmates, sir, 'ad a difference of opinion. It was his day, you see, sir, to cook for our mess, and instead of putting on the pot, sir, he comes to me he does and he says, 'Adam, you father of a race of fools'—that's what he says, sir, a-comparing of me to the gent who lived in a garden—'why don't you come and take the skins off the—taters, instead of a-squatting of yourself down on that—bed!'"

"Slightly in error, sir," broke in the little man; "our big friend's memory is not as substantial as his form. What I said was, 'My dear Adam, as I see you have nothing to do, except sit and play a Jew's-harp upon your couch, would you be so kind as to come and assist me to remove the outer skin of these potatoes?'"

Ernest began to explode, but checked himself and said sternly:

"Don't talk nonsense, Adam; tell me your complaint, or go."

"Well, sir," answered the big sailor, scratching his head, "is I must give it a name it is this—this here man, sir, be too infarnal sagustic."

"Be off with you both," said Ernest, sternly, "and don't trouble me with any such nonsense again, or I will put you both under arrest, and stop your pay. Come, march!" and he pointed to the door. As he did so he observed a Boer gallop swiftly past the house, and take the turn to Government House.

"What is up now?" he wondered.

Half an hour afterward another man passed the window, also at full speed, and also turned up toward Government House. Another half hour passed, and Mr. Alston came hurrying in.

"Look here, Ernest," he said, "here is a pretty business. Three men have come in to report that Cetywayo has sent an Impi (army) round by the back of Secocoeni's country to burn Pretoria, and return to Zululand across the High Veldt. They say that the Impi is now resting in the Saltpan Bush, about twenty miles off, and will attack the town to-night or to-morrow night. All these three, who have, by-the-way, had no communication with each other, state that they have actually seen the captains of the Impi, who came to tell them to bid the other Dutchmen stand aside, as they are now fighting the Queen, and they would not be hurt."

"It seems incredible," said Ernest; "do you believe it?"

"I don't know. It is possible, and the evidence is strong. It is possible; I have known the Zulus make longer marches than that. The Governor has ordered me to gallop to the spot, and report if I can see anything of this Impi."

"Am I to go too?"

"No, you will remain in the corps. I take Roger with me—he is a light weight—and two spare horses. If there should be an attack and I should not be back, or if anything should happen, you will do your duty."

"Yes."

"Good-by. I am off. You had best muster the men to be ready for an emergency—" and he was gone.

Ten minutes afterward, down came an orderly from the officer commanding, with a peremptory order that the officer commanding Alston's Horse was to mount and parade his men in readiness for immediate service.

"Here is a pretty go," thought Ernest, "and the horses not served out yet!"

Just then Jeremy came in, saluted, and informed him that the men were mustered.

"Serve out the saddlery. Let every man shoulder his saddle. Tell Mazook to bring out the 'Devil' (Ernest's favorite horse), and march the men up to the Government stables. I will be with you presently."

Jeremy saluted again and vanished. He was the most punctilious sergeant-major who ever breathed.

Twenty minutes later, a long file of men, each with a carbine slung to his back, and a saddle on his head, which, at a distance, gave them the appearance of a string of gigantic mushrooms, were to be seen proceeding toward the Government stables a mile away.

Ernest, mounted on his great black stallion, and looking in his military uniform and the revolver slung across his shoulders, a typical volunteer officer was there before them.

"Now, my men," he said, as soon as they were paraded, "go in, and each man choose the horse which he likes best, bridle him, and bring him out and saddle him. Sharp!"

The men broke their ranks and rushed to the stables, each anxious to secure a better horse than his neighbors. Presently from the stables there arose a sound of kicking, plunging and wohohing impossible to describe.

"There will be a pretty scene soon, with these unbroken brutes," thought Ernest. He was not destined to be disappointed. The horses were dragged out, most of them lying back upon their haunches, kicking, bucking and going through every other equine antic.

"Saddle up!" shouted Ernest, as soon as they were all out.

It was done with great difficulty.

"Now mount."

Sixty men lifted their legs and swung themselves into the saddle, not without sad misgivings. A few seconds passed, and at least twenty of them were on the broad of their backs; one or two were being dragged by the stirrup-leather; a few were clinging to their bucking and plunging steeds; and the remainder of Alston's Horse was scouring the plain in every possible direction. Never was there such a scene.

In time, however, most of the men got back again, and some sort of order was restored. Several men were hurt, one or two badly. These were sent to the hospital, and Ernest formed the rest into half sections to be marched to the place of rendezvous. Just then, to make matters better, down came the rain in sheets, soaking them to the skin, and making confusion worse confounded. So they rode to the town, which was by this time in an extraordinary state of panic. All business was suspended, women were standing about on the verandas, hugging their babies and crying, or making preparations to go into laager; men were hiding deeds and other valuables, or hurrying to defence meetings on the market-square, where the Government were serving out rifles and ammunition to all able-bodied citizens; frightened mobs of Basutos and Christian Kafirs were jabbering in the streets, and telling tales of the completeness of Zulu slaughter, or else running from the city to pass the night among the hills. Altogether the scene was most curious, till dense darkness came down on it like an extinguisher, and put it out.

Ernest took his men to a building which the Government had placed at their disposal, and had the horses stabled, but not unsaddled. Presently orders came down to him to keep the corps under arms all night; to send out four patrols to be relieved at midnight to watch the approaches to the town; and at dawn to saddle up and reconnoiter the neighboring country.

Ernest obeyed these orders as well as he could; that is, he sent the patrols out, but so dense was the darkness that they never got back again till the following morning, when they were collected, and, in one instance, dug out of the various ditches, quarry-holes, etc., into which they had fallen.

About eleven o'clock Ernest was seated in a little room that opened out of the main building where they were quartered, consulting with Jeremy about matters connected with the corps, and wondering if Alston had found a Zulu Impi, or if it was all gammon, when suddenly they heard the sharp challenge of the sentry outside:

"Who goes there?"

"Whoever it is had better answer sharp," said Ernest; "I gave the sentry orders to be quick with his rifle to-night."

"Bang! crash!" followed by loud howls of "Wilhemina, my wife! ah, the cruel man has killed my Wilhemina!"

Presently Ernest's old friend of the High Veldt, looking very wild and uncouth in the lamplight, with his long beard and matted hair, from which the rain was dripping, was bundled rather unceremoniously into the room.

"Ah, there you are, dear sir; it is two—three years since we meet. I look for you everywhere, and they tell me you are here, and I come on quick all through the dark and the rain; and then before I know if I am on my head or my heel, the cruel man he ups a rifle, and do shoot my Wilhemina, and make a great hole through her poor stomach. O sir, wat shall I do?" and the great child began to shed tears; "you too, you will weep; you, too, love my Wilhemina, and sleep with her one night—bohoo!"

"For goodness' sake, stop that nonsense! This is no time or place for such fooling."

He spoke sharply and the monomaniac pulled up, only giving vent to an occasional sob.

"Now, what is your business with me?"

The German's face changed from its expression of idiotic grief to one of refined intelligence. He glanced toward Jeremy, who was exploding in the corner.

"You can speak before this gentleman, Hans," said Ernest.

"Sir, I am going to say a strange thing to you this night." He was speaking quite quietly and composedly now, and might have been mistaken for a sane man. "Sir, I hear that you go down to Zululand to fight the fierce Zulus. When I hear it, I was far away, but something come into my head to travel as quick as Wilhemina can, and come and tell you not to go."

"What do you mean?"

"How can I say what I do mean? This I know—many shall go down to Zululand who rest in this house to-night, few shall come back.

"You mean that I shall be killed?"

"I know not. There are things as bad as death, and yet not death." He covered his eyes with his hand, and continued: "I cannot see you dead, but do not go; I pray you do not go."

"My good Hans, what is the good of coming to me with such an old wives' tale? Even if it were true, and I knew that I must be killed twenty times, I should go; I cannot run away from my duty."

"That is spoken as a brave man should," answered his visitor, in his native tongue. "I have done my duty, and told you what Wilhemina said. Now go, and when the black men are pressing round you like the sea-waves round a rock, may the God of Rest guide your hand, and bring you safe from the slaughter!"

Ernest gazed at the old man's pale face; it wore a curious, rapt expression, and the eyes were looking upward.

"Perhaps, old friend," he said, addressing him in German, "I, as well as you, have a City of Rest which I would reach, and care not if I pass thither on an assegai."

"I know it," replied Hans, in the same tongue; "but useless is it to seek rest till God gives it. You have sought and passed through the jaws of many deaths, but you have not found. If it be not God's will you will not find it now. I know you too seek rest, my brother, and had I known that you would find that only down there"—and he pointed toward Zululand—"I had not come to warn you, for blessed is rest, and happy he who gains it. But no, it is not that; I am sure now that you will not die; your evil, whatever it is, will fall from heaven."

"So be it," said Ernest; "you are a strange man. I thought you a common monomaniac, and now you speak like a prophet."

The old man smiled.

"You are right; I am both. Mostly I am mad. I know it. But sometimes my madness has its moments of inspiration when the clouds lift from my mind, and I, see things none others can see, and hear voices to which your ears are deaf. Such a moment is on me now; soon I shall be mad again. But before the clouds settle I would speak to you. Why, I know not, save that I loved you when first I saw your eyes open there upon the cold veldt. Presently I must go, and we shall meet no more, for I draw near to the snow-clad tree that marks the gate of the City of Rest. I can look into your heart now and see the trouble in it, and the sad, beautiful face that is printed on your mind. Ah, she is not happy; she, too, must work out her rest. But the time is short, the cloud settles, and I would tell you what is in my mind. Even though trouble, great trouble, close you in, do not be cast down, for trouble is the key of heaven. Be good; turn to the God you have neglected; struggle against the snares of the senses. Oh, I can see now. For you and for all you love there is joy and there is peace."

Suddenly he broke off, the look of inspiration faded from his face, which grew stupid and wild-looking.

"Ah, the cruel man; he made a great hole in the stomach of my Wilhemina!"

Ernest had been bending forward, listening with parted lips to the old man's talk. When he saw that the inspiration had left him, he raised his head and said:

"Gather yourself together, I beg you for a moment. I wish to ask one question. Shall I ever—?"

"How shall I stop de bleeding from the vitals of my dear wife?—who will plug up the hole in he?"

Ernest gazed at the man. Was he putting all this on?—or was he really mad? For the life of him he could not tell.

Taking out a sovereign, he gave it to him.

"There is money to doctor Wilhemina with," he said. "Would you like to sleep here?—I can give you a blanket."

The old man took the money without hesitation, and thanked Ernest for it; but said he must go on at once.

"Where are you going to?" asked Jeremy, who had been watching him with great curiosity; he had not understood that part of the conversation which had been carried on in German.

Hans turned upon him with a quick look of suspicion.

"Rustenburg (Anglice, the town of rest)," he answered.

"Indeed! the road is bad, and it is far to travel."

"Yes," he replied, "the road is rough and long. Farewell!"—and he was gone.

"Well, he is a curious old buster, and no mistake, with his cheerful anticipation, and his Wilhemina," reflected Jeremy aloud. "Just fancy starting for Rustenburg at this hour of the night too! Why, it is a hundred miles off!"

Ernest dryly smiled. He knew that it was no earthly Rustenburg that the old man sought.

Some while afterward he heard that he had attained the rest which he desired. Wilhemina got fixed in a snow-drift in a pass of the Drakensberg. He was unable to drag her out.

So he crept underneath and fell asleep, and the snow came down and covered him.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

MR. ALSTON'S VIEWS.

The Zulu attack on Pretoria ultimately turned out only to have existed in the minds of two mad Kafirs, who dressed themselves up after the fashion of chiefs, personating two Zulu nobles of repute, who were known to be in command of regiments, rode from house to house, telling the Dutch inhabitants that they had an Impi of 30,000 men lying in the bush, and bidding them stand aside while they destroyed the Englishmen. Hence the scare.

The next month was a busy one for Alston's Horse. It was drill, drill, drill morning, noon and night. But the results soon became apparent. In three weeks from the day they got their horses, there was not a smarter, quicker corps in South Africa, and Mr. Alston and Ernest were highly complimented on the soldier-like appearance of the men, and the rapidity and exactitude with which they executed all the ordinary cavalry manœuvres.

They were to march from Pretoria on the 10th of January, and expected to overtake Colonel Glynn's column, with which was the General, about the 18th, by which time Mr. Alston calculated the real advance upon Zululand would begin.

On the 8th, the good people of Pretoria gave the corps a farewell banquet, for most of its members were Pretoria men; and colonists are never behindhand when there is an excuse for conviviality and good-fellowship.

Of course, after the banquet, Mr.—or, as he was now called, Captain—Alston's health was drunk. But Alston was a man of few words and had a horror of speech-making. He contented himself with a few brief sentences of acknowledgment and sat down. Then somebody proposed the health of the other commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and to this Ernest rose to respond, making a very good speech in reply. He rapidly sketched the state of political affairs, of which the Zulu war was the outcome, and, without expressing any opinion on the justice or wisdom of that war, of which, to speak the truth, he had grave doubts, he went on to show, in a few well-chosen, weighty words, how vital were the interests involved in its successful conclusion, now that it once had been undertaken. Finally, he concluded thus:

"I am well aware, gentlemen, that with many of those who are your guests here to-night, and my own comrades, this state of affairs and the conviction of the extreme urgency of the occasion has been the cause of their enlistment. It is impossible for me to look down these tables, and see so many in our rough-and-ready uniform, whom I have known in other walks of life, as farmers, storekeepers, Government clerks and what not, without realizing most clearly the extreme necessity that can have brought these peaceable citizens together on such an errand as we are bent on. Certainly it is not the ten shillings a day or the mere excitement of savage warfare, that has done this" (cries of "No, no!"); "because most of them can well afford to despise the money, and many more have seen enough of native war, and know well that few rewards and plenty of hard work fall to the lot of colonial volunteers. Then, what is it? I will venture a reply. It is that sense of patriotism which is a part and parcel of the English mind" (cheers), "and which from generation to generation has been the root of England's greatness, and, so long as the British blood remains untainted, will from unborn generation to generation be the main-spring of the greatness that is yet to be of those wider Englands, of which I hope this continent will become not the least." (Loud cheers.) "That, gentlemen and men of Alston's Horse, is the bond which unites us together; it is the sense of a common duty to perform, of a common danger to combat, of a common patriotism to vindicate. And for that reason, because of the patriotism and the duty, I feel sure that when the end of this campaign comes, whatever that end may be, no one, be he Imperial officer, or newspaper correspondent, or Zulu foe, will be able to say that Alston's Horse shirked its work, or was mutinous, or proved a broken reed, piercing the side of those who leaned on it." (Cheers.) "I feel sure, too, that, though there may be a record of brave deeds such as become brave men, there will be none of a comrade deserted in the time of need, or of failure in the moment of emergency, however terrible that emergency may be." (Cheers.) "Ay, my brethren in arms," and here Ernest's eyes flashed and his strong, clear voice went ringing down the great hall, "whom England has called, and who have not failed to answer to the call, I repeat, however terrible may be that emergency, even if it should involve the certainty of death—I speak thus because I feel I am addressing brave men, who do not fear to die, when death means duty, and life means dishonor—I know well that you will rise to it, and falling shoulder to shoulder, will pass as heroes should on to the land of shades—on to that Valhalla of which no true heart should fear to set foot upon the threshold."

Ernest sat down amid ringing cheers. Nor did these noble words, coming as they did straight from the loyal heart of an English gentleman, fail of their effect. On the contrary, when a fortnight later Alston's Horse formed that fatal ring on Isandhlwana's bloody field, they flashed through the brain of more than one despairing man, so that he set his teeth and died the harder for them.

"Bravo, my young Viking!" said Mr. Alston to Ernest, while the roof was still echoing to the cheers evoked by his speech, "the old Berserkir spirit is cropping up eh?" He knew that Ernest's mother's family, like so many of the old Eastern county stocks, were of Danish extraction.

It was a great night for Ernest.

Two days later Alston's Horse, sixty-four strong, marched out of Pretoria with a military band playing before. Alas! they never marched back again.

At the neck of the port or pass the band and the crowd of ladies and gentlemen who had accompanied them halted, and, having given them three cheers, turned and left them. Ernest too turned and gazed at the pretty town, with its white houses and rose hedges red with bloom, nestling on the plain beneath, and wondered if he would ever see it again. He never did.

The troop was then ordered to march at ease in half-sections, and Ernest rode up to the side of Alston; on his other side was the boy Roger, now about fourteen years of age, who acted as Alston's aide-de-camp, and was in high spirits at the prospect of the coming campaign. Presently Alston sent his son back to the other side of the line on some errand.

Ernest watched him as he galloped off and a thought struck him.

"Alston," he said, "do you think it is wise to bring that boy into this business?"

His friend slued himself round sharply in the saddle.

"Why not?" he asked in his deliberate way.

"Well, you know there is a risk."

"And why should not the boy run risks as well as the rest of us? Look here, Ernest, when I first met you there in France I was going to see the place where my wife was brought up. Do you know how she died?"

"I have heard she died a violent death; I do not know how."

"Then I will tell you, though it costs me something to speak of it. She died by a Zulu assegai, a week after the boy was born. She saved his life by hiding him under a heap of straw. Don't ask me particulars, I can't bear to talk of it. Perhaps now you understand why I am commanding a corps enrolled to serve against the Zulus. Perhaps too you will understand why the lad is with me. We go to avenge my wife and his mother, or to fall in the attempt. I have waited long for the opportunity; it has come."

Ernest relapsed into silence and presently fell back to his troop.

Glenbeigh, the Scene of the Evictions.

The Parish of Glenbeigh lies far away down in the extreme south of the kingdom of Kerry. It is as desolate a spot as can be found on all the western coast. The nearest town is Castleisland, notorious as the heart and centre of the most disaffected district in Ireland. To reach it from Killarney a long journey across country of twenty miles must be taken, and from Tralee the distance is only five miles less. The village which is the scene of the present evictions lies in a ravine among the hills, situated some height above the sea, in a bleak, exposed situation. For the tourist in search of a picturesque wilderness the locality is attractive enough, and there is plenty of shooting on the hills to satisfy the sportsman, but for the husbandman it is as undesirable a location as could be well imagined. Like many hundred thousand acres of land in the West of Ireland, it is a waste of bog and rock. But for the constant labor of the cottiers who are nestled among the boulders it would in a very few years relapse into a waste which might afford pasturage for snipe but for nothingelse.—Pall Mall Gazette.

—The Newfoundland Government want to reduce the subsidy given the Allan line for carrying the mails, and will terminate the contract.

—"Don't be a fool," she said, with a snap, to her husband. "Why didn't you tell me that when I asked you to marry me," he replied, and silence fell upon that house.

—Chinese daily papers have no local news, unless it is brought into the office with a request to publish. Chinese reporters have too much dignity to go sloshing around after scoops.

—"Does your husband call you pet names?" one married lady asked another. "Well, not quite. When we were first married he used to call me kitten; now he calls me old cat."

IF HE HAD A MIND.

The dude he would go a courting;
Then said his mamma kind,
"You must not go," and he answered,
"I'll go if I have a mind."

The mother smiled serenely,
Then said, in accents low,
"If that is the case, my darling,
You certainly will not go."

BIG AND LITTLE HEADS.

An Investigator Who Says Size Has Nothing to Do With Intelligence.

A tall, broad-shouldered man, writes a New York correspondent, with gray hair and whiskers, and the general air of a worldly innocence that characterizes the scientific person, visited the Aztec Fair. The matador's swords and caballero's spurs failed to attract his attention, and he was not interested in the frying of tortillas by buxom female descendants of the Montezumas. Adjusting his spectacles across his nose and taking a brief survey of the hall with his beaming blue eyes, he rubbed his palms together, and in a gratified way softly murmured, "Oh! this saves me quite a journey," and drew a note-book and small steel tape from his pocket. Marching up to the nearest hombre, who was industriously fashioning silver wire into delicate jewellery, the tall man gently but firmly drew the tape-line around the astonished greaser's head, carefully noting the measurement, and made an entry in his note book. Smiling blandly and reassuringly upon the exhibit he proceeded to measure the Mexican's head in various ways and make notes. Before the bewildered fellow could collect his wits the tall man had moved around to the next booth and slipped his tape around another skull, serenely oblivious to the sensation he was creating among the puzzled Mexicans. At last he tackled a vaquero who could talk English and wanted to know the purpose of the measurements. The investigator explained that he devoted his whole time to travelling over the world measuring people's heads, and some day he would write a book about it, showing what folks had the biggest heads of the lot, not counting promising young actors or newly-elected Congressmen. The vaquero was disappointed to learn that the tall man was not an eccentric American philanthropist with an amiable desire to present new sombreros to the whole crowd. The gentleman was Dr. Sims, who long ago retired from practice, and took up theorizing and investigating. In reply to my questions the doctor said: "These chaps, I find, have very small heads and consequently small brains. They are not Aztecs, of course, but belong to the mixed Spanish and Indian race of Mexico. The fact that their head is small is only another proof of my theory, or rather of my generalization from long observation, that the largest heads are in the cold countries, and the size of the skull and weight diminish as you get nearer the equator. I have measured heads from Lapland to Egypt, and from India to New Zealand, and the results prove the truth of the general statement. The Laplanders have the largest heads and the equatorial races the smallest. But the Laplander is by no means a prodigy of mental activity. In fact, he is inclined to be rather stupid. Now, I have discovered that the brain has nothing to do with the operation of the thought. The mind, as it is called, is not located in the brain. The brain is a vital organ like the heart, and supplies heat to the body through the nerves. Sever the nerves in a sheep's neck and the heat of the body diminishes in regular proportion so many degrees a minute. The experience of Arctic explorers has shown that men with big heads endure the cold best. The brain is a life-giving organ. It is the dynamo that sends heat and electricity along the nerves to all parts of the body. In cold climates more heat is required, and heart and brains are larger than in warmer climates. People living near the equator require little body heat, and their heads are small. But the intellect is not affected by the size of the head. Big men have big heads, but the smart men are by no means big. The biggest brain that was ever weighed was that of a congenital idiot. The next heaviest was that of Ivan Tourgieneiff. The latter was Russian, and the Russians have big heads because their country is cold. I could cite facts by the hour to prove my theory, and some day the anatomists will all agree with me that the old notion of brain power is entirely erroneous." The doctor sighted another foreign head across the hall, and, whipping out his tape-line, he disappeared in the crowd, walking over small people without noticing their protests in his anxiety not to lose sight of the new specimen.

Johnny's Spelling.

"How do you spell knee, mamma?" said a small boy, looking up from his slate.

"K-n-e-e, Johnny."

Silence for several moments, while the letters were going down laboriously. And then he asked:

"How do you spell grow.

"G-r-o-w."

More scratching with the pencil.

"Now I've got it!" Johnny exclaimed. "K-n-e-e, ne, g-r-o-w, gro—negro!"—Youth's Companion.

FROM FAME TO PAUPERISM.

A Great Orator Reduced to Beg for Alms in His Old Age.

A remarkable and even pathetic incident occurred at Kalamazoo, in this State, the latter part of last week, says a Detroit despatch. A very old man, past 80 years, appeared in the office of the Superintendent of the Poor to solicit public assistance. He had no overcoat and was dressed in a thin, threadbare suit of black. The silk hat on his head, like the white hair beneath it, had seen the storms of many winters. He carried a small parcel and two canes with which to support his steps. It was with difficulty that the official, after the aged man had told his name, recognized in him the famous Augustus Littlejohn, an orator of such splendid ability in his prime, forty years ago, that no one who heard him ever forgot the almost irresistible magnetism of his eloquence. Arriving from Niles Mr. Littlejohn had applied to the poor authorities for assistance to enable him to reach Schoolcraft, which place he desired to visit. The assistance was instantly furnished him, as one whose talents and past services to mankind entitled him to something better than miserable poverty in his old age, and armed with a pauper's ticket he left for Schoolcraft that afternoon.

Augustus Littlejohn was a great man among a generation now passed away. He was the Gough of the forties. Old settlers who have heard him repeatedly say that he surpassed Gough in the vividness of his descriptions and the wonderful and altogether indescribable dramatic force of his utterances. He lectured repeatedly all through Michigan and Indiana on temperance, with enormous crowds attending his lectures everywhere. He was known also throughout the east as well as in the west. Thousands all over the country were reclaimed by him from intemperance. He was of the noted Littlejohn family, of Herkimer, N. Y., a family distinguished for its talent. Bishop Littlejohn, of Long Island, and the late Hon. De Witt C. Littlejohn, of Oswego, N. Y., were nephews of his. Now in picturesque, but nevertheless miserable, poverty the old man is obliged to ask for public alms. It will be startling news to most of those who knew him in his prime, or those who are only acquainted with his splendid reputation, to hear that the matchless orator of nearly half a century ago is still alive, so long has he been hidden away from public observation and knowledge.

Brain-forcing in Children.

At its meeting recently the Nineteenth Century Club listened to a discussion on "Brain-forcing in the Education of Children."

Dr. William A. Hammond said that a little girl was brought to him with St. Vitus' dance. In her school satchel were books on English grammar, arithmetic, geography, history, primary, astronomy, temperance, physiology and hygiene ("whatever that may mean," he interjected), French grammar, French reader, and a book on "Science." He found the child had six and a half hours to study nine subjects; it was using its brain capital faster than its receipts; it had intellectual bankruptcy staring it in the face. If a child should not look at a book until it was 10 years old it would read better at 11 than a child who had studied its letters when it was 3 years old. "It would be much better if a child studied two or three subjects instead of twelve; grammar should be banished until the senior year of a university course; no child ever learned good English from a grammar. Grammar is the most ingenious device ever known for driving poor little brains into permature decrepitude. The only reason why it does not do more harm is because nine-tenths of the people don't know anything about it."

Miss Mary E. Tate, Principal of Grammar School No. 45, defended the present system in this city. She said that "overwork" was due largely to mothers and doctors.

"A doctor knows there is no way to reach a mother's heart," she said, "so soon as by saying, 'Your child's brain is too active.' A physician said that of me, and my mother told of it with pride."—New York Sun.

An Unmistakable Symptom.

A new baby had arrived at little Johnny's residence, and the youngster was admitted to take his first look at the little stranger. He surveyed it calmly for a moment, and then looking up exclaimed enthusiastically:

"His face is just like the color of Uncle George's. Gosh, but he must be a hard drinker!"—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Prof. Udson, a violinist of Warren, O., was engaged to Miss Jenny Thompson, of Copenhagen, when he quit that city for America. A few weeks ago he sent for her, and the day after Christmas she arrived in New York city with her grand piano and many trunks. She was met by her lover, who took her directly to Warren, where three days later they were married at the institution where the husband teaches music.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

There were 34 deaths in Kingston last month, eight of which were from consumption.

Owing to a rumor that Dr. Abbott, of Belleville, who died suddenly recently, had come to life, an investigation showed that his remains are still in the vault there.

Ottawa is likely to prove a formidable competitor with Kingston for the possession of the proposed School of Practical Science for Eastern Ontario.

Mr. W. Peters and his family, of Kingston, came near losing their lives on Thursday night by suffocation from coal gas. The members of the family are confined to bed.

Two Civil Service employees got well thrashed in the Windsor Hotel, Ottawa, on Thursday night, by a stranger, whom they insulted because he would not shout for the Tory party.

A special meeting of the Tororto City Council was held yesterday afternoon, when the legislation to be asked from the Ontario Legislature at its present session was considered and adopted.

Miles Dempsey, who lived near Demorestville, Prince Edward County, was instantly killed on Thursday by a kick from a young horse which he was breaking. Deceased was 35 years of age and married.

An old gateman of the Grand Trunk Railway named John Woods lost his life at Montreal yesterday morning, being run down by a locomotive during the heavy snowstorm. He was an old employee, and attended the switches and semaphores.

McGill Graduates' Society Executive Committee offer a prize of $50 for the best ode in honor of the Queen's Jubilee, to be read at the annual University dinner at the end of April. The competition will be open to all Her Majesty's subjects, manuscripts to be in before the 15th April.

Mr. James Foot, who was taken from the second story window of his house at St. Thomas in a boat during the recent floods, while suffering from a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs, died yesterday from the effects of the exposure. Deceased was 71 years of age, and had been a resident of that city for the past fifty years.

Mr. John Lytle, of Amherst Island, while driving home to Amherst Island, accompanied by Miss Wilson, broke through the ice. He managed to get out upon the ice, after which, with much difficulty, he seized the young lady by the hair and rescued her. The valuable team of horses were drowned. Miss Wilson is very ill from the effects of her wetting.

Edwin Sales, a hotel keeper at Courtland, a few miles from Aylmer, has been in poor health and also financial difficulties for some time past, and on Thursday night he made a most determined and successful attempt at suicide. Taking a loaded shot gun and locking himself in his bed-room, he placed the muzzle to his forehead and fired. The whole top of his head was blown off, and his brains scattered over the walls and floor. The report of the gun was heard by the family, and when the door was forced he was found lying on the floor dead. A razor was found in his pocket. He was about 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children.

Four hundred houses were destroyed by fire in Rangoon yesterday.

The proposition which has been put forward, that the Pope shall be accepted as arbiter in the Bulgarian dispute, is strongly opposed by Russia.

A despatch from St. Petersburg states that the Russian Mediterranean fleet has been ordered to rendezvous in Japanese waters, where Russia intends at the earliest possible moment to assemble a considerable squadron.

The Prince of Waes has notified the Governors of New South Wales and Victoria that both himself and the Princess find it necessary to recall their acceptance of an invitation to visit Australia this year on the occasion of the centenary celebration of the two Provinces." The letter says it will be impossible for the Prince and Princess to leave England during the next twelve months.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in the House of Commons last evening, in answer to inquiries, affirmed the truth of reports that Moonlighters had attacked the houses of three farmers in Mill Street, county Cork, and cut off the hair of every woman met in the houses. The only reason given for the outrage, said the Chief Secretary, was that the women had been seen speaking to the police. Sir Michael also said the Government would not release the Crossmaglen convicts.

Court circles are in a state of enthusiastic expectancy with regard to the coming celebration of Queen Victoria's coronation. The greatest social feature of the Jubilee will be a magnificent State ball in costume. The last State ball, which took place in June, 1851, more than ten years before the death of the Prince Consort, was a costume affair. The dresses were in imitation of the time of the restoration of Charles II., and it was the most splendid court spectacle of the present reign. It is hoped that this year's ball will be quite as grand, and every effort is being put forth to make it so. It is stated that the Queen designs that the costumes to be worn at the June ball shall be in the style of the middle of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, or about 1580.

William Robinson, who was bitten in the lip by a strange dog on December 28th, died yesterday in the agonies of hydrophobia, at Greenwich, Conn.

Thos. F. McGown, a well known citizen of Duluth, fell from a private box to the orchestra in the Theatre Comique on Thursday night and was killed.

The coroner's jury has returned a verdict that the death of Raymond R. Belmont, who shot himself in the basement of his father's house in New York, was accidental.

The Council of Dakota yesterday defeated by an emphatic majority the bill giving incorporated cities the exclusive control of the liquor traffic within their limits. The same body passed the Local Option Bill by 33 to 10.

Freight traffic on the railways has been completely stopped in Eastern Ontario by the severe snowstorm of last Friday, and passenger trains have suffered considerable delay.

An interesting debate on the subject of Imperial Federation was held in Kingston on Saturday night between students of Toronto and Queen's Universities, the latter arguing in favor of and the Toronto men opposing the idea. The judges decided in favor of federation.

A young man named Arnold, just released from the Central Prison, sprang upon a soldier, who carries the mail to the Royal Military College, Kingston, on Saturday, on the principal street, and seizing him by the cheek with his teeth took a piece out. The soldier was passing quietly along the street at the time.

Two or three girls belonging to the Salvation Army were brutally attacked on St. John street, Quebec, yesterday afternoon by a crowd of respectably-dressed rowdies, who pelted them with lumps of snow and ice, knocking one young woman to the ground. The victim might have been killed but for the timely arrival of the police. No arrests were made, though the street was full of people at the time.

On Saturday morning, as Sarah North, aged about 50 years, was attending to her usual work in one of the Asylum cottages at London she fell down a cellar in the house and fractured her skull, from the effects of which she died in a short time. She had been in the institution about ten years and belonged in the neighborhood of Stratford. An inquest was held at 4 o'clock and a verdict of accidental death returned.

Mr. Daniel Cook, of McLeod & Cook, saw millers, Teeswater, was crushed to death while unloading saw logs at the mill on Saturday afternoon. Nobody was in the yard at the time, and when the body was found life had been extinct for some time. Death must have been instantaneous, as he was lying beneath the saw logs very badly crushed and his spine broken. It is supposed that he slipped and fell, pulling the logs on top of him. He leaves a wife and young family.

The Use of Words.

A Canadian says the word "toboggan" should be pronounced with the second o, long, as in open.

Citizens of Depere, Wis., are about to take a vote to determine whether the name of their city shall be spelled with a small or with a capital P.

A student of Indian tongues declares that the word "Chicago" was used by the Pottawatomie Indians long ago to designate a place where wild onions abounded—literally, an onion patch.

The word "polyg" is in constant use among the people of Utah in conversation and in print to designate a Mormon. "Cohab" is applied to a person convicted of unlawful cohabitation and less frequently to a person of improper habits.

The verb "to jounce" and the substantive, "jouncer," are becoming current in certain society circles as terms by which to denote respectively "mash" and "masher." The idea involved is that of the reduction of the victim to the condition of jolting helplessness typified by the jelly-fish.

The term "pigeon English," used to designate the lingua franca which passes current between English-speaking people and the Chinese, is said to be a corruption of "business English," the word "pigeon" being the nearest approach that a Chinaman can make to the pronunciation of the English word "business."

Miss Fortescue, the actress, told a Chicago reporter the other day that the adjective "elegant" is never used in London in cultivated conversation. "Over here it is rightly, and I notice frequently, used," said she; "but in England we use it but for one thing in the whole world, and what do you think that is? In advertisements of flats, 'elegant new flats to let,' you know."

It is the proper thing in St. Paul and Minneapolis now to call a dude of a certain class a "fade." To come strictly under this designation a dude must be not too old nor too stout, and his most prominent characteristics must be a melancholy mien and a habit of profound silence where speech is not absolutely necessary. He should smile only rarely, and in taking leave of a person should vanish gently as if fading away.

Heating Three Rooms with One Stove.

A correspondent in Indiana, who favors the readers of the New York Metal Worker with an occasional letter, sends it the following communication containing suggestions which may be of value to many of our readers having similar work to execute and which we gladly reproduce: A doctor had a new office built last summer, with three rooms on ground floor. These he was desirous of heating with one stove and sheet-iron drums. I told him I would do the work under his directions, he being responsible for the results, which he agreed to. The stove is a base-heating wood burner, which was placed in the waiting-room. A pipe was run from the stove in the waiting room through the partition into the consultation room, and connected with the drum therein. A pipe also connected the drum in the consultation room with the drum in the study, and from thence was carried into the chimney near the ceiling. In the pipe running from the stove to the consultation room was a "T," from which was run a pipe to the chimney in the waiting room. This pipe was provided with a close damper just placed above the T. To my amazement and surprise he reports it works nicely even with the indirect shaft on the stove. The drums were of ordinary pattern, having a division running from the top to near the bottom. The building is one storey, the chimney not more than 50 feet high from the ground. It impressed the fact on my mind never to be too positive about an untried scheme. But I should not have done the work on my own responsibility, nor would I want to do a similar job and warrant it to work satisfactorily.

Mr. Brander's Letter.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Mr. Editor,—In reply to "The Teacher," I feel like apologizing to yourself & readers for occupying space in the columns of your valuable paper in again taking up this matter. Am glad you have decided to give us the privilege of replying to his base and cowardly attacks which he would not have dared to make except thinking himself shielded from reply. He flaunts the great truism 'Truth is mighty' and yet his communication is only remarkable for its absence and he bandies about the name of His Satanic Majesty with a very near friend. The Teacher thinks he kept his religious opinions, or the want of them, very close, only speaking of them to three persons in this section in three years. The opinions expressed to me were total unbelief in the fundamental principles of christianity as held by all the branches of the christian church of which I know.

Of the case of measles to which The Teacher refers I will state the matter and leave the public to judge who acted in a spiteful manner. In the latter end of the winter 1886, my children took the measles. As soon as we were aware of the disease they were removed from school and isolated from our business. The attack was light, their recovery soon completed, not requiring any medical attendance. After their recovery, each resumed their usual duties and were in contact with the school children from day to day, both in the store and on the street for between two and three weeks before returning to school. The Teacher went to Dr. Hixon enquiring about the risk of contagion. The Dr. informed him there was no risk a week or two after recovery. In the face of all this The Teacher compelled the Trustees to move in the matter and demand from me a medical certificate. The isolation had been so complete and the care so great, there was not another person who took the measles. We declined of course to procure a certificate and quietly took the children from school. Now, Mr. Editor, I leave your readers to judge who acted in the spiteful manner. There is a clause in the School Act which says "any scholar that has had or has been exposed to contagious disease." Now, three-fourths of the scholars were exposed, if there was any risk. Before our children returned to school were they all required to produce a certificate? Nay, verily, and the poor teaching machine hides himself behind the school act.

The Teacher reminds me very much of the servant who was lacking in common sense. His master wrote his orders in a book. In discharge of his duties, John would frequently consult his book. One day his master fell in the river and called John, John, help! ere I drown. John answered back "wait till I see if hers in the book!" This Teacher also makes the statement that I acted as a bitter enemy, which is utterly untrue, as I never interfered with him either directly or indirectly. I knew not anything of, nor had I any hand in getting up either the first, second or third petitions for his removal until the third was circulated for signatures when I exercised my right as a ratepayer of the section. He, The Teacher also states that I wrote over my own name to make the public believe I did not instigate the Prowler articles. This Mr. Editor is false. It appears to me Prowler is quite able to take care of himself. The shoddy Teacher threw down the gauntlet, by insinuations against the business men of this place, such as no gentleman would be guilty of and thought as well to deny his creed which he thought he had kept very closely covered in this section and then he found me to the front quite "headstrong" to show anything underhand and false. He tells us I do not attend church because the minister asserted his authority &c. Again The Teacher makes another false statement, I retired because the Methodist minister made two false charges against a committee of which I was a member.

He also states he attended Sunday services. Well, we do not know whether this is true or not. In the history of the past we are informed that Satan presented himself on similar occasions.

This Teacher gives part of an account of 1 lbs of tea, perhaps I can supply the other part as I recollect an auction sale in a shop in the village by some shoddy peddlers I know not whence they came, out of course the Teacher attended them nightly, his purchases were numerous, remarkable and nearly as ancient as Methusalah, such as few other teachers would carry home. In fact his satchel was a complete curiosity shop. He persuaded our cook to use a drawing of his tea. There was very little tea drank that morning, I am satisfied there never was any connection between that and the tea plant. The poor fellow gives us to understand he was taken in and we would advise him to leave off dealing with those trashy peddlers and deal with reliable houses, as we have in Priceville, particularly Brander's.

This Teacher seems hard to please. First he objects because those who signed the petition did not bring some charge against him and now he blubbers like a school boy because we tell him what we think of him. For the last quarter of a century the Globe has been saying, Sir John must go! The Mail ditto Mowatt must go! Still they are there. But when the ratepayers of Priceville said "The Teacher" must go he had to get up and git.

Hoping I have not trespassed too much on your space or the patience of your readers.

I remain, yours respectfully,
JAMES BRANDER.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Hurley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 388 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

From our own Correspondent.

Dr. Jamieson held a Political meeting at S. S. No. 4, Artemesia, to discuss the great political questions of the day, on Thursday the 17th. The Dr. was assisted by Mr. J. Ried of Toronto in defending the John A. Government while W. Hames, T. Wright and W. G. Pickell spoke on the Reform side. Mr. H. Armstrong occupied the chair. The meeting was a very orderly one considering the number of "Red Heads" which attended it.

There will be a cheese factory built about one mile north of here in the spring with Mr. T. Talbot President.

Mrs. James Patton, who has been very ill for some time back is recovering.

There was a meeting held in S. S. No. 4, Artemesia, last Saturday to consider whether the Ross Bible was to continue to be read in the school or not. We were not there but have got a full account of the proceedings. There were about forty of the ratepayers present and quite a discussion followed and as there were mutinous plebeians amongst the crowd the wind got very high and the terms "Sor" "Shake you like a rat" "Rebels" were frequently used. After the wind had been exhausted the following resolution was moved and passed that the whole scriptures and nothing else be read in the school. Surely S. S. No. 4 will be religious after this.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoveall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

Cured By Using

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Opening of the First Session of the Sixth Parliament.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Prospective Legislation on Important Public Questions.

The Speech from the Throne.

I have great pleasure in welcoming you for the first time to your legislative duties as members of a new Parliament.

The year on which we have entered is one of special interest throughout the British empire as being the jubilee year of the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty, who for half a century has so fulfilled the duties of her exalted station as to secure the devoted loyalty and affection of her people.

I regret that I am unable to announce to you any progress towards the final settlement of the boundaries of the Province. The legislation advised by their lordships of the Imperial Privy Council for the confirmation of their decision has not yet received the concurrence of the Dominion Government; and my despatches of 1884 on the subject, and on the subject of our northern boundary, are still unanswered.

Soon after the last session of the Provincial Legislature the Court of Appeal unanimously affirmed the judgment of the Chancellor of Ontario negativing the claim of the Dominion Government to the lands and timber in the territory within our boundaries as determined by Her Majesty in Council; but litigation has, notwithstanding, proceeded against the Province, at the public expense; and an appeal to the Supreme Court has been brought, which has been argued and now stands for judgment. There has been some recent correspondence between the two Governments which will be laid before you.

The Dominion Government having declined to agree to any method of putting beyond question the proper jurisdiction to deal with the subjects embodied in the Provincial Factory Act of 1884, I thought it right to assume the jurisdiction without further delay and to issue a proclamation calling the Act into effect. Some further legislation is found to be needed for the effectual and reasonably safe working of the Act, and will be brought to your attention.

I am pleased to notice the prominent place taken by this Province at the Indian and Colonial Exposition last year by the magnificent display there made of the manufactures and natural products of the Province, as also by the attractive and much commended exhibit of the Education Department, evidencing the advanced position which the Province holds in educational science and appliances.

Amongst our agricultural products, the exhibit of cheese and butter forwarded by the Ontario Department of Agriculture attracted much attention, and cannot fail to be of great value to this growing and already important department of agricultural industry. For the success of this exhibit much credit is due to the zealous assistance of the officers of the Provincial Dairy Associations. The splendid exhibit of Ontario fruit, collected mainly by the officers of the Fruit Growers' Association, will do much to remove erroneous impressions in the mother land in regard to the severity of our Canadian climate. The Provincial Bee-Keepers' Association also was enabled, through the liberal assistance voted last session, to make the honey exhibit which reflects credit upon the Province.

I am glad to learn that the mineral resources of the Province are being steadily developed; that new and valuable discoveries have been made during the past year, especially in our northern and north-western districts; and that mining operations have made hopeful progress.

The Commission for consolidating and revising the public statutes of the last ten years have nearly completed their work, embodying the same in two volumes, the first of which will be laid before you at once, and the second on an early day. These volumes embrace amendments which the judicial or professional experience of the respective Commissioners has enabled the Commision to suggest, and I trust that you will find it practicable to adopt at this session the legislation necessary to give to the public the benefit of the work during the present year.

For several years there has been much discussion as to the best means of promoting the higher education of the people, particularly in the department occupied by the Universities of the Province; and it is gratifying to observe that, notwithstanding some differences of opinion as to the methods of attaining this end, there is no such difference as to the duty of placing within the reach of every citizen, who may wish to avail himself of its facilities, a course of University education equal to that furnished by the best Universities of Europe or the United States. A Bill having this object in view will be laid before you.

Amongst the measures to be submitted to you is a Bill for the gradual extension of the Land Titles Act to the whole Province as the public exigencies may render expedient and the local authorities desire. The report of the Master of Titles on the operations of the Act in the county of York and city of Toronto will be laid before you.

Measures will also be submitted for your consideration respecting the appointment and jurisdiction of Police Magistrates, and to provide amongst other things for scientific instruction in the Public and High Schools of the Province as to the nature of alcohol and its effects upon the human system.

Your attention is invited to the important subject of prison labor, and therein to the question whether the present system of letting out the labor of prisoners confined in the Central Prison to companies or private persons by contract, may not, with advantage to the discipline and reformatory influences of the prison, and without disadvantage to the public, be abolished by law, to take effect upon the expiration of existing contracts.

Since the last session of the Provincial Legislature, tenders were advertised for and received for the erection of the new Departmental and Parliament Buildings, and it was found that the needed accommodation will require a somewhat greater expenditure than was expected. To avoid injurious delay, a contract has been entered into for certain parts of the work, subject to a condition requiring your approval of the contract. Papers relating to the subject will be laid before you.

With the view of giving effect to the patriotic sentiment of our people, and following in this respect the example of the neighboring State of New York, the proceedings authorized by the statute of a former session for ascertaining the cost of expropriating the land in the neighborhood of the Falls of Niagara have been taken and are nearly completed, and a measure will be submitted for your consideration dedicating to the public in permanence the land on the Ontario side of the great world-wonder, and containing provisions for securing that object without material cost to the Provincial treasury. A report from the Commissioners will contain all useful information bearing on what is proposed.

The public accounts for the past year will be promptly laid before you, and you will be pleased to learn from them that the expenditure has been less than was provided for by the estimates, and that the receipts have exceeded the amount anticipated.

The estimates for the current year will, at an early date, be submitted for your approval. They will be found to have been prepared with all the economy consistent with the demands of the public service.

I trust that the legislative labors of this first session of the new Parliament may be characterized by the same patriotic care and intelligence as in the case of previous Parliaments.

Election of a Speaker.

Prior to the reading of the Speech, His Honor announced that as soon as the House had elected a Speaker he would address them. His Honor then retired to the Speaker's apartment, and Premier Mowat moved, seconded by Mr. Pardee, That Dr. Baxter, the representative of Haldimand, be the Speaker of the sixth Parliament of the Province of Ontario.

The motion was carried unanimously, and the veteran legislator was duly inducted into office.

The Lieutenant-Governor was then appraised of the election of Speaker, and returning to the dais delivered the speech.

The address in reply to the Speech from the Throne will be moved and seconded this afternoon.

Premier Mowat, who appeared to be in excellent health and spirits was the recipient of many warm congratulations. The new members are nearly all on hand and the old ones are fraternally looking after their comforts.

C Company School of Infantry formed the guard of honor, and Col. Gray's battery furnished the saluting party.

Some of the Measures to be Brought Forward.

The following are the titles of some of the more important Bills to come before the House:

To incorporate the town plot of Thornbury, County Grey.

To amend the Act re the Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Co.

Respecting the property and control of Woodstock College.

To incorporate the town of Sault Ste Marie.

To incorporate the village of Tilbury Centre and the township of Tilbury West, in Kent and Essex Counties.

To vest the government of the Ottawa City Police in the Dominion Government.

To unite the Toronto Baptist College and Woodstock College under the name of McMaster University.

To incorporate the town of Parry Sound.

To incorporate the town of Gravenhurst.

To incorporate the Niagara Tunnel and Water-Power Company.

Something for the Sals.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., despatch: Henry Edwards, aged 20, joined the Salvation Army of this place last Christmas. He forsook his old companions in sin, and said he was going to lead a new life. For a while he was one of the most earnest workers in the Army, and secured many recruits from the society he formerly moved in. He went so far as to visit the mines and implore the young men to join the Army of the Lord. He continued his good work until last Friday, when he fell from grace and returned to his sinful ways. Sunday evening last he visited the Salvation Army barracks and scoffed and laughed at the exercises. All of a sudden he put his hands over his eyes and cried out, "My God, what is the matter; I cannot see." Edwards was taken to his home by two friends. He was totally blind.

At the meeting of the Kingston School Board on Thursday night it was decided to admit all Roman Catholic children to the Public Schools free whose parents are on the assessment rolls as supporters of the said schools. Heretofore 50c. per month was charged for each pupil.

THE PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Vigorous Speeches by Mr. Redmond and Lord Hartington on Parnell's Amendment.

Mr. Redmond, Nationalist, resumed the debate on Mr. Parnell's amendment this evening in the House of Commons. He said he spoke as one soon to undergo, in company with John Dillon and others, a trial which would probably end in imprisonment for assisting in the operations of the plan of campaign. So far as the plan had been applied, Mr. Redmond said, not more than twenty estates had up to date been brought under its operations, and in no case was it proposed to deprive the landlord of his rent, but the aim was simply to enable the tenants to bank their money for protection in cases where the landlords refused to make fair reductions. In every instance in which the plan of campaign had been tried the landlords were finding it advisable to make concessions. It was mainly due to the plan that this winter there had been fewer evictions than for several years previous, and an almost total absence of outrages.

The Marquis of Hartington said the Plan of Campaign was not the main question before the House. To vote for Mr. Parnell's amendment was to vote virtually want of confidence in the Government. The other questions raised, therefore, could not be discussed on their merits, but only with reference to the effect of the amendment on the fate of the Government. Admitting that the relations between the landlords and tenants in Ireland were far from satisfactory, it was no remedy to suspend or reduce or abolish the payment of rent. Such a plan would be found no boon to the poor tenant. Continuing, Lord Hartington said the real remedies for the agrarian crisis were to be found in providing larger productive employment for the people, or in voluntary emigration conducted and supported by the local authorities. (Cheers.) Still, where landlords existed the land laws must be enforced. It would never be possible to get rid of the ultimate resort of eviction. The course of the Government in prosecuting the authors of the plan of campaign was right and straightforward. It was the duty of the Government to attack men employed in an illegal conspiracy, and prevent their leading astray tenants who were their dupes. Mr. Gladstone had declared that the plan of campaign resulted from the policy of the Government in refusing to adopt the suspension of the Evictions Bill. Could Parliament hold that, as a legitimate consequence, the rejection of any measure left the people morally entitled to take the law into their own hands and do what Parliament had refused to do? (Cheers.) If the plan of campaign was not illegal, if its enforcement was not stopped, there would be an end to all relations between landlord and tenant. It would cause an internecine war and result in the total destruction of the power of the landlord to obtain any rent excepting what the tenant chose to pay. The suppression of the "plan" was a necessity, if order was to be preserved. Mr. Parnell had referred to the probable recurrence of dynamite outrages. He admitted that Parnell was not in a position to control dynamite crimes, but he was in a position to disown them. (Cheers.) They were not disowned. Mr. Parnell contented himself with warning Parliament that if a certain course were pursued the dynamiters might resume operations. As to Home Rule, there remained a stedfast, solid barrier of a hundred votes against Mr. Gladstone's scheme. (Cheers.) It was idle and useless for the Home Rulers to present a vague resolution to the House on the ground that they had the confidence of the Irish people, knowing that they must secure the approval of the British nation.

Viscount Kilcoursie (Liberal), Samuel Storey (Radical), and Hy. H. Fowler (Liberal), spoke in favor of the amendment. Mr. Sexton adjourned the debate.

Parnell's Amendment Defeated—The Debate.

LONDON, Feb. — Thomas Sexton, Parnellite, resuming the debate on Parnell's amendment, taunted the Government on their inability to rule Ireland without the assistance of an army as large as the one needed in India. Parnell's amendment, Sexton contended, raised questions of vital and practical importance. The whole policy of the Government in Ireland—whether it was called reform of the criminal procedure law, or coercion—hinged upon the relations between the Irish landlords and their tenants. All offers on the part of the tenants to arbitrate the question of rents had been spurned, and the tenants now stood with their backs against the wall defying oppression, even the oppression of the law, because their position was morally impregnable. The tenants everywhere in Ireland were willing to pay fair rents, but the speaker believed if all the deposits banked under the Plan of Campaign by the small farmers (and which represented the utmost they were able to pay) were put into a common fund, the sum would not suffice to pay three months' rent on the basis demanded by the landlords.

Mr. Matthews stoutly defended the policy of the Government.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt made a vehement attack upon the policy that had been pursued by the present Goverment in the management of Ireland, and supported Home Rule.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach replied. He said it was the duty of the Government to enforce the law, and this they would do. It was intended to extend the provisions of the Land Purchase Act, and measures were in contemplation for the development of the industrial resources of Ireland.

The division was then taken, and Mr. Parnell's amendment was defeated by a vote of 352 to 246.

A LIVING TARGET.

A New York Boy Shoots Another Boy's Hat With His Head in it.

A New York despatch says: Frank Rivers, 15 years old, was in the street practising with a long-barrelled target pistol on Monday, when William Jackson, a colored boy, came along. Young Rivers wanted to fire at Jackson's dog for fun, but Jackson suggested that he try his skill on some of his neighbors' chickens instead. Rivers proposed a compromise. "You stand over there," he said to the colored boy, pointing to a tree, "and I'll shoot through your hat. I kin do it, and I won't hurt you." Jackson is only 13 years old, and agreed to stand as a target, but Rivers failed in his part of the performance. He hit Jackson squarely in the forehead. The ball was a small one and had little force. It circled around under the scalp without penetrating the skull, but it disturbed Jackson to think how nearly he had been killed, and, with blood streaming down his face, he set up a most energetic yell. Rivers ran away and hid in the cellar of his house until Detective Madigan found him and took him to the Harlem police court. His excuse there was plausible enough. He said Jackson's head ran up further into the hat than he had supposed, or he would not have hit him. Mrs. Rivers gave the required $700 bail for her son's release.

A FOUL CRIME.

A Husband Shoots His Young Wife—Her Babe Cries Itself to Death.

A Boulder (Col.) despatch says: Mr. and Mrs. Wendelin Mott, a young couple living eight miles from here, to all appearances had been very happy until three weeks ago, when their first child was born. Since then Mott has been very abusive and quarrelsome. On Monday morning Mott got up early, built a fire, made some coffee, drank it and sat down to smoke. His wife was still in bed with her child, and had fallen into a doze, when she was awakened by the report of a gun. She jumped up and fell to the floor unconscious, a ball having entered her shoulder and passed into her neck. In the meantime Mott disappeared. When Mrs. Mott regained consciousness she got into bed with great difficulty and sank into a stupor. When she came to herself again her child was crying, but she, having become paralyzed, was unable to reach it. The fire went out and the babe cried until midnight, when it died. Mrs. Mott's plight was not known until Tuesday night, when a relative called at the house. She cannot recover. Officers and a posse of citizens are in pursuit of the murderer.

In a New Line of Business.

Brown, No, by himself.

Robinson—Where?

Brown—In the graveyard.—Washington Critic.

Girl—Ain't that your fadder coming?

Boy—No, it's yer own!

Girl—How can you tell?

Boy—'Cos your fadder takes up both sides of ther street, and mine lies down in ther middle.

SOMEBODY BLUNDERED.

How the Italians Were Cut up in Sections by the Abyssinians.

A Rome cable says: Gen. Geire, the Italian Commander at Massowah, reports as follows: Boretti, commanding at Saati, on January 25th, at 11 a. m., saw the heights occupied by thousands of Abyssinians, who disappeared on the firing of some shells. Boretti sent out a party under Lieut. Corno, who surprised and engaged the enemy. The latter advanced intrepidly on all sides to within 300 yards of the Italian position. There was desperate fighting until 5 o'clock, when the enemy retreated. Boretti, applied for reinforcements, and Geire sent a column under Col. Decristoforis. The column was delayed by difficulty in transportation. Decristoforis asked for more men and guns. While the latter reinforcements were on the way, it was learned that the Decristoforis party were massacred after forming a square, defending themselves to the last man and cartridge. The relief party found the bodies lying in the order in which the men fought, and the enemy retiring. Many corpses were mutilated

Tales of Cold Weather.

A large cake of ice cut from the Illinois River, near Ottawa, last week, contained the body of Joseph Johnson, of Peru, Ill., who had disappeared from home several months ago.

Miss Clara Gray, who is teaching school four miles from Sac City, Ia., boards in town and walks to and from her school every morning and night, no matter how deep the snow may be or how intense the cold.

One cold morning last week an intensely practical joker of Ashtabula, O., offered a little school girl a quarter if she would kiss an iron gate-post which was covered with frost. She did so, and her tongue was badly lacerated in her attempts to release it.

Mrs. John Lute, a widow of Sargent County, D.T., drove five miles alone one of the coldest mornings of last week to haul a load of straw for her stock. On her way back the load was upset, but she reloaded it, with the thermometer at 25 degrees below zero.

During the prevalence of a blizzard in Illinois three weeks ago a straw stack on the farm of John Strawm, near Orleans, was blown down. At the same time a valuable steer disappeared from the farm, and could not be found. Last week, after having lain in concealment during the cold snap, the steer reappeared through the side of the stack, looking plump and hearty.

While trains were blockaded by the snow in Montana last month and small towns found their supplies cut off, a certain saloon-keeper drove into Bozerran and carried half a barrel of whiskey in his sleigh. As he was unloading it the barrel slipped, the head was crushed in and the precious fluid gushed forth into a snow-bank. A crowd gathered in an instant and the sweetened snow disappeared with alarming rapidity. But the owner quietly passed the hat, collected half a dollar from every man present and made the best of the misfortune.

Gladstone on Home Rule.

Mr. Gladstone, writing in support of Mr. Slagg, candidate for the parliamentary seat for Burnley, made vacant by the death of Peter Rylands, says: "For the last twelve months I have been telling the English, and the Scotch, and the Welsh, that their Parliament will continue paralyzed and its business be neglected until it settles the Irish question. The Scotch and Welsh believed that, but the southern English did not believe it and they stopped the way. They will pay heavily for the delay. Before we reach a certain conclusion we will have to pay with them, and after the thing has been done the Tories will begin to say and believe they have always been Home Rulers. Costly playing with national interests seems to be the main purpose for which the Tories exist. They have played for a certain time with all great questions for the last fifty or sixty years. When they leave off playing with one, they soon find another with which to play again. I hope that Burnley will give them a lesson."

Transmigration of Mary's Lamb.

A young lad in Kingston is the possessor of a tame pigeon which follows him wherever he goes. On Tuesday it followed him on his way to school. As soon as he saw it he carried it back to the house. After he had been in school some time the teacher saw the pigeon making its way into the school-room, and the boy had to carry the bird home a second time.—Kingston Freeman.

The Terrible Blizzard.

The blizzard in Dakota last week was the severest known for many years, and reports are coming in every day of lives lost on the prairie. The total of those lost in Dakota this winter can hardly be below the death figures of the Vermont railroad accident, while a large number will suffer permanently from freezing of parts of the body.

Business Difficulties.

The following assignments are reported: Ontario—Bowmanville, J. R. Bradley, harness-maker; Brampton, Thauburn Bros., bakers; Gravenhurst, Jos. Tuer, saw mill; Ottawa, Hugh Allan & Co., dry goods; Toronto, F. C. Norris, crockery, etc.; Thomas Houston & Co., woollens, etc. (failed).

Cardinals Gibbons and Taschereau arrived in Rome on Saturday afternoon. Father O'Connell, rector of the American College, met them at Genoa and they were received at the depot at Rome by an influential clerical deputation.

—Bob Burdette has the following to say anent the long-and-short-haul subject: "Why, anybody ought to know that it's the short haul that costs the most. You see, I am sitting in a railway parlor car down in Maine writing a postal-card to a friend in Oregon. Now, if I can get that card to the mail car, only seven car lengths ahead of me, the Government will carry it 3,000 miles for one cent. That is the long haul. But it costs me a quarter to get the porter to carry it to the postal car. That's the short haul. Then the porter loses it on his way or forgets all about it. That's the shrinkage. And there you have the whole transportation problem in a nutshell.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Buyers of costly furs who go abroad to make their purchases will be interested to hear the substance of a communication just made to the Vossische Zeitung by its Paris correspondent: "The fur of the French rabbit is in great demand at this time of the year. It figures, moreover, under all sorts of names. The easiest form in which to present it is that of "Siberian fur;" with the long hairs taken out it takes the name of "castor" closely shorn by machine it sells as "otter." Two-thirds of all the furs sold, in fact, have acquired their beauty neither in the plains of Siberia nor the waters of the Arctic Ocean, but on the back of the rabbit that disports itself in the fair fields of sunny France." Foreigners who wonder why their expensive furs fade so rapidly ought to need no further satisfaction of their curiosity.

The official inquiry into the causes of the terrible railway accident near White River Junction, on the Central Vermont Road, last Saturday morning, does not, thus far, clear up the mystery. The engineer of the fated train says that just as he came upon the bridge the bell-cord was pulled and at the signal he slacked the train. His speed was not more than eight miles an hour when the signal sounded. Looking back he saw the rear car swing off the bridge. In its fall it seemed to pull three cars with it, one after the other. Then the coupling broke and the forward part of the train was saved. This would indicate that the truck of the rear car broke and that somebody in the car realized this and gave the signal to the engineer. As nearly everybody in this car perished, the probabilities are that we shall never know more about the cause of the disaster than is known now.

Even since a few London west end ladies adopted the Bloomer costume in 1851 there have been spasmodic spurts in favor of dress reform. Of late years an annual conference has been held at which corsets, skirts, high-heeled shoes and garters have been denounced as the parents of all the evils, physical and moral, which afflict a stiff-necked generation. The annual conference of the Rational Dress Reform Association in London has just been brought to a close. The meetings were not open to the sterner sex. The platform was adorned by ladies dressed in various styles of "rationality." Viscountess Harberton, who appeared in a divided garment, delivered an address, and so did Mrs. Pfeiffer, who wore a Greek costume with modifications, but nothing positively novel seems to have been said or worn and no fresh suggestions offered. There is not in London the least sign of a disposition among women of society to adopt anything but the latest fashions of fashionable dressmakers.

While Mr. Stanley has been making the last preparations at London and Cairo for his journey into Africa, some of his assistants, sent in advance to Zanzibar, have been hiring porters and buying and packing the trade goods needed for the march. Stanley expects to arrive at Zanzibar on February 21st, and if the thousand porters he requires have been secured by that time he will doubtless depart at once on his difficult mission. He greatly prefers the Congo route, believing it to offer the easiest and safest road to Emin Bey's camp at Wadelai. It would, to be sure, take him over a month to round the Cape and reach the Congo, but he estimates that with the aid of the Congo State steamers, which King Leopold has placed at his disposal, he could reach Emin Bey in forty-five or fifty days from the mouth of the river. If, however, there is no steamer at Zanzibar that Stanley can engage at once to take his party to the Congo, he will risk the manifold perils of the overland route. It is a noteworthy fact that although the natives serve the whites as porters along a large part of the African coast, the Zanzibaris are by far the most trustworthy; and Stanley thought it necessary to go to the east coast for them, though he desired to begin his mission on the west.

Fun from the Fatherland.

"Ach, Adele, I love you like—like—like—" "Well, think it over, Herr Fritz; perhaps you can tell me to-morrow!"—Fleigende Blatter.

"Do you know Frau Z—, madame?" "Oh, yes! she is my best friend; we have no secrets from each other." "Ah, then, perhaps you can tell me how old she is?" "Oh, sir, we are not quite as intimate as all that!"—De Amsterdammer.

A talented pianist, Madame De V——, sitting at dinner by the side of Colonel Ramollot, asked him in an amiable tone: "Colonel, are you fond of music?" "Madame," replied the warrior, rolling his eyes savagely, "I am not afraid of it."—Fleigende Blatter.

Probably an Oakville Man.

The body of an unknown seaman, taken from the schooner Lucerne, which foundered off the entrance to Ashland Bay, Lake Superior, in November last, was probably that of Patrick H. Madigan, of Oakville. Mrs. Madigan has been making inquiries regarding the whereabouts of her husband, and from information she possesses there is left little doubt that he was aboard the ill-fated craft.

An increased demand for cut diamonds, which has been noticed for some time at Amsterdam, is reported also from Antwerp, which is the principal rival of Amsterdam in the repairing of diamonds for the market. The workmen engaged in the trade have decided to ask for a considerable increase of wages, and they threaten a general strike if this increase be not granted.

He (enraged and engaged)—Why, Laura, how is this? I thought you were to save those dances until I came, and here your programme is full? Laura—Oh, that is all right. I filled it out with dummy names. It saves embarrassment, you know, when disagreeable persons ask you to dance with them.

The late Prof. Archibald Alexander Hodge, of Princeton Theological Seminary, was a man of broad sympathies and considerable humor. One day an impecunious young graduate called with a letter of introduction to ask help in obtaining a pastorate. Harper's Weekly says the document stated that he had a wife and baby and was in a starving condition. "You have a wife?" asked the Professor. "Yes, sir." "And a baby?" "Yes, sir." "Is it plump and tender?" "Oh, yes, sir." "Well, why not eat the baby?"

A FIGHT WITH PECCARIES.

Animals That Will Keep Up a Siege All Night.

"Three Thousand Miles Through Brazil!" contains this animated description of a fight with peccaries: I had barely closed my eyes when I felt my hammock violently shaken, and perceived an odor of old pigstyes. It became evident that we were surrounded by some animals, for in many directions was heard the sound of bodies moving through the bush, twigs snapping, grass rustling, etc. It was a moment of suspense, but not for long, for suddenly from all around us came a blood-curdling sound of the simultaneous snapping of teeth from vast numbers of the enemy, followed by the appearance of a crowd of charging black animals rushing with wonderful speed toward a common centre — our fort. Each of us lighted a coil of wax tapers that were prepared ready for the occasion. And what a scene ensued. The fire was rapidly scattered and partly extinguished. Under and around us was a seething mass of black peccaries, barely distinguishable in the dim light, but all pushing and struggling to the front. * * The men in the hammocks, after discharging their guns, reached down and slashed with their knives at the swarming animals below them. The attack was more like the wild, reckless bravery of the Arabs of the Soudan, for as pig after pig fell squealing and disabled, scores more struggled for his place. * * They threw themselves against the fort, regardless of being struck down one after the other, and always impelled forward by those in the rear; others rushed for our hammocks, or viciously gashed the trees that gave us support. The extremely disagreeable and nauseous odors of the animals, their snapping of teeth like musketry file firing, the reports of the fire-arms, the shouts of the men, the howling and barking of the dogs and the dim light created an indescribably strange and exciting scene. Every bullet of my revolver took effect. I shouted to the men to reserve their powder and fire volleys, but it was like talking in a gale of wind at sea. The animals appeared to be in immense numbers, grunting, squealing and gnashing their teeth; but noticeable above everything was the abominable exhalations from their bodies, an odor like a combination of rank butter and garlic. * * Then came a diabolical crash of teeth from a complete circle around us, followed immediately by another wild charge, and the battle was again renewed. * * Six or seven other attacks followed, but each one became weaker, and the intervals of longer duration. The eventful night seemed interminable, and finally it was not until near daybreak that we heard the last grunt. In the morning 27 dead peccaries were found in about the camp, and several wounded, to whom it was necessary to give the coup de grace. * * * During the battle I could not help noticing the apparent method of their movements, as though they were led by chiefs. Their mode of attack is to surround in silence by a complete circle the object to be stormed; when, at a given signal, a simultaneous snapping of teeth takes place, followed by a converging rush to the centre, whereby the largest and strongest reach the front first and the smallest bring up the rear. Their retreat is carried out on an equally methodical system.

The Governor Dances on Skates.

The Vice-Regal party attended the fancy dress ball given at the Victoria Skating Rink, Montreal, on Thursday night. The Governor-General wore a short coat of dark brown velvet, trimmed with sable, black hose and breeches and a gold chain. It was in fact a Hamlet dress. The Marchioness was dressed as a Swiss peasant. The Governor-General surprised the Canadians with his dancing, which was graceful, his steps being gracefully taken and with the confidence of an expert skater. It is by no means an easy matter to dance on skates, and the effect is surprisingly graceful and impressive.

Bride and Corpse in a Week.

A few days ago, Miss Edna, eldest daughter of Mr. L. Peaslie, 2nd line, Warwick, and niece of James Busbie, of this city, was married to Abraham Warren, of Vigner, near Sarnia. They had been married but a week, when the bride was taken suddenly ill with inflammation, and in four days she died. The body was interred in Lake View Cemetery, Sarnia, yesterday. Deceased was 18 years of age and is regretted by a large circle of friends.—St. Thomas Times.

—Supt. Shields, of the Western Division of the Canadian Pacific, has left for St. Paul, Minn., to accept a similar position on the St. Paul & Manitoba Road. Before leaving Medicine Hat he was presented with a purse containing $1,500 by the employees.

EGYPTIAN SERENADE.

Sing again the song you sung
When we were together young—
When there were but you and I
Underneath the summer sky.

Sing the song, and o'er and o'er,
Though I know that nevermore
Will it seem the song you sung
When we were together young.

—Rev. George Muller, of Bristol, England, who it was reported had died in Australia, has arrived at Yokohama, and during the past two weeks has held meetings there, and in other countries which he has visited. He is now 82 years of age, but full of zeal.

—The latest styles of dressing the hair in Paris are much less exaggerated than at one time they threatened to become. High structures of puffs and curls and aigrettes have been replaced by much simpler and less elevated modes of arrangement, though in the same style. The "Diana" coiffure, formed by bringing the back hair forward and turning it over to form a single roll at the top of the head, is new and very graceful.

—The Chicago & Alton Railway seem to have reached the perfection of expensive and artistic advertising. They have issued three beautiful volumes, each a parody of one of Gilbert & Sullivan's popular operas —"Princess Ida," "Iolanthe" and "Patience." These parodies are written by D. Dalziel, and profusely illustrated in colors after the quaint style of Kate Greenaway. They are admirable specimens of color work and western railway enterprise.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S GUIDE.

How He Led the Mormon Chief Into the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

John Y. Nelson, the guide who piloted Brigham Young to the present site of Mormondom, told the story of the trip as follows to a reporter for the New York World: "It was late in the fall of 1846, I think. I was at Cottonwood Springs, Neb., living with an old Mexican half-breed, who knew every inch of the Rockies like a book. We were doing nothing in particular and ready for a job, when Brigham Young came along and asked my Mexican friend and myself to be his guides across the Rockies, promising us good pay. He had four companions, Mormon elders, I think, but I cannot remember their names. Seven in all, we started with two emigrant waggons, one of them loaded with flour, bacon, coffee and biscuit enough for two years' supply. I don't believe Brigham had an idea when he started just where he was going nor when he would get back. It was a sort of prospecting trip. He and the elders called each other 'brother,' and the old man was a good-natured, jolly sort of fellow. He talked a good deal of religious lingo, but he was not the Sunday School, pious-Jonah kind; would say 'D—— it' just the same as I would, and played a good hand at euchre. I was quite a young fellow in those days, and, as the old Mexican didn't speak much English, Brigham talked a good deal with me and tried to convert me to Mormonism.

"He was about 40, well set up, and with a big, strong head and neck. I didn't take much stock in his arguments defending polygamy, which Jo Smith had recently introduced as a revelation among the Saints. But Brigham gave me the idea of a man who was pretty firm in his opinion and actually believed what he preached.

"We didn't hurry ourselves much, making only about twenty miles a day with the waggons, pitching our tents for three or four days at a time when we got into a likely region where game was plenty, and exploring the country for miles around. I don't think we met a white man all the way across. There were lots of Indians, but they didn't trouble us, just coming into camp to trade off fresh meat or skins for bacon and coffee. Toward Christmas we struck Ham's Fork, in Western Nebraska, after making a journey of nearly a thousand miles. There we were snowed up until the spring.

"That was a particularly hard winter, and the snow was forty feet deep in places where it had drifted over the canyon. But we didn't suffer; provisions were plenty, there were lots of game, and when we couldn't get water we got snow and melted it. Our camp at Ham's Fork was pitched in a sheltered valley, and we got all the elk, antelope and bear we could shoot.

"Late in the spring, when the snow had melted, we struck camp and started straight up the mountain about forty miles. Right up on top of the mountain we found a large lake, fed by a living spring, chockfull of trout that beat anything in the world. The smallest of them was about two feet long and weighed five or six pounds, and the flavor——" The old trapper smacked his lips as the recollection of the gustatory gratification of forty years before arose in his mind.

"Brigham was all the time spying out the lay of the land, and as he looked from the top of the mountain over the level stretch of desert nearly fifty miles away he said: 'The promised land is in sight.' We made our way down the mountain without any accident worth mentioning, and when we struck the water now known as Salt Lake Brigham swallowed a mouthful and named it the Great Salt Lake. Then we struck out about six miles to the northwest, and Brigham Young stopped suddenly in the middle of the valley and shouted: 'This is the spot; this is the place revealed to me by the Great Spirit in a dream long ago. Here we will build the New Jerusalem!'

"We stayed in the neighborhood about six weeks. Brigham staked out the place so that we could find it again easily and made a sort of map of it. Then we started back to Cottonwood Springs, which we reached late in the summer. Brigham and his friends went over on to Nauvoo, Ill., and I went off on a deer hunt with my Indian friends. Next year Brigham took a large party of Mormons over, and Salt Lake City was built on the very spot to which I guided him."

A Canny Scot.

A Scotch farmer rode up to a toll-bar, and finding the gate open, he wheeled his horse round about just as he passed through, and shouted for the toll-keeper, who was invisible. "Hey, I'm sayin' fat's the damage tae git through yer gate wi' a horse?" "A shillin'," shouted the toll-keeper, making his appearance. "A shillin'," echoed the farmer, sarcastically. "No shillin' d'ye get frae me. I'll awa' hame again;" and wheeling his horse for the second time, he rode off in the direction he wished to go, chuckling at the trick he had performed upon the toll-keeper.

Mr. Kinch Kitchen has attained an enviable notoriety among his neighbors near Talapoosa because fifteen years ago he swore off from getting mad and has kept his resolution from that day till this.

Fifteen cows huddled in a Northern Pacific cut to keep from freezing to death, and a freight train came through and killed all of them.

One of a gang of ice cutters near Mount Carmel, Ill., cut out a block of ice on three sides and then laid a saw on it, remarking: "Some fool will go to pick up that saw and in he'll go." He proved to be a prophet, for forgetting his trick a few moments later he himself stepped on the ice cake and went down in seven feet of water.

A novel advertising scheme was recently introduced by a merchant in Carthage, Ill. A series of prodigious boot tracks were painted leading from each side of the public square to his establishment. The scheme, it is said, worked to perfection, for everybody seemed curious enough to follow the tracks to their destination.

A Welsh couple from a mining settlement near Pottsville, Pa., recently obtained a marriage license from Register Johnson. Then they went home happy in the thought they were man and wife, and lived together for two or three weeks before they found out that a minister or a 'Squire was necessary before they could be really married.

WHAT SOME MEN NEVER LEARN.

That the Baby is the Key to the Domestic Situation Every Time.

It is amazing how slow some men are to find out that the baby is the key to the domestic situation. No woman ever quarrels with a man who plays regularly with the baby. No woman ever really loved a man who ignored the baby. Doesn't the poet say that "hell hath no fury like a woman with a baby scorned?" That isn't exactly it, but it's near enough. In the majority of suits for divorce you will find there was no baby. The baby is down on divorces every time. The baby is the presiding judge in the court of matrimonial arbitration, and he keeps it in perpetual session. If there is a strike the baby orders it off and both parties back to work on the old terms. If you have the baby on your side, the baby's mother can be counted to send a solid delegation in your favor to any kind of convention you can think of. The babies are all peacemakers, and "blessed are the peacemakers," you know. Moreover, the man who has bribed the baby into his confidence will tell you that the little citizen in pink knows more than you give him credit for. Some doctor's books will tell you that babies don't talk intelligently till they're about eighteen months old. This is a medical delusion. A healthy baby is a brilliant conversationalist at three months old. People who know their language—it is not quite ours—can and do talk with them by the hour. You can tell the baby that you feel blue, and he will push his fist in your eye, which gives you the denial direct. Go on and tell him that you have had a bad week's business and have lost money. The moment you say "Money" the baby will blow big bubbles from his red lips; babies have infinite contempt for men who count their gains and losses in money. Now, tell baby that you think he's the pittiest little dot of a baby, bess it, dat ever was in dis world, and he will immediately fall on one side of your neck and yank your hair, which means that now you are talking common sense. It is Victor Hugo, the biggest-hearted Frenchman of the century, who sings of babies:

In our light, bitter world of wrongs
They come; God gives us them awhile.
His speech is in their stammering tongue
And His forgiveness in their smile.

Late Fashion Notes.

Knots of platinum and gold heavily chased are liked for linked sleeve buttons.

Among fashionable women the favorite ring is a large shield-shaped turquoise surrounded with diamonds.

Black braiding on white cloth vests and panels is not new, but is still worn, generally upon house dresses for those in mourning.

Ladies beginning to lay aside mourning wear gray cashmere combined with white corded silk and trimmed with steel passementerie.

There is a tendency to return to some old-fashioned colors under new names. A bright blue shade is called "Jubilee blue," in honor of the Queen.

A light pink that is being brought out in velvets to combine with black lace is much like the old Magenta shades and is called Charles X. pink. Anemone is a new reddish purple, much prettier than the heliotrope now worn.

India silks are more popular than French foulards, owing to their superior durability. White India silks, with all-over patterns of graceful lines in black, blue, brown or scarlet, will make pretty summer dresses, and there are many Watteau and Pompadour designs of roses and pinks in pale and charming colors. Lace is no longer used in profusion to trim these light silks, velvet having superceded it.

Surahs with large, wide diagonal twills are shown in all solid colors and in many plaids, some of the prettiest being dark blue crossed with pink or lighter blue; Suede, with bars of rose and green, and green grounds barred with pink. These are to be made up in entire dresses, not combinations, with velvet collar, vest and cuffs; the skirts bordered with velvet, or with velvet laid in between the plaits.

The sleazy diagonal wools of light quality are shown in all dark colors, with white lines and bars, like that which had such immense popularity last summer. However, the method of making them up will be quite different, the kilt plaits and smooth short lavandeuse drapery being replaced by plain skirts and voluminous Grecian drapery. The sailor hats almost invariably worn with these suits last year will be replaced by the brimless turban.

Drab and tan shades, brown and gray are largely represented in what is called covert cloth for short covert coats to be worn with suits of wool of lighter colors, or as an occasional wrap to go with almost any dress. There are also loosely woven English cloths in small blocks of two or three colors—such as olive with blue or red with brown—to make travelling suits or the suits worn in the morning for shopping, or any use, except for visits and afternoon entertainments.

There is already a large display in all the shops of sateens, batistes and other cotton goods, because such dresses are made up during the leisure of Lent. Panels of embroidery, borders for the lower skirt and entire skirts of embroidery are special features of these pretty gowns. The various shades of heliotrope, so popular this winter, reappear in the sateens, as well as several of the new greens and grays. The fancy is to make them with plain skirts of solid colors, the drapery being figured in white or ecru.

Miss Elizabeth Atkinson, who recently died in Burlington, N. J., aged 98 years, had not been out of her room for eighteen years.

It is reported from Maine that the English sparrows are growing white, as a result of their becoming acclimated. White feathers have been often noticed this winter on the sparrows.

A bill has been introduced into the Tennessee Legislature offering to the United States the Hermitage farm, famous as the home of Andrew Jackson, as an asylum for disabled and invalid soldiers. The bill provides that Mrs. Sarah Jackson, the adopted daughter of Old Hickory, shall be allowed a home and maintenance upon the farm for life.

NEW THINGS JUST OUT.

Wood Wool—Sewing Machine Improvements—Cork Bricks for Partitions.

The best quality of that growingly useful article, wood wool, is obtained from the Riga fir tree, by means of a machine specially adapted to the purpose. This ingenious machine consists of a cast-iron frame resting upon three iron supports, and carrying a driving shaft, which is actuated by two pulleys, fast and loose; to this shaft is fitted a fly-wheel, one spoke being provided with a pin that receives one of the extremities of a connecting rod, the other extremity being connected with the knife-carrier—this latter, which also rests upon the iron frame, sliding in iron guides, and carrying a set of peculiar knives, so arranged that the wood is cut in both the backward and the forward motions of the knife-carrier. The wood is held upright by the machine by suitable arrangements, permitting the introduction of blocks of a few fractions of an inch long; the wood is shoved forward under the knives by means of a click, that causes it to advance the requisite distance at every revolution of the fly-wheel, every movement thus aiding in perfecting the result.—La Nature, Paris.

The new sewing machine contrived by an Edinburgh inventor claims to be the simplest yet made for effecting the lock-stitch. It is on the rotary shuttle principle, the novelty of it lying in a circular saucer-shaped shuttle, which is set up on edge and laid with its flat side against the left-hand end of the lower shaft, which is held in position by a revolving cup. The axis of the shaft, the shuttle and the cup, being in line and revolving together, the result is an easy motion far excelling the old reciprocating shuttle.—New York Sun.

For some time past experiments have been made in Germany with a composition of cork, sand and lime molded into bricks for the construction of light partition walls. This, it is said, excludes sound better than brickwork, and is also light and a good non-conductor of heat.—New York Sun.

A Novelty in Women's Dress.

A novelty in ladies' dress has been brought out at the Pro-Cathedral, Melbourne, Australia, and the originator is Rev. J. E. Bromby, the clergyman who officiates there. It is nothing more nor less than a surplice for the ladies in the choir who supplement the singing of the men and boys. The Church of England Messenger on the spot having criticised the innovation adversely, Mr. Bromby preached on the subject. The following is an extract from his sermon: "It cannot be denied that, considering the extraordinary caprices of fashion in the matter of female attire, it would offend the taste to see the simple uniformity of surpliced men and boys disturbed by the intrusion of the grotesque and daily changing inventions of the Paris milliner. What better solution, then, of the difficulty could there be than to clothe the female members of the choir in an ecclesiastical vestment of such a suitable type as should harmonize well with the surroundings of their position?"

I was attacked with rheumatism and tried usual remedies without success. I then took McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant, and it drove rheumatism out of my system. With confidence I recommend it to those similarly afflicted.—Rev. James Brock, Kingston, Ont.

"Illinois whiskey is dangerous stuff, even in the bottle. An Odin physician bought a flask for medicinal purposes and set it on the table for a moment. It exploded with a bang, the bottle was shattered, and the liquor where it fell on the table cloth burned it like acid.

are very uncertain property; for every paying mine a hundred exist that do not pay. But if you write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, you will receive, free, full particulars about their new business, and learn how some have made over $50 in a single day at it. You can live at home and earn from $5 to $25 and upwards per day wherever you are located. Both sexes; all ages. Capital not required; you are started free. Send your address and all will be proved to you.

Almost without a dissenting voice, the House Committee on Shipping yesterday resolved to make a favorable report on Mr. Dingley's Bill to protect the fisheries of the United States. The Bill makes liable to seizure and forfeiture any foreign vessels found taking fish of any kind within three marine miles off the shores of the United States.

When a drop of oil is placed upon the surface of water it rapidly spreads in all directions, forming a film of exceeding tenuity, and affecting the waves as if a sheet or carpet of thin, flexible, elastic, and yet tenacious substance, like rubber was spread over the waves.

I CURE FITS!

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a lifelong study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Paste it on your front door, that there will be a grand Orange Soiree at Eugenia, under the auspices of L.O.L. No. 1118, on Tuesday, March 15th. Grand addresses, splendid recitations, charming vocal and instrumental music. Tea served at 7 o'clock p.m., chair taken at 8. Admission 25 cents. Save your quarters for this feast of good things.

Professors Robertson and Moyre will address a meeting of Centre Grey Farmers' Institute at Rocklyn, on Thursday, March 10th, and at Flesherton on Friday, March 11th. See advt. elsewhere for particulars.

Mr. A. G. Hunter shocked Dundalk school children recently with a galvanic battery. We would like if he could come to Flesherton and shock some of the little boys and girls who persist in using our sidewalks as toboggan slides.

We want this question of a public library thoroughly discussed by our citizens. Now is the time to move. We are glad to know that a prominent resident of Flesherton Station is taking an active part in the agitation. Unity is strength.

Grey Spring Assizes will be held in the Court House, Owen Sound, on Monday, March 28th, his lordship, Judge O'Connor, presiding. The Chancery Spring Sittings will be held in same place, on Monday, March 14th, his lordship, Judge Proudfoot, presiding.

Mr. S. G. Ketchum has resumed control of the Dufferin Post. It is almost needless to add, that the Post will maintain its reputation, as a wide-awake local and family journal, under the skilful management of our clever and versatile friend, Ketchum.

Rev. Mr. Mahood and Mr. A. Rowe, of Dundalk, were in Flesherton on Tuesday last. Their object in visiting our town was the formation here of a Young Men's Protestant Benevolent Association. We believe enough names were secured for this purpose.

Two young-old ladies from nowhere in particular called on a number of our townspeople Tuesday afternoon. They didn't wear false teeth, and, judging from the rapidity of their movements, we should say their bones weren't "out of jint with roomatiz."

Mr. Wm. Barnhouse has been confined to his bed, by inflammation of the lungs, for the past week or so. We are pleased to know he is getting better. A son of Mr. Geo. Dinwoody's has also been down with the same disease, but we have not heard whether he is yet convalescent or not.

Notwithstanding Sunday's blizzard, the C. P. R. carried its passengers, &c., pretty much the same as usual on Monday, on the T. G. & B. branch. Thornbury's wheelbarrow road has gone into winter quarters about 10 feet under the snow! What a grand thing it is to live in a place like Flesherton!

We would tell our readers all about the big storm last Thursday, were it not for the fact that the majority of them probably know more about it than we do ourself. Some papers seem to make it a point to give information where it is not at all neccessary. In that particular please count THE ADVANCE out every time.

A member of the "broom brigade" playfully drew his broom across the Agricultural Editor's back, on Wednesday of last week, as the latter was entering the Flesherton post-office. And now the report is current, that we were dragged out of our office and swept with the broom! A spirit of wickedness pervades some people about election time!

One day last week several of Dr. Landerkin's supporters came out to Flesherton in order to ascertain how the election went in South Grey. Some wag told them Dr. Jamieson was elected, whereupon they returned to their several abodes something after the manner of a funeral cortege. By this time, however, their grief has been turned into joy.

A purgative medicine should possess tonic and curative, as well as cathartic properties. This combination of ingredients may be found in Ayer's Pills. They strengthen and stimulate the bowels, causing natural action.

Mr. W. W. Trimble, of Flesherton, sold his well bred mare to Mr. W. L. Young, of Markdale, for a cool $200, and has refused $100 for his four month old colt. The mare was sired by Old Clear Grit, dam by Imported Lord Byron; and the colt was sired by the great trotting stallion, Joe Gale, record 2:28. Who says it doesn't pay to raise good stock.

Kimberley Sabbath School's annual Tea-Meeting will be held on Tuesday next, March 8th. Tea served from 6 to 7 o'clock p.m. Afterwards, addresses by Revs. Hoskins, Cornish, and Corcoran, and recitations, dialogues, &c. will be in order. Miss S. A. Thompson will preside at the organ. Music by the children will be a feature. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents. See bills.

Our highly esteemed marble cutter, Mr. E. Vanzant, is rapidly extending his business in all directions. His material is always exactly as represented and his work artistic. Monopoly has received a sledge-hammer blow since Mr. Vanzant located in Flesherton. Mr. V. is a thoroughly reliable business man, whom we have no hesitation whatever in recommending to the public.

A valuable cap, belonging to a commercial traveller stopping at the Flesherton hotel, was discovered missing on Sunday last. A tramp, who had been prowling around the place, being suspected of the theft, was duly arrested, but, although carefully examined, the missing article was not found on his person. The tramp got several good square meals and a free nights lodging on the head of it.

The Standard tells us about three Markdale boys who recently made an attempt to take the C. P. R. train for the wilds of Muskoka. They were evidently students of "Jessie James," but the romantic nonsense was knocked out of their heads by the parent of one of the boys, who nipped their reckless scheme in the bud. They had in store several pairs of boots and socks, a web of flannel, a chunk of beef, some bottled whiskey, $20 in cash and several other articles. "Sic transit gloria mundi."

A Goose Story.

During the thaw of a couple of weeks or so ago, a pair of geese belonging to Mr. Jos. LeGard, Artemesia, suddenly disappeared. Search was made in vain for them, until nine days afterwards they were found in a stream of water under the ice. They had got in a hole which was made for a wateringplace for stock, and swam underneath. A plank was placed on the underside of the waterhole to retain the water, and thus the geese were unable to get out. When found, they were in better condition than when they were lost.

Curry Got Through.

The genial mail carrier between Epping and Flesherton, Mr. James Curry, has a hard row to how when the weather is rough and stormy. But whether the snow is piled up like mountains, or otherwise, Curry is bound to "get there with both feet." Men like Curry, Parks and the Durham carrier, deserves gold medals. Few are cognizant of the perils encountered by these brave men during the winter season. Long life to them, say we.

The Dear Little Wife at Home.

The dear little wife at home, John,
With ever so much to do,
Stitches to set, and babies to put
And so many thoughts of you
The beautiful household fairy,
Filling your heart with light
Whatever you meet to-day, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

For though you are worn and weary,
You needn't be cross or curt,
There are words like darts to gentle hearts,
There are looks that wound and hurt;
With the key in the latch at home, John,
Drop troubles out of sight,
To the dear little wife who is waiting
Go cheerily home to-night.

You know she will come to meet you,
A smile on her sunny face,
And your wee little girl, as pure as a pearl,
Will be there in her childish grace;
And the boy, his father's pride, John,
With the eyes so brave and bright;
From the strife and the din to the peace, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

What though the tempter try you,
Though the shafts of adverse fate
May whisper near and the sky be drear,
And the laggard fortune wait!
You are passing rich already,
Let the haunting fears take flight;
With the faith that wins success, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

On the 20th of January, Alston's Horse having moved down by easy marches from Pretoria, camped at Rorke's Drift, on the Buffalo River, not far from a store and thatchet building used as a hospital, which were destined to become historical. Here orders reached them to march on the following day and join No. 3 column, which was Lord Chelmsford himself, and which was camped about nine miles from the Buffalo River at a spot called Isandhlwana, or the "Place of the Little Hand.' Next day, the 21st of January, the corps moved on accordingly, and following the waggon-track that runs past the Inhlazatye Mountain, by mid-day came to the camp where about twenty-five hundred men of all arms were assembled under the immediate command of Colonel Glynn. Their camp, which was about eight hundred yards square, was pitched facing a wide plain, with its back toward a precipitous, slab-sided hill, of the curious formation sometimes to be seen in South Africa. This was Isandhlwana.

"Hullo!" said Alston, as, on reaching the summit of the neck over which the waggon-road runs, they came in sight of the camp, "they are not entrenched. By Jove," he added, after scanning the camp carefully, "they haven't even got a waggon-laager!" and he whistled expressively.

"What do you mean?" asked Ernest. Mr. Alston so rarely showed surprise that he knew there must be something very wrong.

"I mean, Ernest, that there is nothing to prevent this camp from being destroyed, and every soul in it, by a couple of Zulu regiments, if they choose to make a night attack. How are they to be kept out, I should like to know, in the dark, when you can't see to shoot them, unless there is some barrier? These officers, fresh from home, don't know what a Zulu charge is, that is very clear. I only hope they won't have occasion to find out. Look there," and he pointed to a waggon lumbering along before them, on the top of which among a lot of other miscellaneous articles, lay a bundle of cricketing bats and wickets, "they think they are going on a picnic. What is the use, too, I should like to know, of sending four feeble columns sprawling over Zululand, to run the risk of being crushed in detail by a foe that can move from point to point at the rate of fifty miles a day, and which can at any moment slip past them and turn Natal into a howling wilderness? There it is no use grumbling; I only hope I may be wrong. Get back to your troop, Ernest, and let us come into camp smartly. Form fours—trot?

On arrival in the camp, Mr. Alston learned, on reporting himself to the officer commanding, that two strong parties of mounted men under the command of Major Dartnell were out on a reconnaissance toward the Inhlazatye Mountain, in which direction the Zulus were supposed to be in force. The orders he received were to rest his horses, as he might be required to join the mounted force with Major Dartnell on the morrow.

That night, as Alston and Ernest stood together at the door of their tent smoking a pipe before turning in, they had some conversation. It was a beautiful night, and the stars shone brightly. Ernest looked at them, and thought on how many of man's wars those stars had looked.

"Star-gazing?" asked Mr. Alston.

"I was contemplating our future homes," said Ernest, laughing.

"Ah, you believe that, do you? think you are immortal, and that sort of thing?"

"Yes; I believe that we shall live many lives, and that some of them will be there," and he pointed to the stars. "Don't you?"

"I don't know. I think it rather presumptuous. Why should you suppose that for you is reserved a bright destiny among the stars more than for these?" and he put out his hand and clasped several of a swarm of flying-ants which was passing at the time. "Just think how small must be the difference between these ants and us in the eyes of a Power who can produce both. The same breath of life animates both. These have their homes, their government, their colonies, their drones and workers. They enslave and annex, lay up riches, and, to bring the argument to an appropriate conclusions, make peace and war. What then is the difference? We are bigger, walk on two legs, have a large capacity for suffering, and—we believe, a soul. Is it so great that we should suppose that for us is reserved a heaven, or all the glorious worlds which people space, for these annihilation? Perhaps we are at the top of the tree of developement, and for them may be the future, for us the annihilation. Who knows? There, fly away, and make the most of the present, for nothing else is certain."

"You overlook religion entirely."

"Religion? Which religion? There are so many. Our Christian God, Buddha, Mohammed, Brahma, all number their countless millions of worshippers. Each promises a different thing, each commands the equally intense belief of his worshippers, for with them all blind faith is a condition precedent; and each appears to satisfy their spiritual aspirations. Can all of these be true religions? Each holds the other false and outside the pale; each tries to convert the other, and fails. There are many lesser ones of which the same thing may be said."

"But the same spirit underlies them all."

"Perhaps. There is much that is noble in all religions, but there is also much that is terrible. To the actual horrors and wearing anxieties of physical existence, religion bids us add on the vaguer horrors of a spiritual existence, which are to be absolutely endless. The average Christian would be uncomfortable if you deprived him of his hell and his personal devil. For myself, I decline to believe in such things. If there is a hell it is in this world; this world is the place of expiation for the sins of the world, and the only real devil is the devil of man's evil passions."

"It is possible to be religious and be a good man without believing in hell," said Ernest.

"Yes, I think so, otherwise my chance is a poor one. Besides, I do not deny the Almighty Power. I only deny the cruelty that is attributed to Him. It may be that from the accumulated mass of the wrong and bloodshed and agony of this hard world, that Power is building up some high purpose. Out of the bodies of millions of living creatures Nature worked out her purpose and made the rocks, but the process must have been unpleasant to the living creatures by whose humble means the great strata were reared up. They lived, to die in billions, that tens of thousands of years afterward there might be a rock. It may be so with us. Our tears and blood and agony may produce some solid end that now we cannot guess; their volume, which cannot be wasted, for nothing is wasted, may be building up the rocks of God's far-off purpose. But that we shall be tortured here for a time in order that we may be indefinitely tortured there," and he pointed to the stars, "that I will never believe. Look at the mist rising from that hollow; so does the reek of the world's misery rise as an offering to the world's gods. The mist will cease to rise, and fall again in rain, and bring a blessing; but the incense of human suffering rises night and day for so long as the earth shall endure, nor does it fall again in dews of mercy. And yet Christians, who declare that God is love, declare too that for the vast majority of their fellow-creatures this processis to continue from millennium to millennium."

"It depends on our life, they say."

"Look here, Ernest, a man can do no more than he can. When I got to the age of discretion, which I put at eight-and-twenty—you have hardly reached it yet, my boy, you are nothing but a babe—I made three resolutions: always to try and do my duty, never to turn my back on a poor man or a friend in trouble, and, if possible, not to make love to my neighbor's wife. Those resolutions I have often broken more or less either in the spirit or the letter, but in the main I have stuck to them, and I can put my hand upon my heart to-night and say, 'I have done my best!' And so I go my path, turning neither to the right nor to the left, and when Fate finds me, I shall meet him fearing nothing, for I know he has wreaked his worst upon me, and can only at the utmost bring me eternal sleep; and hoping nothing because my experience here has not been such as to justify the hopes of any happiness for man, and my vanity is not sufficiently strong to allow me to believe in the intervention of a superior power to save so miserable a creature from the common lot of life. Good-night."

On the following day his fate found him.

CHAPTER XXXV.

ISANDHLWANA.

Midnight came, and the camp was sunk in sleep. Up to the sky, whither it was decreed their spirits should pass before the dark closed in again and hid their mangled corpses, floated the faint breath of some fourteen hundred men. There they lay, sleeping the healthy sleep of vigorous manhood, their brains busy with the fantastic madness of a hundred dreams, and little recking of the inevitable morrow. There, in his dreams, the white man saw his native village, with its tall, wind-swayed elms, and the gray old church that for centuries had watched the last slumber of his race; the Kafir, the sunny slope of fair Natal, with the bright light dancing on the cattle's horns, and the green of the gardens where for his well-being his wives and children toiled. To some that night came dreams of high ambition, of brave adventure, crowned with the perfect triumph we never reach: to some, visions of beloved faces long since passed away: to some, the reflected light of a far-off home, and echoes of the happy laughter of little children. And so their lamps wavered hither and thither in the spiritual breath of sleep, flickering wildly, ere they went out forever.

The night-wind swept in sad gusts across Isandhlwana's plain, tossing the green grass which to-morrow would be red. It moaned against Inhlazatye's Mountain and died upon Upindo, fanning the dark faces of a host of warriors who rested there upon their spears, sharpened for the coming slaughter. And as it breathed upon them they turned, those brave soldiers of U.Cetywayo—"born to be killed," as their saying runs, at Cetywayo's bidding, and, grasping their assegais, raised themselves to listen. It was nothing, death was not yet; death for the morrow, sleep for the night

A little after one o'clock on the morning of the 22nd of January, Ernest was roused by the sound of a horse's hoofs and the harsh challenge of the sentries. "Dispatch from Major Dartnell," was the answer, and the messenger passed on. Half an hour more and the reveille was sounded, and the camp hummed in the darkness like a hive of bees making ready for the dawn.

Soon it was known that the general and Colonel Glynn were about to move out to the support of Major Dartnell, who reported a large force of the enemy in front of him, with six companies of the second battalion of the Twenty-fourth Regiment, four guns and the mounted infantry.

At dawn they left.

At eight o'clock a report arrived from a picket, stationed about a mile away on a hill to the north of the camp, that a body of Zulus was approaching from the north-east.

At nine o'clock the enemy showed over the crest of the hills for a few minutes and then disappeared.

At ten o'clock Colonel Durnford arrived from Rorke's Drift with a rocket battery and two hundred and fifty mounted native soldiers, and took over the command of the camp from Colonel Pulleine. As he came up he stopped for a moment to speak to Alston, whom he knew, and Ernest noticed him. He was a handsome, soldier-like man, with his arm in a sling, a long, fair mustache, and a worn, anxious expression of face.

At ten-thirty Colonel Durnford's force, divided into two portions, was, with the rocket battery, pushed some miles forward to ascertain the enemy's movements, and a company of the Twenty-fourth was directed to take up a position on the hill about a mile to the north of the camp. Meanwhile, the enemy, which they afterward heard consisted of the Undi Corps, the Nokenke and Umcitu Regiments, and the Nkobamokosi Regiments and Imbonambi Regiments, in all about twenty-thousand men, were resting about two miles from Isandhlwana, with no intention of attacking that day. They had not yet been "moutied" (doctored) and the condition of the moon was not propitious.

Unfortunately, however, Colonel Durnford's mounted Basutus, in pushing forward, came upon a portion of the Umcitu Regiment, and fired on it, whereupon the Umcitu came into action, driving Durnford's Horse before them, and then engaged the company of the Twenty-fourth, which had been stationed on the hill to the north of the camp, and after stubborn resistance, annihilating it. It was followed by the Nokenke, Imbonambi and Nkobamakosi Regiments, who executed a flanking movement, and threatened the front of the camp. For a while the Undi Corps, which formed the chest of the army, held its ground. Then it marched off to the right, and directed its course to the north of Isandhlwana Mountain, with the object of turning the position.

Meanwhile, the remaining companies of the Twenty-fourth were advanced to various positions in front of the camp, and engaged the enemy, for a while holding him in check; the two guns under Major Smith shelling the Nokenke Regiment, which formed his left centre, with great effect. The shells could be seen bursting amid the dense masses of Zulus, who were coming on slowly and in perfect silence, making large gaps in their ranks, which instantly closed up over the dead.

At this point the advance of the Undi Regiment to the Zulu right and the English left was reported; and Alston's horse was ordered to proceed, and if possible to check it. Accordingly they left, and riding behind the company of the Twenty-fourth on the hill, to the north of the camp, which was now hotly engaged with the Umcitu and Durnford's Basutus, who, fighting splendidly, were slowly being pushed back, made from the north side of Isandhlwana. As soon as they got on to the high ground, they got sight of the Undi, who, something over three thousand strong, were running swiftly in a formation of companies, about half a mile away to the northward.

"By Heaven! they mean to turn the mountain, and seize the waggon-load," said Mr. Alston. "Gallop!"

The troop dashed down the slope toward a pass in a spur of the ridge, which would command the path of the Undi, as they did so breaking through and killing two or three of a thin line of Zulus, that formed the extreme point of one of the horns or nippers, by means of which the enemy intended to inclose the camp and crush it.

After this, Alston's Horse saw nothing of the general fight; but it may be as well to briefly relate what happened. The Zulus of the various regiments pushed slowly on toward the camp, notwithstanding their heavy losses. Their object was to give time to the horns or nippers to close round it. Meanwhile, those in command realized too late the extreme seriousness of the position, and began to concentrate the various companies. Too late! The enemy saw that the nippers had closed. He knew, too, that the Undi could not be far off the waggon-road, the only way of retreat; and so, abandoning his silence, and his slow advance, he raised the Zulu war-shout, and charged in from a distance of from six to eight hundred yards.

Up to this time the English loss had been small, for the shooting of the Zulus was vile. The Zulus, on the contrary, had, especially during the last half-hour before they charged, lost heavily. But now the tables turned. First the Natal Contingent, seeing that they were surrounded, bolted, and laid open the right and rear flanks of the troops. In poured the Zulus, so that most of the soldiers had not even time to fix bayonets. In another minute our men were being assegaied right and left, and the retreat on the camp had become a fearful rout. But even then there was nowhere to run to. The Undi Corps (which afterward passed on and attacked the post at Rorke's Drift) already held the waggon-road, and the only practical way of retreat was down a gully to the south of the road. Into this the broken fragments of the force plunged wildly, and after them and mixed up with them went their Zulu foes, massacring every living thing they came across.

So the camp was cleared. When a couple of hours afterward, Commandant Lonsdale, of Lonsdale's Horse, was sent back by General Chelmsford to ascertain what the firing was about, he could see nothing wrong. The tents were standing, the waggons were there; there were even soldiers moving about. It did not occur to him that it was the soldiers' coats which were moving on the backs of Kafirs; and that the soldiers themselves would never move again. So he rode quickly up to the headquarter tents; out of which, to his surprise, there suddenly stalked a huge, naked Zulu, smeared all over with blood, and waving in his hand a bloody assegai.

Having seen enough, he then rode back again to tell the general that his camp was taken.

To God's good providence, and Cetywayo's clemency, rather than to our own wisdom, do we owe it that all the outlyin homesteads in Natal were not laid in ashes and men, women and children put to the assegai.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THE END OF ALSTON'S HORSE.

Alston's Horse soon reached the bridge, past which the Undi were commencing to run, at a distance of about three hundred and fifty yards, and the order was given to dismount and line it. This they did, one man in every four keeping a few paces back to hold the horses of his section. Then they opened fire; and next second came back the sound of the thudding of the bullets on the shields and bodies of the Zulu warriors.

Ernest, seated up high on his great black horse, "the Devil," for the officers did not dismount, could see how terrible was the effect of that raking fire, delivered as it was, not by raw English boys, who scarcely knew one end of a rifle from the other, but by men, all of whom could shoot, and many of whom were crack shots. All along the line of the Undi companies men threw up their arms and dropped dead, or staggered out of the ranks wounded. But the main body never paused. By-and-by they would come back and move the wounded, or kill them if they were not likely to recover.

Soon, as the range got longer, the fire began to be less deadly, and Ernest could see that fewer men were dropping.

"Ernest," said Alston, galloping up to him, "I am going to charge them. Look, they will soon cross the donga, and reach the slopes of the mountain, and we shan't be able to follow them on the broken ground."

"Isn't it rather risky?" asked Ernest, somewhat dismayed at the idea of launching their little clump of mounted men at the moving mass before them.

"Risky? Yes, of course it is, but my orders were to delay the enemy as much as possible, and the horses are fresh. But my lad"—and he bent toward him and spoke low—"it doesn't much matter whether we are killed charging or running away. I am sure that the camp must be taken; there is no hope. Good-by, Ernest; if I fall, fight the corps as long as possible, and kill as many of those devils as you can; and if you survive, remember to make off well to the left. The regiments will have passed by then. God bless you, my boy! Now order the bugler to sound the 'cease fire,' and let the men mount."

"Yes, sir.';

They were the last words Alston ever spoke to him, and Ernest often remembered, with affectionate admiration, that even at that moment he thought more of his friend's safety than he did of his own. As to their tenor, Ernest had already suspected the truth, though, luckily, the suspicion had not as yet impregnated the corps. Mazook, too, who as usual was with him, mounted upon a Basutu pony, had just informed him that, in his (Mazook's) opinion, they were all as good as ripped up, (alluding to the Zulu habit of cutting a dead enemy open), and adding a consolatory remark to the effect that man can die but once, and "good job too."

But, strangely enough, he did not feel afraid; indeed, he never felt quieter in his life than he did in that hour of near death. A wild expectancy thrilled his nerves, and looked out of his eyes. "What would it be like?" he wondered. And in another minute all such thoughts were gone, for he was at the head of his troop, ready for the order.

Alston, followed by the boy Roger, galloped swiftly round, seeing that the formation was right, and then gave the word to unsheath the short swords with which he had insisted upon the corps being armed. Meanwhile, the Undi were drawing on to a flat plain, four hundred yards or more broad, at the foot of the mountain, a very suitable spot for, I say, any manœuvre.

"Now, men of Alston's Horse, there is the enemy before you. Let me see how you can go through them. Charge!"

"Charge!" re-echoed Ernest.

"Charge!" roared Sergeant-Major Jones, brandishing his sword.

Down the slope they go, slowly at first; now they are on the plain, and the pace quickens to a hand-gallop.

Ernest feels his great horse gather himself together and spring along beneath him; he hears the hum of astonishment rising from the dense black mass before them as it halts to receive the attack; he glances round, and sees the set faces and determined look upon the features of his men, and his blood boils up with a wild exhilaration, and for awhile he tastes the fierce joy of war.

Quicker still grows the pace; now he can see the white round the dark eyeballs of the Zulus.

"Crash!" they are among them, trampling them down, hewing them down, thrusting, slashing, stabbing and being stabbed. The air is alive with assegais, and echoes with the savage Zulu war-cries and with the shouts of the gallant troopers, fighting now as troopers have not often fought before. Presently, as in a dream, Ernest sees a huge Zulu seize Alston's horse by the bridle, and raise his assegai. Then the boy Roger, who is by his father's side, makes a point with his sword, and runs the Zulu through. He falls, but next moment the lad is attacked by more, is assegaied and falls fighting bravely. Then Alston pulls up, and turning, shoots with his revolver at the men who have killed his son. Two fall, another runs up, and with a shout, drives a great spear right through Alston, so that it stands out a hand-breadth behind his back. On to the body of his son, he too, falls and dies. Next second the Zulu's head is cleft in twain down to the chin. That was Jeremy's stroke.

All this time they are travelling on, leaving a broad, red lane of dead and dying in their track. Presently it was done; they had passed right through the Impi. But out of sixty-four men they had lost their captain and twenty troopers. As they emerged Ernest noticed that his sword was dripping blood, and his sword-hand stained red. Yet he could not at that moment remember having killed anybody.

Alston was dead, and he was now in command of what remained of the corps. They were in no condition to charge again, for many horses and some men were wounded. So he led them round the rear of the Impi, which, detaching a company of about three hundred men to deal with the remnants of the troop, went on its way with lessened number, and filled with admiration at the exhibition of a courage in no way inferior to their own.

This company, running swiftly, took possession of the ridge, down which the troop had charged, and by which alone it would be possible for Ernest to retreat, and, taking shelter behind stones, began to pour in an inaccurate but galling fire on the little party of whites. Ernest charged up through them, losing two more men and several horses in the process; but what was his horror, on reaching the crest of the ridge, to see about a thousand Zulus, drawn up, apparently in reserve, in the neck of the pass leading to the plain beyond! To escape through them would be almost impossible, for he was crippled with wounded and dismounted men, and the pace of a force is the pace of the slowest. Their position was desperate, and looking round at his men, he could see that they thought so too.

His resolution was soon taken. A few paces from where he had for a moment halted the remainder of the corps, was a little eminence, something like an early Saxon tumulus. To this he rode, and, dismounting, turned his horse loose, ordering his men to do the same. So good was the discipline, and so great his control over them, that there was no wild rushes to escape; they obeyed, realizing their desperate case, and formed a ring round the rise.

"Now, men of Alston's Horse," said Ernest, "we have done our best, let us die our hardest."

The men set up a cheer, and next minute the Zulus creeping up under shelter of the rocks which were strewed around attacked them with fury.

In five minutes in spite of the withering fire which they poured in upon the surrounding Zulus, six more of the little band were dead. Four were shot, two were killed in a rush made by about a dozen men, who, reckless of their own life, determined to break through the white man's ring. They perished in the attempt, but not before they had stabbed two of Alston's Horse. The remainder, but little more than thirty men, retired a few paces farther up the little rise, so as to contract their circle, and kept up a ceaseless fire upon the enemy. The Zulus, thanks to the accurate shooting of the white men, had by this time lost more than fifty of their number, and, annoyed at being put to such a loss by a foe numerically so insignificant, they determined to end the matter with a rush. Ernest saw their leader, a great, almost naked fellow, with a small shield and a necklace of lion's claws, walking, utterly regardless of the pitiless rifle-fire, from group to group, and exhorting them. Taking up a rifle which had just fallen from the hand of a dead trooper—for up to the present Ernest had not joined in the firing—he took a fine sight at about eighty yards at the Zulu chief's broad chest and pulled. The shot was a good one; the great fellow sprang into the air and dropped. Instantly another commander took his place, and the final advance began.

But the Zulus had to come up-hill, with but little cover, and scores were mown down by the scorching and continuous fires from the breech-loaders. Twice when within twenty yards were they driven back, twice did they come on again. Now they were but twelve paces or so away, and a murderous fire was kept upon them. For a moment they wavered, then pushed forward up the slope.

"Close up!" shouted Ernest, "and use your swords and pistols." His voice was heard above the din; some of the men dropped the now useless rifles, and the revolvers began to crack.

Building an Addition.

Wife (to husband)—This house is altogether too small for our needs. John. Why don't you put an addition to it?

Husband (thoughtfully)—I've been thinking of that.

Wife—Something in the shape of a wing?

Husband—No; something in the shape of a mortgage.

Looking Ahead.

"Please, ma'am, will you give me something to eat? I haven't had a morsel to-day," said a tramp at a farm-house.

"Why, man, what do you mean?" said the lady, "you've got a large loaf under your arm. Why don't you eat that?"

"If I did that what would I do to-morrow?" said the tramp.—Life.

A new revolver has been patented which is expected to be less liable to be accidentally discharged than any of its predecessors. Its main feature is a concealed hammer, enclosed in the lock frame, which cannot be unintentionally manipulated, and the trigger is so arranged that it cannot be pulled unless a safety lever in the rear of the lock frame is first pressed.

Indignant Boarder—Mrs. Winks, when I returned last night I found no lamp in my room, and this morning I saw that the new novel I was reading had disappeared. Mrs. Winks—Yes, sir. You see, I noticed the girl forgot to put the lamp there, so I thought you wouldn't need the novel. It's a very interesting one, sir.

LATE SPORTING NOTES.

What Leading Baseball Players and Clubs are Doing.

TURF, ROWING AND YACHTING NEWS

Baseball.

A meeting of the directors of the Buffalo Baseball Club was held yesterday afternoon, when the following officers were elected: President, Frank T. Gilbert; Vice-President, C. C. Candee; Secretary, John R. Kenney; Treasurer, E. S. Dann; Executive Committee, Moses Shire, James Franklin and John R. Kenney. The extra $3,000 which was recently added to the capital stock of the club has nearly all been taken up, and by the directors.

Manager Chapman has about secured a first-class third baseman, whose name will be announced in a few days.

The Boston Herald devotes four columns of its space to the purchase of Kelly from Chicago. It talks like this: Kelly, your "short cuts" across the diamond are all forgiven. Wonder if the Detroit friends will call the Bostons the "bum" club now. Boston's stock has taken a tremendous upward jump since yesterday morning. President Spalding can take the money he received for Kelly, purchase the release of a good outfielder, and have a few dollars left. It was a big price for a baseball luxury, but Boston had to have it. Boston is also able to pay for it. The other League clubs will not be asked to contribute one cent. The Boston plan is far superior to that of Detroit.

The schedule meeting of the International League will be held at Rochester, on March 15th.

J. M. Becannon, of last year's Buffalo and Binghamton clubs, has been engaged for the New York reserve team.

The San Francisco press says that the new rules are a failure, after the game of Jan. 26th, in which the Louisvilles were defeated by a picked nine by 8 to 6. Morris was punished for ten hits; and Foutz, who filled the box for Louisville, was hit for fifteen bases.

"Bobby" Caruthers, pitcher of the St. Louis Browns, has been ill for the past four weeks with pneumonia. He is now much improved, and states that he is undecided as yet whether he will enter the diamond next season or not. He has not signed with the Browns, as Van der Ahe has not made him any definite proposition, for he seems to be under the impression, since the club took the championship last year, that every member is going to demand an exorbitant salary for next season's work. He is accordingly very cautious about making offers.

There are 646 baseball players now under contract, and many of the clubs, as well as associations, are still incomplete. Probably 1,000 players will draw a salary in 1887, and very likely 1,500 people, directly or indirectly, will be supported by the game.

Boston has offered $7,500 for Glasscock, of the St. Louis Maroons.

"Buck" Ewing and "Kid" Baldwin, the ball players, were among 105 luckless individuals who were boarded over night at public expense at Cincinnati recently. They were caught at a cocking main.

A number of gentlemen in Ottawa are talking of organizing a baseball team. They propose to import four or five players and make up the remainder of the team from local players.

The Chicago Mail goes into poetry over the purchase of Kelly by Boston, as follows:

$ T-en thousand dollars, Kelly dear,
$ H-as been sent on to bring you here;
$ E-xcuse us if we call you "dear."

$ O-h, diamond gem, beyond compare,
$ N-o jewel ever half so rare,
$ L-ook out, dear Mike, we humbly beg,
$ Y-ou must not, must not break a leg.

$ M-onarch of players, kindly list,
$ I-nvite no chance to sprain a wrist,
$ K-nowing you cost us mighty wealth,
$ E-xpensive Mike, preserve your health.

A special meeting of the New York National Baseball League will be held on Friday either in New York or Pittsburg to consider the claims of Indianopolis to be admitted into the League.

Kelly will take a trip to Europe with his wife before the ball season opens.

A. L. Richardson has signed his name at the bottom of a contract of the Bradford Baseball Club, of the Pennsylvania State League, and will play short for that team.

The Oar.

Oxford is reported to have a slight call in the betting on the 'Varsity race, to be decided March 26th.

Wm. Beach, the champion oarsman, is a great lover of the gamecock. Recently some birds of the old Devon fighting strain were shipped to him from England.

Edward Hanlan is reported by some Harlem oarsmen as stating in a letter to a friend that he would make George Lee sick of rowing before the coming season will end. He will do it, too. George will find that he will not get along as nicely as he did when he had Hanlan for a partner.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Bubear, who recently defeated Perkins on the Tyne course, is expected to visit America soon. Wallace Ross says he will row him for $1,000 a side and allow him to choose his distance.

Hamm and Teemer have challenged Ross and Lee to row a three-mile race for $500 or $1,000 a side, giving the latter crew five seconds start. They will row Hanlan and mate for the same money on even terms.

There appears to be a general desire among rowing men in Toronto that the next regatta of the Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen shall be held in Toronto, and that special efforts shall be made to get up prizes of more than ordinary value, in honor of the year of Jubilee. There can be no doubt that amateur rowing in these parts needs a boom.—Toronto Mail.

Yachting.

Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt's million-dollar steam yacht Alva sailed from New York for Bermuda yesterday.

The ocean yacht race between the Coronet, owned by R. T. Bush, and the Dauntless, owned by C. H. Colt, will start from Owl's Head on March 5th, at 1 p. m., provided the Coronet can be got ready in time. The finishing point is Roche's Point, Cork harbor. The race is for $10,000 a side.

The Turf.

The Detroit (Mich.) Driving Club announces that it will give a summer meeting on July 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd, 1887, and offers $25,000 in prizes.

Maud S. will not be sent to beat her record, unless some other horse approaches dangerously near it. Mr. Bonner says she can trot in 2.06 easily. He says, although the record may be lowered in time, he does not believe that the two-minute mark will ever be reached.

Mr. Joseph Harker, who bought Maud S. when she was only 4 years old for the late Wm. H. Vanderbilt, has just offered Mr. Bonner, on behalf of a gentleman of large wealth, $100,000 in cash for the Queen. Mr. Bonner paid Mr. Vanderbilt $40,000 for Maud S.; but she was lame the day she was delivered at Mr. Bonner's stable. Mr. B., however, shod her so as to relieve her of her lameness, and since then she has twice beaten her record, having lowered it to 2.08¾. Now he is offered $100,000 for the peerless mare, so that he would make $60,000 profit if he should dispose of her—a pretty large sum for shoeing a horse. But Mr. Bonner refuses to sell Maud S. at any price.—Turf, Field and Farm.

The Ring.

Articles have been signed here for a six-round fight between Harry Gilmore, of Toronto, and Billy Hawkins, of Ottawa, to come off within a week. It is understood that the contest will be private.

Skating Contest.

Frank Dowd, of Montreal, and H. J. McCormack, of St. John, N. B., met to-night in Crystal Rink, Montreal, in the second of the series of three races, the distance being 10 miles. The race was close all through and was won by Dowd in 37 mins. 30 secs. McCormack was 10 yards behind.

Curling.

The second draws in the final competition for the Ontario tankard was played in Toronto Thursday afternoon, the competing clubs being Paris, Orillia, St. Marys and the Toronto Caledonians. A great deal of interest was shown by the Toronto and visiting curlers and the Granite Rink was well filled with spectators. Paris defeated Orillia by 24 points, the score being 50 to 26, and St. Marys defeated the Toronto Caledonians by 3 points, the score being 37 to 34. Paris and St. Marys played off last night and Paris won the Ontario championship, which the tankard represents, by three points, the score being:

The trophy was first played for in 1875, and has been held since that time as follows: 1875, Hamilton Thistles; 1876, Toronto; 1877, Toronto; 1878, Hamilton Thistles; 1879, Bowmanville; 1880, Port Hope; 1881, Hamilton Thistles; 1882, Toronto Caledonians; 1883, Brampton; 1884, St. Marys; 1885, Orillia; 1886, Toronto Granites; 1887, Paris.

Two rinks of the Thistle Curling Club defeated two of the Caledonians in a match for the Gibson medal Thursday by 19 points, Mr. W. Vallance's rink winning from Mr. McPhie's by 5 points and Mr. J. Simpson's defeating Mr. W. G. Reid's by 14 points.

A Singular Coincidence.

Writing to the Chicago Tribune, A. P. Paul calls attention to the similarity between the "Tit-willow" song in Gilbert & Sullivan's "Mikado" and the song by Desdemona in "Othello," act 4, sc. 3.:

Desdemona (singing)—The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow;
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow.
The fresh streams ran by her and murmured her moans,
Sing willow, willow, willow;
Her salt tears fell from her and softened the stones.
Lay by these:
(Singing) Sing willow, willow, willow;
Prithee hie thee, he'll come anon,
(Singing) Sing all a green willow must be my garland.
Let nobody blame him; his scorn I approve—
Nay, that's not next. Hark! Who is't that knocks?

Mr. Paul asks whether the similarity is coincidence or intentional. Possibly Mr. Gilbert, if directly approached on the subject, would answer in the style of the French author accused of literary larceny, "Je prends mon bien ou je le trouve."

An Eye to Business.

"Can you send the patrol waggon up to 594 Blank street?" inquired a voice through the police telephone the other day.

"What's the matter?"

"Some one tapped the till of my grocery of 30 cents."

"Are you holding him?"

"No; he has been gone half an hour."

"Then what good will the waggon do?"

"Well, it will get out a crowd and look like business, won't it? I sell for cash, and my prices are lower than ever before."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

Edison's Latest Invention Puts All Previous Ones in the Shade—A Story That Reads Well Even if it Isn't True.

A writer in the Washington Post gives an account of a recent interview of a most remarkable character with Edison, the inventor. In this interview Edison is made to describe a new machine which he calls the nutricator. This machine, the writer says, has accomplished the problem of combining the natural elements so as to manufacture wholesome [illegible]. Edison is made to say in this interview: "In ten years I can say my machines will be [illegible] to provide the tables of the civilized world. Meat will be no longer killed and vegetables no longer grown, except by savages, for my methods will be so much cheaper." Mr. Edison then exhibited samples of food which he said he had made from dirt in his cellar and from water taken from the water-pipes in the house. The writer says:

He led me down a pair of stairs into a light basement room, where a swarthy-looking man was busy about a big machine, an iron vessel, holding about a barrel, attached to something that looked like a hydraulic ram. The shelves were lined with chemicals. There was a small battery in the corner from which one wire went to the vat. A kerosene lamp burned under a sort of retort. That and four crooked pipes with handles were all that was visible.

"How is it now?" said Edison, "About 53," replied the man. That was all. We returned to the room above. "I shall simplify that machine one-half," he remarked. "Yet with that I can turn out at least five tons of food of various kinds every day. I have already made eighteen kinds of food. I will tell you something if you will not say a word till I say 'go ahead.' All food comes, of course, primarily from the earth. The plants and fruits we eat come from the moist ground, and the animals we eat live on the plants, or on other animals which the plants have kept alive. So all food comes from the elements stored in the earth, air and water. You eat a grain of wheat, for instance. The wheat is mainly composed of a few simple gases and salts that last year were lying dormant in the earth, the air and the water.

"It occurred to me that this process might be hastened; that instead of waiting a year for nature to collect those elements into an organic seed I could collect them in an hour, or perhaps a few minutes, and arrive at the same result by combining them organically. This I have done. I first find out what a particular kind of food is made of. There are sixty-five simple elements in nature; that is, substances which we call simple elements, because we have not yet succeeded in proving them to be compound. I am afraid your readers will not generally understand what I am going to say. If you use it be careful to take it down verbatim.

"There are sixty-five elements. Carbon is the king of these. It is the great organizer. It is never absent from any plant or animal organism. It is at the base of almost everything. It is the key to my discovery, for it possesses the peculiar capacity to form molecules from its own atoms. The diamond is pure carbon, so are graphite and charcoal nearly pure carbon, though they are so different. Sugar and starch belong to the hydrocarbons, and I cannot understand why their manufacture out of carbon and water hasn't been hit on before. I form all my meat compounds by exposing three elements in a red hot state to nitrogen gas, though I use different flavors, which I get from the earth too. I have had to bring from Westchester county some argillaceous soil not found here.

"I can make a wine, and have made it, with New Jersey earth and water that no man can tell from Chateau Yquem. I find that those elements combine at the lowest temperature that have the same atomicity—that is, the same bonds by which they unite with one another, or with compound molecules. This great invention has not been 'hit on' before, because analytic chemistry has received too much attention to the exclusion of synthetic chemistry; men have been more devoted to learning than to doing. Lavoisier was just on the edge of it and missed. Sir Humphrey Davy, Liebig and Faraday were all in sight of it and suddenly turned aside. They succeeded in making urea out of the elements and several other inorganic substances, but they stopped at that. They overlooked the simplicity of this thing.

"I think that after two or three years New Yorkers, for instance, will no longer eat meat or vegetables. They will not send to the tropics for fruits, or to Europe for wines, because the head of every family, by turning a crank (or, perhaps, without turning a crank, if a clock apparatus is attached), can produce more delicious fruits and wines at a tenth of the cost.

"Sir Isaac Newton said: 'The properties of all food are in the dirt under our feet and in the air over our heads—but they elude our grasp.' I was led on by Dalton's great discovery of the law of multiple proportions, that the atomic weight of compounds is the same as the atomic weight of their ingredients. I was helped also by the well-known law of ismorphism, that certain groups of substances exist, any member of which can be replaced by any other member in equivalent proportions without changing the crystalline character of the matter.

"The extraordinary analogy between homologous groups of organic compounds and certain small groups of the elements, as chlorine, bromine, and iodine have been remarked by many chemists. Not only isolated triads, but all the elements, may be brought into such homologous series expressed by the general formula of AxNb. However, this is beyond the average reader, and will hardly be intelligible.

"No change of food is contemplated. Every man can have food of the kind to which he is accustomed, or which he prefers. It will be as easy to produce cabbages as oranges, and pork as partridges. We shall actually produce these very things, but in a new form. It will be cabbages and oranges that have never felt the wind and rain, and pork and partridges that have never been alive. We merely take a short cut and snatch the food from the earth without giving it the trouble of growing. It will lack fibre, which is the only perceptible difference.

"The equivalent value of an element is now measured by the number of atoms of a monatomic or equivalent element with which it will combine. It is known, for instance, that chloride combines with one atom of hydrogen, oxygen with two, nitrogen with three, carbon with four, and so on. I have struck some astonishing examples of allatrophism—that is, the production of entirely dissimilar compounds from nearly similar elements. Nature is full of surprises. For instance, I make bananas and chocolate out of the very same ingredients, and the methods of combining differ only a trifle."

A NEW OCEAN LINE.

Steamers, which are to Carry no Freight, Cross the Ocean in Less than Five Days.

The despatch from Washington published yesterday stating that the Arrow Steamship and Shipbuilding Co. of New York had purchased the marine railroad and shipyard at Alexandria, Va., was confirmed at the office of the company, No. 115 Broadway. Robt. M. Fryer, chief engineer of the line, said: "We will begin work at once to build the ways for our first steamship, the Pocahontas; but there are to be no extensive shops built there. Our frames, which are simply the bulkheads, and all of the plates will be prepared at the works where we are having them made. The completion of this vessel, and others to follow, will mark an era of revolution in the transatlantic trade, since they are to be constructed upon a new principle and with an estimated speed to make the voyage from New York to Liverpool in a little more than four days. We will not carry any freight excepting, possibly, a few express packages, but the vessels are designed for passenger traffic alone." It is said that twelve such vessels are to be built, each to bear a historic Indian name. The models and drawings at the office of the company present a unique and promising appearance, but other people are not so sanguine of the success of the company and the practicability of the vessels as are the directors. Mr. Fryer believes that he has solved the problem of swift and safe ocean navigation in this creation of his, as the vessel is solely his invention. The Pocahontas is to be an iron and steel ship, and instead of being built on lateral lines, as has always been the custom, she will be built upon sixty-eight transverse steel walls or bulkheads, seven and a half feet apart, each of the full size and accurate shape of a cross section of the vessel. These walls will have openings cut in them for the saloons, passageways, tunnels, etc., with vertical longitudinal walls through them, thus making 1,060 water-tight compartments, of which 600 are to be below the water-line. She will be provided with compound engines of 27,986 horse-power, capable of giving a speed of twenty-two knots an hour. There will be twenty boilers to furnish steam for the main engines, placed fore and aft of the vessel, with three smoke-pipes on each side of the ship next to the rail. What effect heavy seas will have on smoke-pipes thus arranged remains to be seen. Her dimensions are to be 540 feet in length, 40 feet beam and draught of water 25½ feet.—New York Tribune.

Beggared by Her Devotion to Cats.

All mankind has heard of the Countess de La Torre, of London, who is crazy on the subject of cats. She has a whole string of cats following her wherever she goes, and her house is occupied by cats from garret to cellar. It has never yet been definitely settled just how many cats the countess does possess. She sometimes goes to visit her friends, and is invariably accompanied by a feline coterie. Her fortune has been exhausted in various freaks of disordered fancy, and she is now almost a beggar. She went last week to visit a lady at Hammersmith, and, as she took a whole tribe of cats with her, she became such an intolerable nuisance that her hostess, after many hints in vain to get her away, in a fit of despair went to Police Justice Paget, of the district, and made a complaint. Her case was up yesterday, and among the questions propounded by the justice in his monotonous inquiry was: "How many cats had the countess with her?" The complainant did not know, but the inspector of nuisances declared that he had come along the day before and removed twelve. Mr. Justice Paget said that he had heard of the countess before. He expressed great sympathy for the complainant, but said that the only way for her to get rid of her troublesome guest and her cats, since they had come into her house by invitation, was to put them out by force, if they would not go by moral suasion. The lady returned home and had the countess and the remnant of her visiting contingent of cats ejected.—Cor. New York World.

The wisdom of a man is but a small thing after all. What does he know? He can't tell why it was that he was created. He can't tell why blood circulates and keeps up life. In fact, has so little knowledge that it scarcely amounts to anything.—Kaufman (Tex.) Sun.

BEWARE OF "WIDDERS!"

Amusing and Successful Breach of Promise Suit Against a Widower.

Mr. Henry Platts, cutlery manufacturer, of the Bridge Street Works, Sheffield, was sued for damages for breach of promise of marriage by Mrs. Ann Smith, a widow, of Broomhall street, Sheffield, before Mr. Justice Cave, at the Yorkshire Assizes, at Leeds, on Saturday week. Mr. Barker appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Ellison for the defendant.

The defendant, a widower, aged 65 years, became acquainted with the plaintiff, proposed and was accepted. The defendant presented the plaintiff with a watch and chain, for which he gave £20, often took her out of town, and September 14th, 1885, was the date fixed for the wedding. Within a few days of the 14th the defendant, for some unexplained reason, asked for the postponement of the wedding, and the date was altered. Next the defendant told the plaintiff that his daughter had left him, and that he should be glad if she would come and look after his house, and she did so for three weeks, during which time the defendant told her that his late wife did more work than she, and that he did not believe in having many servants. Finally the defendant refused to carry out his promise; the plaintiff left his house, returned his presents, and eventually claimed £500 damages through a solicitor.

The plaintiff said she never told the defendant that he would have to allow more for household expenditure. The defendant never told her he was willing to marry her but not her three sons.

Mr. Ellison—Now, are you very fond of this old gentleman?

Plaintiff—Yes. (Laughter.)

Why did you leave him?

Because he refused to marry me.

Mr. Henry Platts, the defendant, greatly amused the court by the way in which he told his story. He said: I was in Fargate when the plaintiff first looked at me. I spoke, and found it was not the person I thought it was. The plaintiff said, "Oh, it's all right," and we walked on together and told one another our names. A while afterwards I was conversing with a gentleman in a saleroom, and the plaintiff came up and said, "How do you do, Mr. Platts?" I answered, "You have the advantage of me;" and she rejoined, "It's Mrs. Smith." "Oh," said I, "I beg your pardon. How are you?" We saw each other several times after that. In the middle of last February she told me she had been to my factory to wish me a happy new year (laughter). She asked me to tea, but I said, "Tea-drinking is not much in my way."

His Lordship—Was this on the 14th of February.

Defendant—No, sir—(laughter.) However, I went to her daughter's to tea. My daughter left me in a "huff," and I said to the plaintiff, "Come and look after my house, will you, and we'll put up the banns." She came and stayed three weeks, and the banns were "called over" on the 29th of August. I told the plaintiff I was not satisfied with the way in which she had "distinguished" herself as a housekeeper. One morning she "blockaded the door," and said, "Have you as much love for me as you had?" and I answered, "Never mind love; let me go to business"—(laughter.) She refused to let me go, and I added, "Love is a poor thing to live on." Before going to business I told her I was willing to marry her, but not her three sons. That day she left my house and did not return. She afterwards sought me up again, and I stuck to my resolution—(laughter.)

Mr. Barker.—You were very much attached to this lady were you?

I cannot say that she broke my heart by leaving me—(laughter).

Did you buy her a new bonnet?

"No, she was showing me one, and I said, Here's half a sovereign towards the expenses"—(laughter).

Did you not differ about one of her sons?

Yes, one of them slept with me, and I said to him, "You do annoy me with snoring"—(laughter). Next day his mother said, "You have grieved my boy, he has been brought up tender"—(laughter). I replied, "If he never gets anything worse than that to grieve him he will get through pretty well." He was a boy of four and twenty—(laughter).

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £70, including £20 paid into court.

The Sneezing Spot.

As a Journal representative sat in the chair of a Maiden Lane barber the other day, the genial artist of the brush observed that the journalist sneezed when his hair was combed. "Did I touch the sneezing spot?" inquired the barber. He then proceeded to explain that the "sneezing spot" was a sensitive place to the left of the middle of the forehead. "Why," said he, "there are men who come in here who sneeze regularly every time I comb their hair or shave them just as soon as the comb passes over that spot. I had a man in here yesterday who sneezed three times just as hard as he could, all because I touched the 'sneezing spot.' It must be a very small nerve that tickles the nostrils."—Albany Journal.

SOUTH GREY!

A Few Observations Concerning the Recent Campaign.

Let us calmly and dispassionately consider the recent hot political campaign in South Grey. Now that the smoke of battle has cleared away we shall, no doubt, be enabled to do this without prejudice.—For be it remembered, we are all more or less influenced by circumstances attending our early training—in politics and even in matters of a more sacred character.

For our own part, then, we are frank to confess, that, in conjunction with other Artemesia Liberal Conservatives, we did all in our power to secure the return as M. P. for South Grey, of Dr. Jamieson—a gentleman who, in his private and public life has been characterised by a strong desire to "hew to the line let the chips fall where they may." As a result this Township gave a largely increased Conservative majority. We worked hard for our candidate, feeling honestly convinced, that, if elected, he would represent us intelligently and faithfully, and would not stoop to become a mere party hack. We have lost the battle, which we most sincerely regret; but we can point with pride to the fact that noble old Artemesia is loyal and patriotic and has in most unmistakable language told Dr. Landerkin, that it does not endorse the course of a politician whose actions in the House of Commons showed that he consulted his own interests more than he did those of his constituents.

The course pursued by some of Dr. Landerkin's supporters—notably the Grey Review—must have been obnoxious in the eyes of the more moderate Reformers. The Review seemed to have lost its head altogether and forgotten the amenities due to honorable opponents. Private letters were published without even an apology—worse: they were garbled so as to convey a different meaning to that intended by the writers. Vulgar comments were appended, thereby heaping insult upon insult. But the most discreditable and astounding feature in connection with the Review's unwise and ungentlemanly "assaults," was the fact that the real motive power behind the scenes was Dr. Landerkin himself! This had been suspected for some time, but so adroitly had the Dr. ensconced himself "behind the scenes" that not until the week prior to the election did he reveal himself in the most unmistakable manner. Had he treated opponents with ordinary courtesy, even this might very easily have been overlooked. But, on the contrary, the Review was used simply and solely as a catspaw by Dr. Landerkin in Dr. Landerkin's behalf. Something like the man who patted himself on the back and said he was a good fellow "if he did say so himself?"

Then the Temperance question was hurled into the already seething political cauldron. Zealous Temperance Reformers whispered it around that Dr. Landerkin was a teetotaller and an out-and-out Temperance man; and, strange as it may appear, many eagerly swallowed the bait—forgetting or ignoring the fact that the Dr. attempted to destroy the usefulness of the Canada Temperance Act by voting in favor of the wine and beer clause! Such charming inconsistency or ignorance has seldom been witnessed in an intelligent and enlightened community.

Next came an alleged inconsistency on the part of Dr. Jamieson, which really only amounted to a question of veracity. Four respectable Reformers maintained one version of Dr. Jamieson's statement relative to the Temperance question, while four equally respectable Conservatives—men of undoubted integrity—held another. It was simply a question of veracity from beginning to end, and didn't amont to a "hill of beans" so far as the real questions at issue were concerned. But Dr. Landerkin did not think so. He was tired discussing questions with men who were more than his match, and so this petty, meaningless side-issue was a blessed relief. He accordingly seized it with surprising avidity, drew up a statement, which was duly signed by the four Reformers, and had the whole thing published in the veteran Review and that innocent young politician, the Hanover Post. Later on an enthusiastic supporter of the Dr's arose in the night, girded his loins and hied him away some miles into the country. Result: an affidavit, which was published in the two papers named, and which set forth alleged inconsistencies on the part of Dr. Jamieson, that really never existed—the affidavit notwithstanding. This latter statement we make with due care; for, while we are are sure the gentlemen would not knowingly swear to an untruth, they might, nevertheless, have failed to catch the true purport of Dr. Jamieson's remarks. People should be very careful about making affidavits in such cases unless they have taken the pains to have every word jotted down by a good shorthand writer. Certainly it is a species of hardihood we would not care to indulge in, although we have attended political gatherings in a reportorial capacity for the last twelve years.

It cannot be denied that Dr. Landerkin failed to give a satisfactory account of his stewardship—in Artemesia at anyrate; And, so uncomfortably warm did our local orators make it for him in that particular, that before fulfilling his engagements in the Township, he beat a hasty retreat across the border—scarcely taking time to "shake the dust off his feet!" His lieutenant, Mr. Wm. Brown, showed infinitely superior courage and stood his ground like a man. But even the latter—plucky though he was and is—met his Waterloo at the mass meeting in this town, and his Wellington in the person of Mr. D. Creighton, M. P. P.

If there is one thing above another which will lower a public man in the estimation of the people, it is moral cowardice. People may be very Falstaffs themselves, but, whether or not, they hate cowards. This may seem inconsistent, but it is true. All admire that bravery which enables a man, under favorable or trying circumstances, to stand up boldly - face to face with the enemy—and give utterance to his honest convictions. Dr. Landerkin posed as a brave man, and at several meetings in Artemesia insinuated that his opponent avoided meeting him because of downright moral fear. He made all the capital possible out of this until a day or so before the mass meeting in Flesherton. Then he had an opportunity of meeting Dr Jamieson on the public platform. Dr. Jamieson was there; but where, oh! where was Dr. Landerkin? He had other engagements in another part of the riding, said the Review. Why didn't he cancel them when such a grand opportunity offered itself to vindicate his honor as an alleged brave man? Who was the coward? Let an intelligent public judge.

In reviewing the campaign just closed one cannot but be struck at the tortuous quibbling over minor matters and the deliberate avoidance of great issues on the part of Dr. Landerkin—even in his strongholds this was noticeable. Where his political admirers dominated, the Dr. was witty and genial; where they were in the minority, he was fierce and intolerant in his actions, intemperate in his language and discourteous to those who opposed him on the hustings. Wherever the Irish Catholic element abounded, Home Rule for Ireland formed the chief theme of his discourse; elsewhere he grew strangely dumb in this respect and discussed civil service reform, High Commissioner's residence in London and every other theme, except the really vital ones, with rare complacency and force. Of the sacrificing of moral principles—on the part of some of his followers—in order to asertain whether his opponent drank liquor or ginger ale; and of the doings of the "broom brigade" on the morning after the election, it is not necessary to speak: persons not afflicted with temporary derangement have long since brought in their verdict, which is certainly not flattering to the "eminent" burlesque comedians, who took part therein.

In conclusion, it is with grief and indignation, that we acknowledge the return to parliament of Dr. Landerkin—a man whose name will be recorded in the future history of our country as the defender of a criminal of the deepest dye. But, alas! our fair county's name will also besmirch the pages of the same leaf in our country's history, in that it endorsed that disgraceful action by returning Dr. Landerkin to the House of Commons as its representative. Our children will remember it in the days which are to come and will never cease regretting the folly that led their ancestors thus to stain an otherwise unblemished escutcheon.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE THIRD "BOYCOTT."

According to the verdict of some of our Reform friends, it is a crime on our part to have a mind of our own, or to express our honest convictions through THE ADVANCE. Hence they have boycotted us and even had the temerity to make free with our reputation as a public man, although not one of them can successfully charge us with partiality in local or political affairs. We give every man—Reformer or Conservative, black or white, Catholic or Protestant—a fair hearing in our columns and bonny fair play in every instance; and there is not that gentlemen living who dare dispute the fact. Often—contrary to the established usages of journalism—we have published matter intended to do us no good, simply from a desire to let the public see both sides of the question. But we do not, and never have, taken credit for this, as we only followed the promptings of conscience. All we ask—and have a right to expect—is to be accorded that liberty of speech and action we allow to others. But boycott or no boycott, THE ADVANCE will continue to speak plainly, freely and fearlessly on all matters of interest to the general public—giving "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" according to the light God has given us. We wish every man well, be he friend or foe, and have not the slightest desire to return evil for evil. But so long as we have power to wield the pen, wicked deeds shall be exposed, and the people's best interests promoted to the extent of our humble ability. Nothing shall cause us to swerve for one instant from the course we have mapped out for ourself in matters political, moral or religious. In everything we shall, as in the past, give forth no uncertain sounds. We have never received a dollar from any political organization, society or corporation which we have not earned by hard and honest labor. Thus, untrammelled by partizan or other influences, we have always endeavored to give publicity to unbiased and honest sentiments—heedless alike of the frown of bigotry and prejudice and the cavilling of quondam friends. All we ask is a fair hearing and an honest criticism before the bar of public opinion.

Election Reports.

Our favorite daily, the Toronto World, furnished the public with the most trustworthy reports, concerning the result of the recent Dominion Elections, of any paper we have seen. The World's estimate of the result—before the elections came off—was so remarkably correct, that we honestly think that journal is entitled to take its place in the very front rank of Canadian journalism. We have admired the honesty and straightforwardness of the World in all public matters, but never have we admired it more than at this moment.

An Election Episode.

Mr. J. Gordon Mowat ("Moses Cats") addressed a meeting of electors in Osprey Township recently in the interests of Mr. Robt. Gilray, and, in the course of his remarks, predicted the defeat of Dr. Sproule. Our townsman, M. Richardson, Esq., next spoke, and, it is needless to say, made a splendid speech. Before taking his seat, however, he alluded to Mr. Mowat's prophecy, and said,—amid roars of laughter,—that if that gentleman's political forecasts were as trustworthy as his weather prognostications, Dr. Sproule need have nothing to fear! The result proved that Mr. Richardson is something of a "prophet" himself.

To Stock Raisers.

Mr. R. H. Plantt having disposed of his well-known bull has purchased another to take his place. The latest importation is a magnificent Durham bull, thorough-bred and will be at Mr. Plantt's farm for service during the coming season. Those interested in improving their stock will do well to paste this item in their almanacs for reference. "General Rockwell" is the name of the bull.

Almost miraculous are some of the cures accomplished by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In the case of R. L. King, Richmond, Va., who suffered for 47 years with an aggravated form of scrofula, Ayer's Sarsaparilla effected astonishing results.

OUT IN THE STORM!

Thrilling Adventure of Tommy Cullen and Charlie Reid.

In a letter to a friend in Flesherton, Mrs. Wm. Cullen—formerly of this place—relates the following thrilling adventure of her son Tommy, and Charlie Reid during a terrific North West blizzard. The story is graphically told by Master Tommy himself, as follows:

"On Thursday Charlie Reid and myself started to take our stock about 10 miles, where we had about 30 tons of hay. The day was bright and mild. We had rigged up a jumper and had our tent and bed-clothes and some provisions. There was a camp stove out at the stacks. When we started snow covered the earth to the depth of about six inches. We got about seven miles when we saw the storm coming. I tried to pitch the tent and Charlie went to "round up" the cattle. The wind and snow came on with such force and suddeness that I could not pitch the tent. I waited for Charlie about an hour and he did not come. I then knew he was lost, and, taking out my gun, I fired shot after shot until he got safely back to me. We then spread the blankets and pulled the tent up over us. We had got our feet wet in the soft snow and had to hold our toes in our hands to keep them from freezing. It snowed about 1½ feet that night. When morning came we tried to drive the cattle but could not. It was blowing a hurricane and the thermometer dropped away down to 40 degrees below zero! Charlie commenced to freeze and so did I. Fortunately we had kept hold of the horses. I got Charlie mounted, as he was not able to stand up. I held him on and led my horse, and after awhile the heat of the animals made us feel much warmer. Fortunately we struck the railway track and got to a station house—frozen, but not seriously. We got to the house a little after noon, having had no food since the morning of the day before. The storm lasted five days. Our cattle drifted before the storm. There are about 1000 head drifting around; they came with the storm from the West."

Wedding Bells.

A happy company gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Hyslop, of Ancaster, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 16, 1887, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Mary, to Mr. Joseph H. Stinson, of Singhampton, Ont. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. Ross, Presbyterian minister of Ancaster. The bride looked very pretty in her rich costume of peacock blue plush. Her bridesmaid, Miss Phoebe Stinson, was arrayed in brown satin and plush. Mr. Stinson was assisted by Mr. Frank H. Nettleton, of Collingwood. After the congratulations were over, the guests repaired to the dining room, where the wedding dinner was spread, and where a very enjoyable time was spent. The guests were Rev. H. Ross and Mrs. Ross, of Ancaster Mr. and Mrs. John Stinson and Miss Stinson, of Singhampton: Messrs. Frank H. Nettleton and Andrew Sharp, of Collingwood, Mr. C. Major, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Livingston, of Grimsby; Mr. and Mrs. R. Hyslop and Miss Hyslop, Mrs. W. Hyslop, Mr. and Miss Barr, Misses Moody, Johnston and Wolfe, and Messrs. Rosenstadt, L. Croswaithe and J. Hyslop, of Hamilton; Dr. and Mrs. Brandon, Mr. and Mrs. Middleton, Mr. and Mrs. Flynn, Mr. and Miss Chapman, Mrs. R. Smith, Miss Forsyth, and Messrs. Moore, Postans, Elliott and Smith, of Ancaster. The presents were both numerous and beautiful. The happy couple departed to catch the train for the East, amid the good wishes of their older friends, and the rice-pelting of the younger ones, and accompanied by Mr. Nettleton and Miss Stinson. That long life and happiness may be their portion is the wish of the Independent.—Grimsby Independent.

N. B.—Members are asked to attend at 7:30 sharp.

DOMINION ELECTIONS.

Special Despatch to the Toronto World.

Montreal, Feb. 23.—The Government can at the present outlook with confidence count on the support of thirty-five Quebec members. Girouard, Desjardins, Dupont and Cimon will not go Liberal on any account; Coursol and Gigault may kick on the Riel matter if it comes up, the others are all safe on ordinary divisions.

The Witness this evening makes the following calculation: Not counting the British Columbia and Northwest Territories constituencies, and giving the Conservative Nationalists like Coursol, Gigault and Dupont to the Government, the result of the election is as follows:

Province.	Con.	Lib.	Con. maj.	Lib. maj.
Ontario	52	38	14	0
Quebec	35	29	6	0
Nova Scotia	13	8	5	0
New B.	9	6	3	0
Prince E. I.	2	4	0	2
Manitoba	4	1	3	0
Total	115	86	31	2

Total Conservative majority 29.

The final returns when received from the Northwest and British Columbia will probably bring the Government's majority up to 40. The Star makes:

Province.	Con.	Lib.	Ind.
Quebec	32	25	7
Ontario	55	34	0
Nova Scotia	15	6	0
New Brunswick	10	6	0
Prince Edward Island	2	4	0
Manitoba	4	1	0
British Columbia	1	0	0
Grand Total	119	76	7

Conservative maj. over all ..36.

The Gazette calculation is as follows:

	Con.	Lib.
Ontario	53	38
Quebec	35	28
Manitoba	4	1
Nova Scotia	14	7
New Brunswick	9	7
Prince Edward Island	4	2
British Columbia	1	0
Total	120	83

Conservative maj. 37

YET TO BE HELD.

Algoma	1
Gaspe	1
Northwest Territories	4
British Columbia	5

Of these eleven seats the Government expect to carry nine.

Sir John Macdonald himself expects to have a majority of over 40 in the House. That the Government will have a good working majority is admitted on all hands.

THE IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Discussion of the New Rules of Procedure.

THE ADDRESS CARRIED.

A London cable says: In the Commons to-night Mr. L. L. Dillwyn (Liberal) moved to adjourn the debate on the Address in reply to the Queen's Speech, for the purpose of discussing irregularities in the conspiracy trial at Dublin, by which the interests of certain members of the House of Commons were prejudiced.

The Speaker declined to put the motion or to permit a debate on the subject. He said that according to a previous decision a motion to adjourn could not be put on a subject respecting which a motion stood on the order book, and that as Mr. Sexton had already placed a motion referring to jury packing, Mr. Dillwyn's motion could not be entertained.

Mr. W. H. Smith moved that the discussion of the rules of procedure have precedence over all orders of the day. He said the prolonged debate on the Address showed the necessity of putting some limit to the speaking, which had become prolix.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt said the Opposition did not desire to place obstacles in the way of the progress of business. He hoped the matter of procedure would not be made a party question.

Mr. Labouchere objected to giving a blank cheque of this sort to the Government, thereby permitting them to monopolize every day with the discussion of procedure rules. He did not think the Government was able to effect good legislation. The session ought therefore, in his opinion, to be made an educational session.

An amendment that a day be granted for debating the Welsh Disestablishment Bill was carried by 261 to 158.

Mr. Parnell asked the Government to concede time to discuss his proposal for admitting Irish leaseholders to the benefits of the Land Act of 1881. Under Mr. Smith's motion, he said, it would be five weeks before any Irish question would have a chance to be heard. He therefore moved: "That the rules of procedure be not considered before the Government discloses the nature of their proposed legislation for Ireland." (Cheers.) Continuing, he said he was not disposed to surrender the interests of Ireland in order to give the Government precedence for their procedure proposals. The motion had been sprung on the House suddenly in defiance of the fact that there were no precedents for such an interruption of the debate on the Address. The affairs of Ireland were in too critical a condition to be thus put aside. The West Government Board of Guardians had just received notice of intended evictions of one thousand persons, while Lord Cork was asking for police to assist in further evictions. Was it at such a time as this that Irish members were debarred from bringing forward grievances?

Mr. Smith said he thought the proceedings of the last three weeks were sufficient to show how useless it was to go further into the Irish legislation until the rules of procedure were settled.

Mr. Parnell's resolution was rejected by vote of 242 against 107.

The announcement of the result was received with cheers by the Conservatives.

Mr. Smith announced that the Government would begin giving precedence to the Rules of Procedure on Monday.

Mr. Dillon complained of the removal of the venue of his trial, and accused High Sheriff Hamilton of having dismissed the sub-sheriff, who had compiled the jury panels for thirty years, in order to appoint Capt. Hamilton, who was a personal enemy of Mr. Dillon.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, interposing, said Capt. Hamilton had not been appointed sub-sheriff.

Mr. Dillon replied that it was a matter of common knowledge that the post had been offered to Capt. Hamilton. He proceeded to refer to the jury panel.

The Speaker ruled him out of order.

Mr. Dillon bowed to the chair, but said he hardly expected that he would not be allowed to refer to his being tried by a jury that had been deliberately and maliciously packed by his enemies. (Loud Parnellite cheers.)

Mr. Speaker again interposed, and, in reply to Messrs. Dillon and Kelly, ruled that the subject should not be referred to in any way.

The Speaker then suggested the putting of the question on the Address.

Mr. Arthur O'Connor moved to adjourn, on the ground that the Parnellites had not been fairly treated.

The motion was rejected by 261 to 119.

After another attempt to continue the debate,

Mr. Speaker said it was evidently the sense of the House that the subject had been sufficiently discussed.

Mr. Smith moved "That the question be now put."

The motion was carried by 289 to 74 and the address was adopted by a vote of 283 to 70 amid Conservative cheers.

A London cable says: In the House of Commons last evening, on the motion to report the Address in reply to the Queen's Speech,

Mr. Labouchere moved to censure the Government for its Bulgarian policy. He said the Government had tried to prevent the abdication of Prince Alexander, and had acted without the concurrence of the other signatories of the Berlin Treaty. He accused the Government of trying to stir up a war against Russia, and asked if there were any dynastic reasons for trying to keep an obscure German Prince on the throne of Bulgaria.

Sir James Fergusson, Under Foreign Secretary, said the policy of the Government was in accord with the overwhelming popular feeling in Bulgaria in favor of Prince Alexander. The support which the British agents gave Prince Alexander was simply moral and diplomatic. The Government did not mean to stir up war or design to enter any alliance against Russia. There was no reason to doubt the goodwill of the Czar.

Mr. Labouchere's motion was negatived without a division.

Mr. W. H. Smith, replying to a question, said it was not intended to release Irish or other convicts on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee. The recent release of prisoners in India, in commemoration of the Jubilee, had been ordered by the Government in accordance with an Oriental custom. The order did not apply to Great Britain.

PRETTY TOUGH.

The Struggles of a Poor Widow with Poverty and Misfortune.

A last (Wednesday) night's Montreal despatch says: A sad and distressing case has just come to light here, in which a wife and family are left in poverty and deprived of their bread-winner. About two months ago a laborer named James Duanan left here for Boston on the promise of getting work there, leaving his wife and young children behind. He found employment in a lumber yard, and sent home his money regularly every week. He expected to get work here this week, and left Boston on the 5th inst. He wrote that he was coming, but on Wednesday last a telegram was received by the Chief of Police stating that Duanan had fallen off the train at Tilton, New Haven, and was killed. At the request of the widow the Chief telegraphed to forward the body here, which was done on Saturday last, but on its arrival the poor woman had not a cent to bury it with, and was only living in lodgings. The corpse lay in the depot until to-day, as the civic authorities would not do anything, when Dr. Laberge, the medical officer of the city, had it removed at his own expense to the cemetery, the widow being the only mourner who followed the hearse.

A LADY'S WONDERFUL NERVE.

She Stops a Runaway Horse and Saves Several Lives.

A Kingston (N.Y.) despatch says: A runaway accident occurred here this forenoon which afforded an estimable lady an opportunity to shame every man in town. The horse of Mr. John R. Styles, becoming frightened at a piece of paper in a roadway, dashed down the street. The sleigh was broken, and the animal ran through several thoroughfares with only the broken shafts attached to it. When near the First Reformed Church, where Mrs. Van Slyke, wife of the Rev. Van Slyke, D.D., pastor of the church, was walking, there was danger it might run down and injure several children then playing in the street. Mrs. Van Slyke ran out in the roadway, caught hold of and hung on to the reins, and finally succeeded in stopping the frightened animal. The children's danger was witnessed by a crowd, but she was the only one who had the pluck to risk personal injury that the lives of others might not be endangered. Men quickly gathered to say that she had wonderful nerve and presence of mind, and then they suddenly remembered that important business required their presence elsewhere.

Lord Dunraven's Resignation.

A London cable says: In the House of Lords last night Lord Dunraven made a personal explanation, giving the reasons which caused him to resign the Under Secretaryship for the Colonies. He said his action was principally caused by considerations of public economy. He differed with the Government on colonial questions, but he did not resign on that account. The Ministerial action on the fisheries dispute between the United States and Canada had not influenced him, for he agreed with the Government in the course it had pursued, but he strongly disapproved of the action taken in another matter of colonial policy. The position taken by the Government in the Newfoundland fisheries he did not approve of, as well as in other points of colonial policy. He disapproved of the course being adopted towards Ireland. That country needed liberal measures and proper system of county government. But above all there should be a rigid economy in the public expenditures. The Marquis of Salisbury replied humorously to Lord Dunraven's explanations.

It is semi-officially stated in St. Petersburg that in Russian Government circles the conviction is gaining ground that war between France and Germany is inevitable. In addition to this, it is said that as a fresh defeat of France might involve disastrous results to Russia, the Czar's Government will, in the event of war, preserve entire liberty of action. It will not support France as an ally, but may—by a firm, reserved attitude—prevent Germany from sending the whole of her army west of the Rhine, and even if France should be defeated, alleviate as much as possible the effects of the disaster. For these reasons, it is declared, Russia will await the outcome of the different phases of the Bulgarian crisis with the greatest calmness, and act in such a way as to avoid being involved with Austria or England at the moment when France and Germany commence hostilities.

A HUNGRY BOY.

A Youth with a Bottomless Stomach Eats Everything Within Reach.

A special to the Indianapolis Journal from Martinsville says: Henry Flowers, a 14-year-old boy of Jefferson Township, this county, is one of the most peculiar specimens of humanity that have ever come to light in this section. He came to town last Saturday, as is his usual custom, and was taken to the Mansion House of this city by two prominent citizens, who bargained with the landlord to furnish the boy a square meal for 55 cents, they wishing to satisfy their curiosity as to his abilities as an eater. They did not have long to wait until their fondest hope of getting the joke upon the landlord was realized. He ate six pieces of light bread, two pieces of corn bread, two large slices of beef, roasted with gravy; two large slices of roasted pork, four large potatoes, one dish of beans, one dish of slaw, two dishes of hominy, one dish of parsnips and two pieces of pie. After eating his pie he called for a bowl of oysters, and was informed that they were not on the bill of fare for that day. He then went to Dr. Blackstone's to eat again, and his meal there consisted of seven potatoes, three slices of bread, each six by eight inches; two slices of roast beef, two cups of coffee, one dish of tomatoes, one dish of butter beans and two pieces of pie. As is usual with him his hunger was not yet satisfied. He went from Dr. Blackstone's to one of the city bakeries, there purchased ten cents' worth of cheese and crackers and ate them, and at last accounts he was in his usual condition.

The boy is very lean and of less than the average height for his age, being only about three feet high, and weighing but forty pounds. His skin is thick and yellow, his cheeks hollow and sunken, and his eyes give an unmistakable proof of his constant hunger, which he evinces on all occasions. Seldom, if ever, does one encounter such an appetite, and it is a wonder where he stows away so much food. No physician here can satisfactorily diagnose his case.

HIS LAST WISH.

A Pittsburger Wants his Ashes Carried to Mid-Ocean and Scattered to the Four Winds.

A Pittsburg despatch says: In his will, which was drawn up yesterday by Alderman Hartman, Ambrose Retharge, aged 52, after disposing of $10,000 in real estate, directs: "That my body be taken to St. Michael's Church, and after the proper religious services are performed that it be given in charge of my family, who will convey it to Samson crematory and then have it burned to ashes, the ashes to be put in a small bottle and given in charge of the German consul in this city. This gentleman will then forward my ashes to the consul in New York, who will give them in charge of the captain of the German steamer Elbe, who will place them securely in his ship for the ocean voyage. When at mid-ocean I direct the captain to request one of the passengers to dress in a seafaring suit and ascend with my ashes in his hand to the top of the topmast, and after pronouncing a last benediction to extract the cork from the bottle and cast its contents to the four winds of heaven. I direct also while this ceremony is being performed that it be witnessed by all the passengers on board. After the Elbe has completed her trip and returned again to New York I want a full statement of my death and the scattering of my ashes in mid-ocean published in the Pittsburg papers, so that my friends in this city shall know my burial place." Retharge, who has not been considered eccentric, and about twenty-five friends were present in the alderman's office while the document was being drawn up.

LOVE, HATE AND COWARDICE.

Dreadful Attempt of a Rejected Lover to Burn the Object of his Affections.

A Nashville, Tenn., despatch says: The arrest of Elisha Greig here last night reveals a diabolical plot to commit murder and arson. On Sunday night the residence of Mr. Jesse Nolan, a farmer in Davidson County, was burned and the inmates of the house, Miss Mattie Ormand and Mrs. Hamlet, barely escaped cremation. The fire was supposed to be incendiary, and last night Greig made a confession of having set fire to the house. He said he had been hired by a neighboring farmer (Jim Bulleyjack) to burn the place. Bulleyjack had planned, he said, to burn Miss Ormand, who had refused him in marriage. The plan was to catch her if she escaped burning and murder her. They took a rope along to drag her to the river and throw her body in. After they set the fire both got frightened and aroused the ladies—who had barely time to get out—could see who they were. Greig was arrested on suspicion, and confessed as above related. Miss Ormand is to marry Bulleyjack's rival next week, hence his desire for revenge.

$50,000 IN AN OLD LOG HUT.

The Wealth of the Monmouth Hermit who is Slowly Dying.

A Keyport, N.J., despatch says: John I. Schenck, the old Monmouth county hermit, is slowly dying at the home of his brother, to which he was taken about nine months ago. The hermit is nearly 80 years of age, and for nearly fifty years lived in seclusion, allowing no one to cross his threshold. Just before his removal to his brother's home he had been suffering from a stroke of paralysis, and had it not been for the timely visit of his brother he would certainly have died at the time for want of nourishment and care. The near neighbors had noticed that he had not been out for several days, and, suspecting that he was sick, sent for his brother, who found him very low.

After his removal an investigation of his hut was made. In a little shanty which was built in a thicket was found an iron box containing papers worth $10,000. In other corners of the tumble-down building was found quite a large quantity of gold and silver coins. Under one of the beds in his two-story rookery which answered for a home was found an old woollen stocking filled with money.

The interior of the building very much resembled a museum, there being many curious articles hung upon the walls. In all about thirty muskets and guns were counted. On attempting to take one down Mr. Schenck was astonished at its weight. Upon examination he was rather surprised to find it filled up with ten dollar gold pieces. In all nearly $50,000 in money and valuable papers were found concealed around the hut and outbuildings. The old hut is daily visited by many sight-seers. This ancient, tumble-down building is hardly two stories high, with an old style roof slanting nearly to the ground. There are four rooms, the largest being 8x15 feet. The staircase is made from an enormous oak log, with deep notches cut in it. Much of the furniture was made from oak trees cut on the farm.

WONDERFUL FAITH CURE.

A Girl Raised From an Invalid's Bed and Restored to Health.

A Pittsburgh, Pa., despatch says: A remarkable faith cure was reported from Banksville, a mining town two miles southwest of this city, to-day. For several years Maggie Beadling, the 16-year-old daughter of a coal miner, has been bedridden. Frequently of late she has lain in a trance or comatose state for days, and when she would return to consciousness she would tell her friends that she had been to heaven. In proof of this she told the names and described the appearance of relatives who died before she was born, and of others whom she knew when they were alive. In October and November last she lay in a comatose state for several weeks, during which time she partook only of a small quantity of liquid food, administered to her by attendants. When she revived she said she had received divine communication to the effect that at 2 p.m. on February 17th she would be raised from an invalid's bed and entirely restored to health. This afternoon her father's house was filled with friends and neighbors, who waited in silence and awe for the predicted manifestation. The girl's face wore an expression of joy and seemed to grow in beauty as the hour drew near. Exactly at the stroke of 2 she arose from her chair with her crutches in her hands, and, flinging them aside, walked about the room, to the overwhelming astonishment of those present. The cure seemed complete and she jumped about like a child. The news was noised about and almost the entire population of Banksville turned out to see her. Her parents wept with joy and the greatest excitement prevailed. Miss Beadling was seen by several reporters and she pronounced herself well. It is the belief among neighbors that the young lady was sincere in her claim of affliction and her recovery is regarded as a miracle.

A Scene at a Funeral.

A disgraceful scene has occurred at Chester in connection with the burial of an aged man named Candeland. He lived alone and had been attended by a nurse from the Deaconesses' Institution and by several neighbors. The latter, thinking they had a claim on the old man's effects, locked the door of the cottage and refused to relinquish the key until they were paid. The funeral party, including several relations, were unable to get possession of the corpse until they had burst open the door, and then they found that the bed-room in which the deceased lay was also locked. Force had again to be resorted to before the corpse could be carried to the hearse. In the meantime a large crowd had gathered, and there was an angry demonstration against the persons who had perpetrated this outrage.—Pall Mall Gazette.

BURIED LIKE A DOG.

Indecent Treatment of a Veteran Soldier's Remains.

A St. John, N. B., despatch says: A story, which is almost incredible, comes from Norton, King's county. A few days ago, John Alberton, the oldest man in New Brunswick, died in the parish of Norton, where pauper farming is in vogue. He was buried on the same day in a box which had not even shavings on it for the body to lie on. There was no burial service, and, in fact, the man, who was 105 years old, who had served under Lord Nelson, and was present at the battle of the Nile, who served also at Waterloo, under Wellington, was buried like a dog. King's is the constituency represented in the Commons by Prof. Foster.

OUT IN THE COLD.

The Adventure of a Gentleman Who Would Not Sleep With His Brother.

One night, writes Bob Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle, I reached Erie the pleasant just as the clocks in the Lord Mayor's castle struck 21. It was bitter, biting, stinging cold, and there was no ambulance at the station, while there was a good hotel there. I went in and registered, and a man of commanding presence, tailor built clothes and a brown beard of most refined culture followed me, and under my plebeian scrawl made the register luminous with his patrician cognomen. I stood a little in awe of this majestic being, about as little as I usually stand in the presence of any majestic creature, and when in a deep, bass, commanding voice he ordered a room, I had a great mind -something that I always carry with me when I travel —to go out and get him one. The gentlemanly and urbane night clerk, who also seemed to be deeply impressed—as is the habit of the night clerk—with the gentleman's responsible-to-any-amount toot on sawmbel, said he was sorry, but he had but one vacant room and it contained but one bed. "Still," he said, as became a man who was bound to stand for his house if it hadn't a bed in it, "it was a very wide bed, very wide and quite long. Two gentlemen could sleep in it quite comfortably, and if——" But the commanding being at my side said that was quite altogether out of the question entirely. Quite. He was sorry for the—here he looked at me, hesitated, but finally said—gentleman, but He couldn't share His room with him. He was sorry for the—gentleman, and hoped he might find comfortable lodgings, but He couldn't permit him to occupy even a portion of His bed. Then the clerk begged pardon, and was sorry, and all that, but this other gentleman had registered first, and it was for him to say what disposition should be made of this lonely room and solitary bed. I hastened to assure the majestic being that it was all right; he was welcome to two-thirds of the room, all the looking-glass and one-half of the bed. "No," he said very abruptly, "I will sit here by the stove and sleep in a chair. I thank you, sir, but I would not sleep with my own brother. I prefer a room to myself." I meekly told him that I didn't know what kind of a man his brother was, but, no doubt, he did, and, therefore, I must conclude that he wasn't a fit man to sleep with. But his brother was out of the question, and if he wanted part of my couch, he might have it and welcome, and I would agree not to think of his brother. "No, sir," he said, "I will sleep in no man's bed." I said I wouldn't either, if I wasn't sleepy, but when I was sleepy I didn't care; I'd sleep with the King of England or the President, and wouldn't care a cent who knew it.

Well, I went to bed. I curled up under the warm, soft blankets, and heard the winds shriek and wail and whistle and yell —how like all creation the wind can blow in Erie—and as the night grew colder and colder every minute, I fell asleep and dreamed that heaven was just 48 miles west of Dunkirk. About 2.30 or 3 o'clock, there came a thundering rap at the door, and with a vague, half-waking impression in my dream that somebody from the other place was trying to get in, I said:

"What is it?"

"It is I," answered a splendid voice, which I recognized at once. "I am the gentleman who came on the train with you."

"Yes," I said; "and what is the matter?"

The splendid voice was a trifle humble as it replied:

"I have changed my mind about sleeping with another man."

"So have I!" I howled, so joyously that the very winds laughed in merry echo; "So have I! I wouldn't get out of this warm bed to open that door for my own brother!"

I will close this story here. If I should write the language that went down that dim, cold hall outside my door you wouldn't print it. And when next morning I went skipping down stairs as fresh as a rose, and saw that majestic being knotted up in a hard arm-chair, looking a hundred years old, I said:

"Better is a poor and wise child than an old and foolish king, who knoweth not how to be admonished. For out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas, also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor." This also is vanity.

FORTS OF SOLID STEEL.

A Bold Idea in Iron Work Such as Might Abash Great Vulcan.

When Sir Henry Bessemer began his experiments cast-steel railroad bars were worth more than $200 a ton; that is the same thing as saying they were worth so much that they could not be used at all. Now they can be bought for $18 to $20 a ton, and it is certainly impossible to say the limit has been reached. The difficulty with the costly steel plates for armor for ships and forts lies in the fact that they have to be cast by a costly process, their edges planed, and then they must be bolted together and fitted in place. To make a fort is a tedious and very costly process. But Sir Henry himself says that it is not necessary. No one has attempted to obviate it, and no individual can; but a nation could do it. Suppose that we wish to cast the side of a fort in steel, say 200 feet long, 16 feet high and 3 feet thick. We have only to build a gigantic mold out of brick and concrete, build on top of this mold, say eight or ten 20-ton Bessemer converters, capable of turning out three charges in twenty-four hours; they would run into the mold a ton of molten steel every thirty seconds and the mold would be filled in sixteen hours. The melted steel would solidify as it was poured in, so that there would only be six or eight inches of melted metal on the surface at any stage of the filling.

It sounds preposterous to speak of casting the whole side of a fort in one plate or piece, embrasures and all. But Sir Henry says it can be done. He will undertake also to cast the turret for a warship in one solid piece of steel. It makes no difference what shape the fort or turret is to take, or where or how many are to be its loop holes or posts; it is merely a question of building the matrix in the first instance in this or that shape. Suppose that the face of a fort weighs 2,000 tons, it is clear that it could be cast in a single piece for about $40,000. Built up of plates in the usual style it might cost ten times that sum. It is but a step from this theory to one for the casting of an entire fortress. Whether turrets can be cast as proposed is another question, because the difficulty of casting them in situ would have to be surmounted. It would not be difficult to cast the turret to a matrix on shore; but to put it in position afterward would tax the ingenuity of the engineers.

Sir Henry says that a fort cast in one piece three feet thick could not be destroyed by any artillery now in existence. At any rate, the process of casting being cheap and easy, the thickness can be increased to any required extent. It is only necessary that there should be enough converters in operation to supply a sufficient flow of molten steel. It would need a 10-ton converter for every 75 square feet of horizontal section. There is no limit practically to the number of converters which could be caused to pour their floods into a matrix for a fort, but it would burst the matrix if too many converters were emptying into it at the same time. It would not be unreasonable for Congress to authorize an experiment on these lines.—New Orleans Picayune.

STORIES OF THE ROTHSCHILDS.

Pithy Pieces of Advice Given by the Rich Banker.

It is related of Baron Nathan de Rothschild that on one occasion he gave a lady the following pithy piece of advice: Seated at dinner table, she informed him that she had an only son, whom she was anxious to see placed well in business, and begged him to give her a hint on the subject. For a long time the Baron hesitated, and at length, when urged by the lady, half good naturedly and half worried, he turned round and said: "Well, madam, I will tell you. Selling lucifer matches is a very good business if you have plenty of it."

The first English Rothschild came to England with £2,000, which he soon turned into £60,000. "My success," he said to Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, "all turned on one maxim. I said: I can do what another man can. Another advantage I had, I was an off hand man. I made a bargain at once. When I was settled in London, the East India Company had £800,000 worth of gold to sell. I went to the sale and bought it all. I knew the Duke of Wellington must have it. I had bought a good many of his bills at a discount. The Government sent for me, and said they must have it. When they had got it they did not know how to get it to Portugal. I undertook all that, and I sent it through France; and that was the best business I ever did." Another rule of his was never to have anything to do with unlucky men. "I have seen," said he, "many clever men—who had no shoes to their feet. I never act with them. Their advice sounds very well, but fate is against them; they cannot go on themselves; and if they cannot do good to themselves, how can they do good to me?"—Savannah (Ga.) News.

1. Never put anything into the ear for the relief of toothache.
2. Never wear cotton in the ears if they are discharging pus.
3. Never attempt to apply a poultice to the inside of the canal of the ear.
4. Never drop anything into the ear unless it has been previously warmed.
5. Never use anything but a syringe and warm water for cleaning the ears from pus.
6. Never strike or box a child's ears; this has been known to rupture the drum-head, and cause incurable deafness.
7. Never wet the hair, if you have any tendency to deafness; wear an oiled-silk cap when bathing, and refrain from diving.
8. Never scratch the ears with anything but the finger, if they itch. Do not use the head of a pin, hair pins, pencil tips or anything of that nature.
9. Never let the feet become cold and damp, or sit with the back towards the window, as these things tend to aggravate any existing hardness of hearing.
10. Never put milk, fat or any oily substance into the ear for the relief of pain, for they soon become rancid and tend to incite inflammation. Simple warm water will answer the purpose better than anything else.
11. Never be alarmed if a living insect enters the ear. Pouring warm water into the canal will drown it, when it will generally come to the surface, and can be easily removed by the fingers. A few puffs of tobacco smoke blown into the ear will stupefy the insect.
12. Never meddle with the ear if a foreign body, such as a bead, button or seed enters it; leave it absolutely alone, but have a physician attend to it. More damage has been done by injudicious attempts at the extraction of a foreign body than could ever come from its presence in the ear.—Health and Home.

SHIPPING A BIG TELESCOPE.

Extraordinary Precautions Taken to Prevent its Being Injured.

The two great lenses for the Lick telescope, on which Messrs. Clark, of Cambridge, have been so long at work, are now practically completed, and will soon be sent to their destination. The plan adopted for shipping the double lens, worked out by Capt. Fraser, is as follows: The two glasses will first be wrapped in fifteen or twenty thicknesses of cloth, drawn very tight. The cloth will be cotton, and, in order to make it soft and perfectly free from grit, it will be washed many times and thoroughly beaten. Next to the cloth will come a thick layer of cotton batting, and then a layer of paper. A box made of wood and lined with felt will contain the glasses when so prepared, the felt lining of the box coming next to the paper. The lenses with their covering will be packed tightly in this box. The shape of this box will conform to the shape of the lenses. The felt will be attached with glue, so that no nails will be anywhere near the glass. Outside of this wooden box and inclosing it will be a strong steel box, about the shape of a cube. The wooden box will be tightly packed into the steel box with curled hair. To inclose this steel box will be still another steel box or chest, and the inner steel box will be kept from touching it by a large number of spiral springs covering the whole interior of the out steel chest. This outer chest will be packed with asbestos, to render it fireproof, and both of the steel boxes will be made airtight and waterproof. The outer chest will be suspended by pivots in a strong wooden frame, and a contrivance has been adopted for turning the chest one-quarter around every day during its progress to California. This is to prevent any molecular disarrangement in the glass and to avoid the danger of polarization, it being feared that the jarring of the train will disturb the present arrangement of the molecules unless the position of the glass is daily changed and all lines of disturbance thus broken up. The glass will be insured to its full value—or rather its cost—$51,000, and all the precautions mentioned are taken to prevent any accident to it. It would probably be impossible to replace it, as Fell, who cast it, and the elder Clark, who ground it, are both old men. The glass will be shipped by express.

There is something almost romantic in the design and construction of the monster Lick telescope. Being the greatest work ever undertaken, presenting difficulties that had never before been encountered, inviting and suffering drawbacks and disasters that seemed to be sufficient to stagger the most persistent and painstaking skill, watched from day to day by a world of anxious observers hovered over and caressed by the united wisdom of a generation, the lens has come into the world with its great cyclopean eye ready to pierce the mysteries of the heavens. Captain Thomas Fraser, Superintendent of the Observatory, furnishes some hitherto unpublished and highly interesting information concerning the grinding of the crown-glass lens, and the plan adopted for transporting it from Cambridgeport, Mass., to San Jose. On the subject of the grinding he says that the closest measurement at command was the 110,000th part of an inch, but in grinding the great lens it was discovered that even this infinitesimal fraction was too large. A still finer measurement was required in reducing the lens in numberless places to a thickness (itself unequal) that would exactly concentrate parallel rays of light, filling a circle three feet in diameter, to a point a little larger than a pin. In order to reduce the fine measurement already at command the following ingenious arrangement was employed by Alvin Clark & Sons, the makers of the lens: A gas jet was placed before a mirror, which sent the rays of light through a telescope to the great lens, thus magnifying the rays. The magnificent light, passing through the great lens, was still further immensely magnified, and after having passed through the lens it was observed through a second telescope and thus further magnified. In this way the least failure of the great lens to concentrate perfectly was detected, and there was also determined the amount of glass in it, at any given point, that had to be ground off in order to secure a perfect focus. Thus a measurement of the 2,000,000th part of an inch was secured. It took very little grinding to remove so small a thickness of glass from a given point, a gentle rubbing with the thumb being sufficient, as the glass is softer than common window glass.—Boston Transcript.

A Cat's Remarkable Feat.

Mr. John A. Thompson, of lot 12, 3rd concession, O. S., Melancthon, has a cat, the gastronomical performances of which are worthy of note. The other day Mr. Thompson carried from the barn to the house thirty-four mice which he had killed while moving sheaf oats, and one frozen mouse. These mice he commenced to feed to a 9-months-old cat. In ten minutes by the watch the cat had eaten and taken into its little stomach thirty-four mice out of the thirty-five. The thirty-fifth, being frozen, took up nearly ten minutes more of the cat's time, but the feline disposed of it also before quitting the job. The truth of this story is vouched for by two other witnesses, who say it wasn't a good day for eating mice, either.—Shelburne, Grey Co., Economist.

Receipts for an Inexpensive Company Dinner—Household Hints.

When company comes in suddenly to dinner or tea and the family larder is almost empty the good housekeeper is almost worried into an early grave to know what to get for the meal. It must be something that will cook quickly and taste nicely, and of course cost but little. Here are a few receipts that may aid them at such a moment. If there are any apples in the house wash them and put into a hot oven to bake. They will make a nice dessert eaten with cream and sugar, or if the milk is not plentiful put a little molasses in the dish while baking, or the cores may be removed and the centres filled with cinnamon, cloves and sugar, and a little hot water poured over them.

Every one knows how to make quick biscuits. Of course they are not at all healthy as a steady diet, but are palatable for any emergency. They should be made with a little sour milk, if possible, and a little butter as well as lard will add to the taste. The secret of having them light is to work them quickly and bake immediately.

Any cold meat that may be on hand, if not in sufficiently good shape to eat sliced, may be converted into croquettes. If beef, lamb, chicken, corned beef or veal, chop to a mince, make moist with one or two eggs, add a little mashed potato, salt, pepper and enough milk to make into a thick paste, roll in little oblong shapes and fry in boiling hot lard a light brown. Serve on little squares of buttered toast and with cold celery, if you can get it. Two or three kinds of meat and fowl may be used for these croquettes, and a little ham or bacon will add to the flavor.

Pieces of cold chicken or turkey may be warmed up with a little butter in a frying-pan; put on a platter into the oven, and surrounded by biscuits halved, or small, thick slices of bread. Then make the following gravy to pour over all: Into the frying-pan put a large piece of butter, a cup or two cups of milk, and any gravy that may be left over. Bring it to a boil; then add sufficient flour, first wet in a little cold milk or water, to make the consistency of cream. Season with salt and add a little of the dark meat chopped to a mince. Let the sauce cook for a few moments, then pour over the biscuits and fowl. This will be found a really nice dish, and but little chicken or turkey is needed to make it go around.

Gold Fields,

that pan out richly, are not so abundant as in the early California days, but those who write to Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, will, by return mail, receive free, full information about work which they can do, and live at home wherever they are located, that will pay them from $5 to $25 per day, and upwards. Either sex, young or old. Capital not required; you are started in business free. Those who start at once are absolutely sure of snug little fortunes.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

THE "BROOM BRIGADE."

[The following lines were composed by an aspiring poet, whose modesty prevents us giving publicity to his name. He desires to remain in the background until his success as a poet is assured. Our junior "Prince of Darkness" thinks there is little danger of the poet's name becoming public!—ED. ADVANCE.]

Come all ye good people,
And listen to me,
While a song I will sing
Of the Broom Brigade!

Earthly glories are fleeting,
Its joys they soon fade,
But not so, gentle reader,
With the great Broom Brigade!

The roller craze has departed—
Mighty shortly it stayed—
But that aint the case
With the great Broom Brigade!

From Flesherton to Durham,
In glory arrayed,
With "palms" in their hands,
Went the bold Broom Brigade!

Over night there they stayed,
The poor Tories they flayed,
And loud was the shouting
Of the great Broom Brigade!

With the first peep of day,
G. put on his plaid,
And sweet was the joy
Of the great Broom Brigade!

Each got him a broom,
For which they well paid,
And back towards Flesherton
Came the bold Broom Brigade!

The horses were fresh—
G. wore his best plaid—
And with clatter and rush
Went the bold Broom Brigade!

High up in the air
The brooms were now swung,
With many a cheer—
Crash, bangety, bang!

Great then was the merriment,
With which they were swayed,
Thro' Priceville they swept—
The great Broom Brigade!

But loud was the shouting
From the man of the plaid,
When thro' Flesherton's streets,
Rush'd the bold Broom Brigade!

At last they get through, and
The final bray 'a brayed,
Then out of the sleigh
Jumps the brave Broom Brigade!

"Landerkin's elected!"
Said the man of the plaid,
"But Sir John's at the helm!"
Thou foolish Brigade!

"It's alright," said T. W.,
As he flourished his broom,
"We've got in our man"—
Boom, boomety, boom!

"Yes, yes," said a Tory,
Who had watched the parade,
"But Artemesia did little
For the great Broom Brigade!"

"That's so," said another,
As the brooms he surveyed,
"And Canada did less
For the great Broom Brigade!"

Hurrah! and a tiger!
Let's cheer with a will,
The country is safe
From danger and ill!

The battle is over,
We're on a safe grade,
And deep is the gloom,
Of the sad Broom Brigade!

SQUIRE SQUIB.

By Deacon Snukes.

A silent summer's evening; the romping children had gathered in their homes and were mostly sleeping in their cosy cots. The mothers, resting from their daily toil, were leaning on their garden gates or resting in the cottage porch, talking over the latest gossip. There was a peaceful calm around, which even the old dog, as he lay with his great shaggy head resting on his paws, seemed to enjoy. The cool air was refreshing after the heated day, and as the twilight deepned, the dark outline of the woods, beyond, which the last faint streak of the setting sun was barely visible, gave a fitting frame to so sweet a picture. The air was fragrant with the perfume of the Wall flower, Dafodill and sweet Violets, which grew in rich profusion in the cottage gardens; while the smell of the new mown hay borne on the rising breeze was a refreshing tribute of dame natures rich boquet. One after another, a light appeared at the small diamond-shaped panes of the upper windows, showing for a brief period the snowy whiteness of the curtains, then again all was darkness. There is an indiscribable charm in the quiet of a rural village, so quiet, so still. As you stood on the briege you could hear the water rippling over the stones beneath, while the moon, aslant of the old church tower, let down its silvery pall on its solemn surroundings, that you could fancy all nature sleeping in the mystic charm. Then in slow and solemn tones—tones which had sounded through the centuries of the past—tones which had hailed the birth or death of all the sleeping remnants of humanity beneath—struck out in measured notes the midnight hour. There was one home in which the deep echo of the last note, fell like a funeral knell, which was further increased by the hoot of a large owl as he flew from the church tower, almost in front of the open door of Squire Squibs cottage. A solitary watcher sat in the great arm chair; her hair was silvery white, a band of black velvet crossed her forehead, two small curls on each side of her face, which even in its failing and decay, was still beautiful. A china crape shawl, with colored silk embroidered flowers, was thrown over her shoulders, while two well worn plain hoops of gold, hung loosely on her ancient fingers. As she fondly toyed with one of these, a smile lit up her face, yet immediately after two silvery tears fell, unbidden guests, upon her hand. She had heard the same old tone from the bells year after year, while to-night in rapid retrospection, passed before her mind the years of long ago. It seemed but as yesterday, yet 55 years had come and gone, since as a blushing maiden, she had proudly passed the flower-strewn path through the old church door on her wedding day. The light and sunshine—cloud and gloom, of all her destiny she clearly saw. One precious gift carressed by parents love—then fell the shadows, and its pure wee form was laid beneath the daisy-covered mound. Another joy, a bright strong lad—a restless spirit grown to man's estate, then—off upon the stormy ocean borne, in dreaded darkness wrecked, and in its cold embrace lies forty fathoms deep, with his illfated crew. Swift footed time—all pass away. To-night, a silent watcher waiting for her husband's coming, another hour strikes and breaks the mystic spell—where is he?

Squire Squib, was a small farmer and malster who had for many years resided in Old Eynsford Village, he was somewhat eccentric in his habits, and his religious views were not such as would inspire confidence in our modern theologians. He would attend occasionally the Parish church, but had a pronounced objection to "dissenters," be they Baptists or Methodists, to the latter body, his wife was a conscientious adherant, though she shared in the general reproach which her husband showered liberally upon all others who differed with his religious views. He hobnobed with the Mandays and the Jewells and occasionally met Sir Percy for a run with the hounds. He was usually at the Dartford Corn Market on Saturday, generally imbibing somewhat, as was his usual custom, on the home trip, yet his faithful old roan who for so many years had carried him back and forth, had invariably reached home safely, though occasionally somewhat late. On this eventful night he came not, where could he be?

The long, long hours passed with leaden wings, as the solitary watcher, waited in vain for his return. The faintest glimmer in the east, whose grey tints were quietly dispelling the shades of departing night, proclaiming the advent of the coming day. Gradualy expanding soon the rising sun bathed in its golden sheen, the hill and dale. Up from the dew-bespangled graves, arose the lark on graceful wing, enriching nature with its warbling song—a fitting tribute to the day of rest.

With weary limbs Mrs Squib arose from her long virgil and soon the quiet of the Sabbath morn was broken by an unusual stir in the village, when the fact of the Squire's absence became known. Parties were speedily organized and dispatched, scouring the country in all directions for the missing one. The congregation at the church was small consisting of a few old ladies and children, as most of the men folk were amongst the searchers. The day passed wearily and no tidings arrived. Afternoon, evening, night—and the searchers came back sad and weary at their fruitless effort.

CHAPTER II.

Squire Squib, after leaving Dartford on the Saturday afternoon, was seen to pass through the Orange Tree toll gate, and also to dismount at the "Ship" at Sutton, at which hostelry he refreshed himself and beast. Late in the afternoon he was seen by a labourer passing over Francis Hill. Later in the dusk of the evening he passed the "Checkers" at Farningham, after this all traces of him were lost. Passing over the bridge he turned to the right through a recently cut wheat field, a short cut to Eynsford not public property, but from the fact that being somewhat late, and possibly indistinct in his calculations, thought he could venture in safety. About the centre of this field was a large excavation, which in previous years had been used as a chalk pit, it had been made the receptacle of weeds and general rubbish from the fields for some years past, its mouth was partly hidden by the long grass and bushes which overhung it. To this point, the horse with his rider, appear to have made direct, missing his foot-hold both fell down the shaft. Fortunately the large accumulation of debris broke the force of their fall, that beyond a severe shaking, neither man or beast sustained any serious injury. The Squire was thoroughly sobered, as he gazed up through the growing darkness above him. He began to realize his fearful position, in vain he cried for help, exhausted he at last fell to sleep. He awoke cold and stiff on the Sunday morning with his mind full of unrest. He was some two miles from Eynsford, nearly a mile from the public road, and as he reflected that no person was likely to pass that way, the awful possibilities of slow starvation nearly deprived him of his reason. He again called loudly for help, taking out his pocket knife, he now endeavored to cut steps in the perpendicular wall, until with broken blades and bleeding hands he was compelled to give up his vain endeavor. The day passed in indiscribable mental agony—alone, beyond all apparent human help—brought face to face with death in one of its most horrible forms, he at last thought of one who was able to deliver even from the "Horrible Pit." The greater part of the Sabbath night was spent in an agony of supplication for deliverance to the God he had so long despised. Monday found the old Squire almost exhausted from hunger and fatigue, yet in his heart he had a strange joy, for the light of life had shone into his dark soul, "old things had passed away to him "all things had become new." Some verses, long neglected in the past, came to mind, and a song of praise, with words of thanksgiving arose from the pit to the God of his salvation. The search was kept up all day on Monday—with no success. Tuesday morning one of the party thought of the bare possibilty of his crossing the wheat field, diligent search revealed the tracks of the horse, which were carefully followed until the fatal pit was reached where all traces, and all apparent hope of life ended. Yet before returning with the mournful news some one ventured to shout down the pit, when to their great delight and astonishment a faint voice replied "we are both alive." While some staid by the pit, others ran for help and in a short time Squire Squib was carefully brought to the surface. Great care was required in administration of stimulents, as with tender hands he was carried home. The entire neighborhood was roused and with shoutings of joy the old horse was raised from the pit and led home in triumph, apparently not much the worse for his adventure. I have seen both the horse and the man many times after this occurance. Squire Squib lived some years to witness a good confession to the power of Him who had brought him up out of the "Horrible Pit" and had established his goings. His end was peace.

A Dialogue.

Good morning, John, how are you making it go this winter;

JOHN.—Well, to tell you the truth, Joe, I am feeling much better, but during the fall my lower lip was pretty long. I had $300 or $400 against me all told. My crops were short and funds low, and how to meet my payments was a conundrum. My wife and I had many a chat over the matter; so one night as we were talking over our affairs, Abigail made a suggestion. Says she, John go up to Flesherton and call on W. J. Bellamy; he lends money. So next morning I goes up and called at his office near the Town Hall, on Toronto street. After talking the matter over with him and telling my troubles, says he, I can get you out of that fix. How, says I? Well, says he, you have a good farm and I will lend you all the money you want at six and a half per cent. straight loan, and you can have your own terms to pay the principal. So I borrowed enough to let me out alright. I paid all my debts and am a happy man to-day, and Abigal says she hardly knows me.

JOE.—Do you think I can get any from him;

JOHN.—Yes, yes, all you want.

JOE.—Well, I shall see him on election day. I desire to consolidate my liabilities and owe only one, so I shall let you know how I get along.

BELLAMY.—Others may do likewise, as the North of Scotland has lots of money.

RUSSELL'S Noted Jewelry Store,
FLESHERTON.

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Goods at slaughtered prices. See J. G. Anderson's advt. in another column.

Our thanks are due to Capt. J. Rorke, M.P.P., for parliamentary papers.

Take your repairing to Russell, Flesherton, you will get a perfect job every time.

Look out for a brass band concert soon. It will be announced on Friday evening next.

A 50 acre farm, 14 acres cleared, in Artemesia, for sale. Apply to Mr. M. Richardson, Flesherton.

Don't fail to see the bargains J. G. Anderson is offering. Wright's stand.

Six teems wanted to draw Cedar logs at Proton Station. Apply to James Stinson, Proton Station.

Don't fail to see the beautiful cantata, "Lost and Saved" in the Town Hall Flesherton, on Friday evening, March 11th 1887.

Great improvements have been made in the Sons of Temperance hall here lately, which gives it quite a cosy, home-like appearance.

If you think it will pay you to buy a ten dollar suit or overcoat for five dollars, go to Richardson & Co's sale this week.

If you miss the entertainment in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday ...

Mr. C. W. Wright, who is attending the Toronto School of Medicine, came home for a few days vacation on Saturday last.

Mr. Milner, Mayor of Brampton, and Mr. Dick, Register of Peel Co. and founder of the Brampton Banner, died at their residences, Brampton, last week.

A good farm over in Holley's neighborhood, Artemesia, to rent. Call on Mr. Roger Lever, Flesherton, for particulars. See advt. in another column.

Next week we will publish a few interesting extracts from a very "newsy" letter received by a friend from Mr. W. H. Elder, who, with his family, is visiting in California.

The second youngest child of Mr. Wm. Barnhouse, Flesherton, accidentally swallowed a small glass bottle one day last week. No serious results have, as yet, followed the remarkable occurrence.

M. Richardson & Co's sale continues to attract keen buyers who are on the lookout for bargains. Clothing of all kinds selling at astonishing low figures.

Miss Alice Leitch visited her parents here this week. On Tuesday she took train for Owen Sound, where she will be placed in charge of a leading millinery store.

Mr. J. G. Anderson has purchased the stock of Mr. D. E. Wright here at so much on the $ and is now selling it off in the old stand. For particulars see bills, &c.

Remember the addresses in the Town Hall here to-morrow (Friday) afternoon at 1 o'clock, by Professors Robertson and Moyre, under auspices of Centre Grey Farmers' Institute.

Farmers' and millers should read the advt. in another column, offering West ½ Lot 38, Con. 9, Artemesia: also two fine Water Powers in Eugenia. See advt. headed "To Farmers and Millers."

M. Richardson & Co keep stock fresh and new for every season, by clearing out the surplus at any price it will bring. Their annual sale now progressing offers a rare opportunity to get staple goods at very low prices.

Rev. W. Ayer's went to Oshawa last week and remained over Sunday. In his absence the pulpit of the Methodist church here was very acceptably filled by Mr. Wm. Suggitt, of Eugenia, in the morning, and Mr. M. Richardson in the evening.

... membership were laid on the Recorder's table. The growth of the lodge during the past year has been steady and substantial.

Look here! You can buy factory cottons for 3 cents per yard, all-wool scarlet flannels for 10 cents per yard, Heavy factory flannels from 19 to 24 c., Dress goods from 5 cents per yard, and all goods cheap at Richardson & Co's Clearing Sale.

The Royal Templars speak very highly of the manner in which they were treated by our town line friends. The Concert held in the Schoolhouse in the evening was a grand success. Very few school sections in Grey possess better native talent. The Flesherton vocalists were much appreciated.

Any one in need of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Violins, Pipes, Purses &c., will do well to call at Russell's noted jewelry store, Flesherton, where they keep the finest stock at the lowest prices in this county; the only place to get your watch repaired properly.

The Temperance cantata, "Lost and Saved," under the direction of Prof. Morgan, promises to be one of the finest entertainments ever given here. You should see it. The band will be in attendance in full force and give some of their best selections, on Friday evening 11th inst.

We regret to learn that our esteemed neighbor, Mrs. Symons—sister to Mr. Wm. Barnhouse—is prostrated with illness. During her brother's illness she exerted herself beyond her strength—the more especially as Mrs. Barnhouse was visiting friends in Toronto at the time. Mrs. Symons speaks in feeling terms of the great kinduess of the people of Flesherton to her. But she deserves it all and more.

Early on Sunday morning last our streets were in such a slippery condition as to render pedestrianism a difficult and somewhat dangerous exercise. The Agricultural Editor measured five feet ten inches of a sidewalk on Collingwood street in the space of about three seconds. He then took the middle of the road for it, where he maintained an equilibrium in keeping with self-possession and dignity.

It is with regret we learn of the severe illness of our esteemed young townsman, Mr. Joseph Blackburne; also of the illness of Miss Addie Armstrong. It is many years since this neighborhood has witnessed so much sickness, and rarely has death visited the homes of our immediate neighbors so frequently as during the past few months. The frequent and violent changes in the weather may be considered as the parent of our ills.

Mr. W. G. Pickell, of this place, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Alex. Mitchell in the bailiffship of the Thornbury Division Court. The appointment is a good one. It is only necessary to say, that Mr. Pickell is a Christian gentleman and will fill the position honestly and impartially. Mr. P. is a gentleman of more than ordinary intelligence. We have long considered him one the best public speakers in East or South Grey. We take this opportunity to congratulate him upon ... appointment, and, for once at anyrate, we can give Hon. Mr Mowat great credit for the wise selection he has ...

On Saturday last Mr. Jenkins, of Durham, was driving a team attached to a dog cart from Durham to Flesherton when the horses shied at some wood about a mile west of Flesherton Station, throwing out all the occupants. Mrs. Jenkins, sr., an old lady of about 70 years, was severely bruised, but Mrs Jenkins, jr., and her little daughter escaped without serious injury. Mr. Spint, who had accepted an invitation ... hard snow and he ... wood with his head, sustaining two serious gashes in the scalp. The vehicle was righted and driven to the Station, where Dr. Christoe was soon in attendance.

To-Morrow Night.

To-morrow (Friday) night, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian Church, here, the really excellent sacred Dramatic Cantata, "Lost and Saved," will be rendered in the Town Hall, Flesherton, under the immediate direction of Prof. Morgan and Mr. Jas. G. Russell. We think we can safely promise the public a good treat—one worth much more than the price of admission. The cantata is full of rich Temperance gems, contains a number of sparkling choruses, and a rich vein of humor runs throughout. There are three acts and some six or seven scenes. Viewed from a purely dramatic standpoint, it is interesting and sprightly; including the vocal and instrumental music, it furnishes a delightful evening's entertainment. The moral tone is sound. The presence of Flesherton Brass Band will add much to the interest of the concert. Admission 25 cents, children 10 cents. Doors open at 7:30, to commence at 8 o'clock sharp. See bills for particulars.

An Emphatic Denial.

Mr. E. Linley, hotel-keeper, Maxwell, called at our office on Monday and gave a most emphatic denial to the statement of our correspondent that there was any dice-throwing in his hotel. He says he does not allow dice to be kept around the house at all, but tries to run the hotel strictly according to the provisions of the license act. Mr. Linley says he can furnish amply proof as to the truthfulness of his statements, and asks us to request our correspondent to retract his statements or he will have to appeal to another tribunal. All Mr. Linley wants, he says, is fair play and equal justice meted out to him with other citizens.

Died.

SAMPLE.—In Artemesia, on Sunday, 6th March, the wife of Mr. John Sample, aged—years.

[We extend our sympathy to Mr. Sample in his bereavement.]

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, the great Brooklyn preacher, died at his residence on Tuesday morning last, aged 73 years.

The Question Answered.

Editor Advance: Dear Sir,—I hereby submit to you the answer to the question in your paper of last week, viz $2.78596, or say $2,78½.

Yours Truly,
GEO. TREADGOLD

A Bible Question.

Editor Advance: Will some of the Flesherton Sabbath School children answer the following questions? (1) Who was David's mother's name? (2) What is the shortest verse in the bible and where is it to be found? (3) What verse in the bible contains all the letters in the alphabet except one? BIBLICUS.

Another Question in Arithmetic.

For 3rd & 4th Class Pupils.

The Hall occupied by the Sons of Temperance is 46 ft long, 22 ft. wide, and ... ft. high; how many rolls of paper, 20 inches wide (a roll of paper containing 7 yards) will be required to paper the walls. Address your answers to the "Mathematical Editor" of the ADVANCE, Flesherton.

Card of Thanks.

I do sincerely thank the Flesherton Lodge of I.O.O.F., for coming to attend upon the last obsequies of my son and their Brother. Such kindness, respect and sympathy, I cannot soon forget.

JOHN WHITBY.

Markdale, March 7th, 1887.

... Patriarch, occupied the chair very acceptably. The program consisted of a choice and varied selection of vocal and instrumental music, readings, recitation, and a regular old-fashioned spelling match.

Mr. C. J. Sproule's guitar solo and Will Campbell's mouth organ solo were interesting features. Miss Christoe never sang better. Miss Fawcett recited well. Flesherton Brass Band serenaded the entire company. Refreshments were served about 9:30 and they were of the best kind. We nearly forgot to add, that Master Frank VanDusen and George Pickell carried off first and second prizes respectively in the spelling match.

The merchants of the village of Blyth learnt a lesson by experience. After struggling along for several years, the publisher of the newspaper there was compelled to quit because the merchants did not give him sufficient support. They thought that a paper would be printed there whether they supported it or not, and a paper was no use to the village anyway! The paper ceased publication and now these same merchants see their big mistake and they are compelled to put their hands in their pockets to help to start another. They will perhaps have to spend three times as much to establish it as would have been necessary to give a liberal support to the one they allowed to collapse. A contemporary discussing on this matter winds up by saying: "It is to be remembered that it costs money to run a newspaper, and if support is not accorded it, the journal cannot exist. This important matter will present itself in quite a different light. There is nothing that assists the progress of a town more than a newspaper, and the fact should be borne in mind."

GREAT SALE.

J. G. Anderson having purchased the stock of D. E. Wright's at auction in Toronto, at 53 cents on the dollar, will for the next 30 days, sell the entire stock at prices never before heard of. The Goods must be sold at some price as I do not intend staying longer than will clear the stock. So, to get the benefit of the best choice, COME EARLY AND OFTEN.

WRIGHT'S OLD STAND.

Make Her Pillow Soft.

"Sir! are you the undertaker
That buries the pauper dead?
Then you are to fetch my Mary—
For that's what the doctor said.
You see, I am poor an' friendless,
An' lame from a cruel fall,
An' the sickness an' the medicine
Has taken our money all.

"Ugh—ugh—excuse this hacking,
It makes me slow to speak,
I am troubled with a cough, sir,
An' both my eyes are weak;
It's sittin' up all night, sir,
A-watchin' at death's door—
Yes, yes! I know I'm tedious,
It's tedious to be poor.

"What do I want? Just wait, sir,
I'm comin' to that same.
What did Mary die of?
Hunger and cold. Her name?
I've told her name—my Mary;
I'll set it down for you;
She died last night in my arms, sir,
We were alone—we two.

"An' I want to ask a favor:
When you make my Mary's bed
Please—make—her—pillow—soft, sir,
Soft for her achin' head,
I know it's done with the achin'
An' all that hurted it oft,
But 'twill comfort me a bit, sir,
If you—make—her—pillow—soft."

The undertaker heard him
And silent turned away;
But he made poor Mary's pillow
With tender hands that day.
And often something choked him
As of rising tears—and oft
He heard through the tap of the hammers
"Please—make—her—pillow—soft."

Under False Colors.

JACK FROST.

Good day, my dear madam, I'm your old friend
Jack Frost;
Who is bound to come back, though you might think him lost.
Here I am; how d'ye do? You don't look, though,
too pleased.
Oh, you think I'm too free in my way—well, I'm freezed!

MRS. HOUSEWIFE.

Oh, my dear Mr Jack, if you only could guess
What mischief you cause, I am in such a mess!
For my pipes are all burst, and from ceiling to floor
I'm flooded—don't know what to do, I am sure.

JACK FROST.

By Boreas! really your welcome is cold,
It is not very often my face you behold!
Now, tell me what season more beauty can show
Than my splendid white carpet of soft fleecy snow?

MRS. HOUSEWIFE.

Oh, yes, Mr. Frost, it is pretty, I'll own,
But its beauty, you see, sir, so quickly is flown;
And then how the air becomes cutting and raw
As we slop through the slud and the slush of the thaw!

JACK FROST.

Now, really, you grumble without a just cause,
If I do send the frosts, I don't send the thaws;
Then just think of your windows that charmingly gleam
When my tracery I weave, like a poet's sweet dream.

MRS. HOUSEWIFE.

Yes, the windows I will not deny, sir, look nice,
But the same frost will cover my steps with smooth ice;
I am frightened to put my foot now to the ground,
For my head follows suit, I too often have found.

JACK FROST.

I see, my dear madam, you like to complain,
Well, I'll leave for awhile, but I'll come back again

So Very Queer.

She's very queer, yet kind to those
Who bear her company;
The young folks think she hardly knows
Just what she talks about;
[illegible]
Than all the worlds above,
For they brought nearer than a star
The gentle light of love.

Yes, she is queer, we all confess,
And yet her wrinkled face
Has such a wealth of tenderness,
She needs no youthful grace;
She talks of one so long away
And hearts so far apart;
She says it seems but yesterday
That he was near her heart.

'Tis hard to make her comprehend
That she has told before
The story of a sailor's end
Upon a friendless shore,
She says he was to duty true
And bravely met his doom,
Insisting that his eyes of blue
Still guide her through the gloom.

Perhaps when we approach the shore
Where worldly journeys end,
We, too, may tell our stories o'er
And younger ears offend;
For age has thought from youth apart,
And only time can teach
The charity of mind and heart
That ought to govern each.

"Not Strangers There."

To whom would heaven's doors so freely open
As to a little child,
Who stands with timid feet upon its threshold,
Lovely and undefiled?

And such an one, of late, was lowly lying,
With fast receding breath;
Over her face the first, last shadow falling
She was afraid of death!

Her loved ones said, "Oh, do not fear to enter
That land so wide and fair."
To all their words of cheer she could but answer,
"I do not know them there!"

But, even as she spoke, her hands were lifted
In sudden, sweet surprise,
And the reflection of some dawning splendor
Illumed her wondering eyes.

No longer clinging to her tender watchers,
And darkened by their woe,
She looked as if she saw some loved one beckon,
And was in haste to go.

What she beheld we saw not, and her rapture
Our hearts not yet might share,
But with a last, bright smile she whispered gladly,
"They are not strangers there!"

The Bogus Veteran.

Mr. Shabby Genteel—"Will you be kind enough to tell me if it is a fact that the President has vetoed the Pension Bill?"

Gentleman—"He has."

"Well, if this country gets into another war, just count me out. I'll never risk my life again in the service of my country."

"Were you hurt during the war?"

"Indeed I was."

"What regiment were you in?"

"I wasn't in any regiment. I got the rheumatism from bathing in the St. Lawrence River during the second day of the battle of Gettysburg. Ah! sir, those were the times that tried men's souls. Haven't got a surplus dime for an old vet., have you?"—Texas Siftings.

The Dear Child's Wish.

Little Toddles—"I wish you had some skates, too, Aunt Meg."

Aunt Meg (wishing to encourage generosity)—"You might let me take yours."

Little Toddles—"No; you don't know what I mean. I thought it would be so nice for you to skate ahead of me and find all the weak places in the ice."

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

Then the Zulus closed in upon the doomed band, with a shout of "Bulala Umlungo!" (kill the whiteman.)

Out rang the postol-shots, and fire flew from the clash of swords and assegais, and still the little band, momentarily growing fewer, fought on with laboring breath. Never did hope-forsaken men make a more gallant stand. Still they fought, and still they fell, one by one, and as they fell were stabbed to death; but scarcely one of them was there whose death-wound was in his back.

At last the remaining Zulus drew back; they thought that it was done.

But no: three men yet stood together upon the very summit of the mound, holding six foes at bay. The Zulu captain laughed aloud when he saw it, and gave a rapid order. Thereupon the remaining Zulus formed up, and, stabbing the wounded as they went, departed swiftly over the dead, after the main body of the corps which had now vanished round the mountain.

They left the six to finish the three.

Three hundred had come to attack Alston's Horse; not more than one hundred departed from that attack. The overpowered white men had rendered a good account of their foes.

The three left alive on the summit of the little hill were, as Fate would have it, Ernest, Jeremy and the ex-sailor, who had complained of the "sargustic" companion, who as it happened had just died by his side.

Their revolvers were empty; Ernest's sword had broken off short in the body of a Zulu; Jeremy still had his sword, and the sailor a clubbed carbine.

Presently one of the six Zulus dodged in under the carbine and ran the sailor through. Glancing round, Ernest saw his face turn gray. The honest fellow died as he had lived, swearing hard.

"Ah, you——black mate," he sang out, "take that, and be d—d to you!" The clubbed rifle came down upon the Zulu's skull and cracked it to pieces and both fell dead together.

Now there were five Zulus left, and only Ernest and Jeremy to meet them. But stay; suddenly from under a corpse uprises another foe. No, it is not a foe, it is Mazooku, who has been shamming dead, but suddenly and most opportunely shows himself to be very much alive. Advancing from behind he stabs one of the attacking party, and kills him. That leaves four. Then he engages another and after a long struggle kills him too, which leaves three. And still the two white men stand back to back, with flashing eyes and gasping breath, and hold their own. Soaked with blood, desperate and expecting death, they were yet a gallant sight to see. Two of the remaining Zulus rush at the giant Jeremy, one at Ernest. Ernest, having no effective weapon left, dodges the assegai-thrust, and then closes with his antagonist, and they roll, over and over, down the hill together, struggling for the assegai the Zulu holds. It snaps in two, but the blade and about eight inches of shaft remain with Ernest. He drives it through his enemy's throat and he dies. Then he struggles up to see the closing scene of the drama, but not in time to help in it. Mazooku has wounded his man badly, and is following to kill him. And Jeremy. He has struck at one of the Kafirs with his sword. The blow is received on the edge of the cow-hide shield, and sinks half-way through it, so that the hide holds the steel fast. With a sharp twist of the shield the weapon is jerked out of his hand, and he is left defenceless, with nothing to trust to except his native strength. Surely he is lost! But no—with a sudden rush he seizes both Zulus by the throat, one in each hand, and, strong men as they are, swings them wide apart. Then with a tremendous effort he jerks their heads together with such awful force that they fall senseless, and Mazooku comes up and spears them.

Thus was the fight ended.

Ernest and Jeremy sank upon the bloody grass, gasping for breath. The firing from the direction of the camp had now died away, and, after the tumult, the shouts, and the shrieks of the dying, the silence seemed deep. It was the silence of the dead.

There they lay, white man and Zulu, side by side in the peaceable sunlight; and in a vague, bewildered way, Ernest noticed that the faces which a few minutes before had looked so grim, were mostly smiling now. They had passed through the ivory gates and reached the land of smiles. How still they all were! A little black and white bird, such as fly from ant-hill to ant-hill, came and settled upon the forehead of a young fellow scarcely more than a boy, and the only son of his mother, who lay quite across two Zulus. The bird knew why he was so still. Ernest had liked the boy, and knew his mother, and began to wonder as he lay panting on the grass what she would feel when she heard of her son's fate. But just then Mazooku's voice broke the silence. He had been standing staring at the body of one of the men he had killed, and was now apostrophizing it in Zulu.

"Ah, my brother," he said, "son of my own father, with whom I used to play when I was little; I always told you that you were a perfect fool with an assegai, but I little thought that I should ever have such an opportunity of proving it to you. Well, it can't be helped; duty is duty, and family ties must give way to it. Sleep well, my brother; it was painful to have to kill you—very."

Ernest lifted himself from the ground, and laughed the hysterical laugh of shattered nerves at this naive and thoroughly Zulu moralizing. Just then Jeremy rose and came up to him. He was a fearful sight to see—his hands, his face, his clothes were all red; and he was bleeding from a cut on the face, and another on the hand.

"Come, Ernest," he said in a hollow voice, "we must clear out of this."

"I suppose so," said Ernest.

On the plain at the foot of the hill several of the horses were quietly cropping the grass, till such time as the inferior animal, man, had settled his differences. Among them was Ernest's black stallion, "The Devil!" which had been wounded, though slightly, on the flank. They walked toward the horses, stopping on their way to arm themselves from the weapons which lay about. As they passed the body of the man Ernest had killed in his last struggle for life, he stooped and drew the broken assegai from his throat. "A memento," said he. The horses were caught without difficulty, and "The Devil" and the two next best animals selected. Then they mounted, and rode toward the top of the ridge over which Ernest had seen the body of Zulus lying in reserve. When they were near it Mazook got down and crept to the crest on his stomach. Presently, to their great relief, he signalled to them to advance: the Zulus had moved on, and the valley was deserted. And so the three passed back over the neck, that an hour and a half before they had crossed with sixty-one companions, who were now all dead.

"I think we have charmed lives," said Jeremy, presently.

"All gone except us two. It can't be chance."

"It is fate," said Ernest, briefly.

From the top of the neck they got a view of the camp, which now looked quiet and peaceful, with its white tents and its Union Jack fluttering as usual in the breeze.

"They must be all dead too," said Ernest; "which way shall we go?"

Then it was that Mazook's knowledge of the country proved of the utmost service to them. He had been brought up at a kraal in the immediate neighborhood, and knew every inch of the land. Avoiding the camp altogether, he led them to the left of the battle-field, and after two hours' ride over rough country, brought them to a ford of the Buffalo which he was acquainted with, some miles below where the few survivors of the massacre struggled across the river, or were drowned in attempting to do so. Following this route they never saw a single Zulu, for these had all departed in the other direction, and were spared the horrors of the stampede and of "Fugitives' Drift."

At last they gained the farther side of the river, and were, comparatively speaking, safe, on Natal ground.

They determined, after much anxious consultation, to make for the little fort at Helpmakaar, and had ridden about a mile or so toward it, when suddenly the Zulu's quick ear caught the sound of distant firing to their right. It was their enemy the Undi corps attacking Rorke's Drift. Leaving Mazook to hold the horses, Ernest and Jeremy dismounted and climbed a solitary koppie or hill which just there cropped out from the surface of the plain. It was of an ironstone formation, and on the summit lay a huge flat slab of almost pure ore. On to this they climbed, and looked along the course of the river, but could see nothing. Rorke's Drift was hidden by a rise in the ground. All this time a dense thundercloud had been gathering in the direction of Helpmakaar, and was now, as is common before sunset in the South African summer season, travelling rapidly up against the wind, set in a faint rainbow as in a frame. The sun, on the other hand, was sinking toward the horizon, so that his golden beams flying across a space of blue sky, impinged upon the black bosom of the cloud, and were reflected thence in sharp lights and broad shadows, flung like celestial spears and shields across the plains of Zululand. Isandhlwana's Mountain was touched by one great ray which broke in glory upon his savage crest, and crowned him that day's king of death, but the battle-field o'er which he towered was draped in gloom. It was a glorious scene. Above, the wild expanse of sky broken up by flaming clouds and tinted with hues such as might be reflected from the jewelled walls of heaven. Behind, the angry storm, set in its rainbow frame like ebony in a ring of gold. In front, the rolling plain where the tall grasses waved, the broad Buffalo flashing through it like a silver snake, the sun-kissed mountains, and the shadowed slopes.

It was a glorious scene. Nature in her most splendid mood flung all her color-streamers loose across the earth and sky, and waved them wildly ere they vanished into night's abyss. Life, in his most radiant ecstasy, blazed up in varied glory before he sank, like a lover, to sleep awhile in the arms of his eternal mistress—Death.

Ernest gazed upon it, and it sank to his heart, which, set to Nature's tune, responded ever when her hands swept the chords of earth or heaven. It lifted him above the world, and thrilled him with indescribable emotion. His eyes wandered over the infinite space above, searching for the presence of a God; then they fell upon Isandhlwana, and marked the spot just where the shadows were deepest; where his comrades lay and gazed upon the glorious sky with eyes that could not see, and at last his spirit gave way, and, weakened with emotion and long toil and abstinence, he burst into a paroxysm of grief.

"O Jeremy," he sobbed, "they are all dead, all, except you and I, and I feel a coward that I should still live to weep over them. When it was over, I should have let that Zulu kill me, but I was a coward, and I fought for my life. Had I but held my hand for a second I should have gone with Alston and the others, Jeremy."

"Come, come, old fellow, you did your best, and fought the corps like a brick. No man could have done more."

"Yes, Jeremy, but I should have died with them; it was my duty to die. And I do not care about living, and they did. I have been an unfortunate dog all my life. I shot my cousin, I lost Eva, and now I have seen all my comrades killed, and I, who was their leader, alone escaped. And perhaps I have not done with my misfortunes yet. What next, I wonner; what next?"

Ernest's distress was so acute that Jeremy, looking at him and seeing that all he had gone through had been too much for him, tried to soothe him, lest he should go into hysterics, by putting his arm round his waist, and giving him a good hug.

"Look here, old chap," he said; "it's no use bothering one's head about these things. We are just so many feathers blown about by the wind, and must float where the wind blows us. Sometimes it is a good wind, and sometimes a bad one, but on the whole it is bad, and we must just make the best of it, and wait till it doesn't think it worth while to blow our particular feathers about any more, and then we shall come to the ground, and not till then. And now we must have been up here for more than five minutes, and given the horses a bit of a rest. We must be pushing on if we want to get to Helpmakaar before dark, and I only hope we shall get there before the Zulus, that's all. By Jove, here comes the storm—come on!"—and Jeremy jumped off the lump of iron-ore and began to descend the koppie.

Ernest, who had been listening with his face in his hands, rose and followed him in silence. As he did so, a breath of ice-cold air from the storm-cloud, which was now right overhead, fanned his hot brow, and when he had gone a few yards he turned to meet it, and to cast one more look at the scene.

It was the last earthly landscape he ever saw. For at that instant there leaped from the cloud overhead a fierce stream of jagged light, which struck the mass of iron-ore on which they had been seated, shivered and fused it, and then ran down the side of the hill to the plain. Together with the lightning there came an ear-splitting crack of thunder.

Jeremy, who was now nearly at the bottom of the little hill, staggered at the shock. When he recovered, he looked up where Ernest had been standing, and could not see him. He rushed up the hill again, calling him in accents of frantic grief. There was no answer. Presently he found him lying on the ground, white and still.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE CLIFFS OF OLD ENGLAND.

It was an April evening; off the south coast of England. The sun had just made up his mind to struggle out from behind a particularly black shower-cloud, and give that part of the world a look before he bade it good-night.

"That is lucky," said a little man who was with difficulty hanging on to the bulwark netting of the R. M. S. Conway Castle; "now, Mr. Jones, look if you can't see them in the sunlight."

Mr. Jones accordingly looked through his glasses again.

"Yes," he said, "I can see them distinctly."

"See what?" asked another passenger coming up.

"The cliffs of Old England," answered the little man joyously.

"Oh, is that all," said the other; "curse the cliffs of old England!"

"Nice remark that for a man who is going home to be married, eh?"

But Mr. Jones had shut up his glass, and vanished aft.

Presently he reached a deck cabin and entered without knocking.

"England is in sight, old fellow," he said, addressing somebody who lay back smoking in a cane-chair.

The person addressed made a movement as though to rise, then put up his hand to a shade that covered his eyes.

"I forgot," he answered with a smile; "it will be very much in sight before I can see it. By-the-way, Jeremy," he went on, nervously, "I want to ask you something. These doctors tell such lies." And he removed the shade. "Now, look at my eyes, and tell me honestly, am I disfigured? Are they shrunk, I mean, or got a squint, or anything of that sort?"—and Ernest turned up his dark orbs, which except that they had acquired that painful, expectant look peculiar to the blind, were just as they always had been.

Jeremy looked at them, first in one light, then in another.

"Well," said Ernest, impatiently, "I can feel that you are staring me out of countenance."

"Hamba gachle," replied the imperturbable one. "I am di—di—diagnosing the case. There, that will do. To all appearance, your optics are as sound as mine. You get a girl to look at them, and see what she says."

"Ah, well; that is something to be thankful for."

Just then somebody knocked at the cabin-door. It was a steward.

"You sent for me, Sir Ernest?"

"Oh, yes, I remember. Will you be so good as to find my servant? I want him."

"Yes, Sir Ernest."

Ernest moved impatiently. "Confound that fellow with his everlasting 'Sir Ernest'!"

"What, haven't you got used to your handle yet?"

"No, I haven't, and I wish it were at Jericho, and that is a fact. It is all your fault, Jeremy. If you had not told that confoundedly garrulous little doctor, who went and had the information printed in the Natal Mercury, it would never have come out at all. I could have dropped the title in England; but now all these people know that I am Sir Ernest, and Sir Ernest I shall remain for the rest of my days."

"Well, most people would not think that such a dreadful misfortune."

"Yes, they would if they happened to shoot the real heir. By-the-way, what did the lawyer say in his letter? As we are so near home, I suppose I had better post myself up. You will find it in the dispatch-box. Read it, there's a good fellow."

Jeremy opened the box, battered with many years of travel, and searched about for the letter. It contained a curious collection of articles—prominent among which was a handkerchief, which had once belonged to Eva Ceswick; a long tress of chestnut hair tied up with a blue ribbon; ditto of golden, which had come—well, not from Eva's tresses; a whole botanical collection of dead flowers, tender souvenirs of goodness knows who, for, after a while, these accumulated dried specimens are difficult to identify; and many letters and other curiosities.

At last he came to the desired document written in a fair clerk's hand; and having shovelled back the locks of hair, etc., began to read it aloud:

"ST. ETHELFRED'S COURT,) POULTRY, 22nd January, 1879.)

"Sir:"

"You see," broke in Ernest, "while we were fighting over there at Sanshlwana, those beggars were writing to tell me that I was a baronet. "Case of the 'bloody hand' with a vengeance, eh?"

"Sir" (began Jeremy again), "it is our duty to inform you of the death, on the 16th of the present month, of our esteemed client, Sir Hugh Kershaw, Bart., of Archdale Hall, Devonshire, and of the consequent devolution of the baronetcy to yourself, as only son of the late Sir Hugh's only brother, Ernest Kershaw, Esq.

"Into the question of the unhappy manner in which you came to be placed in the immediate succession it does not become us to enter. We have before us at this moment a copy of Her Majesty's pardon, granted to you under the Transvaal Amnesty Act, and forwarded to us by Reginald Cardus, Esq., of Dum's Ness, Suffolk, which we have neither the wish nor the will to dispute. It is clear to us that, under this pardon, you are totally free from any responsibility for the breach of the law which you perpetrated some years since; and of this it is our duty to advise you. Your title to succeed is a clear one.

"As was only to be expected under the circumstances, the late Sir Hugh did not bear any feeling of good will toward you. Indeed, we do not think that we shall be exaggerating if we say that the news of your free pardon materially hastened his end. On the attainment of full age by the late Hugh Kershaw, Esq., who fell by your hand, the entail of the family estates was cut, and only the mansion-house of Archdale Hall, the heirlooms, which are numerous and valuable, therein contained, and the deer-park, consisting of one hundred and eighty-five acres of land, were resettled. These consequently pass to you, and we shall be glad to receive your instructions concerning them, should you elect to honor us with your confidence. The estates pass, under the will of the late baronet, to a distant cousin of his late wife's, James Smith, Esq., of 52 Camperdown Road, Upper Clapham. We now think we have put you in possession of all the facts connected with your accession to the baronetcy, and, awaiting your instructions, have the honor to remain,

"Your obedient servants,
(Signed) PAISLEY & PAISLEY."

"Ah, so much for that!" was Ernest's comment. "What am I to do with Archdale Hall, its heirlooms, and its deer-park, consisting of one hundred and eighty-five acres of land, I wonder? I shall sell them, if I can. Mine is a pretty position; a baronet with about sixpence half-penny per annum to support my rank on; a very pretty position!"

"Hamba Gachle," replied Jeremy; "time enough to consider all that. But now, as we are on the reading lay, I may as well give you the benefit of my correspondence with the officer commanding Her Majesty's forces in Natal and Zululand."

"Fire away," remarked Ernest, wearily.

"First letter, dated Newcastle, Natal, 27th January, from your humble servant to Officer commanding, etc."

"'Sir

"'I have the honor to report, by order of Lieutenant and Adjutant Kershaw, of Alston's Horse, at present incapacitated by lightning from doing so himself'"—

"Very neatly put that, I think," interpolated Jeremy.

"Very. Go on."

—"'that on the 22nd inst., Alston's Horse, having received orders to check the flanking movement of the Undi Corps, proceeded to try and do so. Coming to a ridge commanding the advance of the Undi, the corps, by order of their late commander, Captain Alston, dismounted and opened fire on them at a distance of about three hundred yards, with considerable effect. This did not, however, check the Undi, who appeared to number between three and four thousand men, so Captain Alston issued an order to charge the enemy. This was done with some success. The Zulus lost a number of men; the corps, which passed right through the enemy, about twenty troopers, Captain Alston and his son Roger Alston, who acted as his aide-de-camp. Several horses and one or two men were also severely wounded, which crippled the further movements of the corps.

"'[illegible] and Adjutant Kershaw, on taking command of the corps, determined to attempt to retreat. In this attempt, however, he failed, owing to the presence of dismounted and wounded men; to the detachment of a body of about three hundred Zulus to intercept any such retreat; and to the presence of a large body of Zulus on the farther side of the pass leading to the valley through which such retreat must be conducted.

"'Under these circumstances he determined to fight the remainder of the corps to the last, and dismounting them, took possession of a fairly advantageous position. A desperate hand-to-hand encounter ensued. It ended in the almost total extermination of Alston's Horse, and in that of the greater part of the attacking Zulus. The names of the surviving members of Alston's Horse are—Lieutenant and Adjutant Kershaw; Sergeant-Major Jeremy Jones; Trooper Mazooku (the only native in the corps.)

"'These ultimately effected their escape, the enemy having either been all destroyed or having followed the track of the Undi. Lieutenant and Adjutant Kershaw regrets to have to state that in process of effecting his escape he was struck by lightning and blinded.

"'He estimates the total loss inflicted on the enemy by Alston's Horse at from four hundred to four hundred and fifty men. In face of such determined bravery as was evinced by every one of his late gallant comrades, Lieutenant Kershaw feels that it would be invidious for him to mention any particular names. Every man fought desperately, and died with his face to the enemy. He begs to inclose a return of the names of those lost, the accuracy of which he cannot, however, guarantee, as it is compiled from memory, the papers of the corps having all been lost. Trusting that the manœuvres attempted by Lieutenant Kershaw under somewhat difficult circumstances will meet with your approval, I have, etc.,

"'By order of Lieutenant Kershaw:
(Signed) "'JEREMY JONES, Sergeant-Major."

(To be continued.)

How She Fetched Him.

The Boston Courier publishes the following, evidently for the benefit of the ladies:

Wife (to husband who is arranging his toilet at the mirror)—Can't you take me to the opera to-night, dear? Husband (decisively)—No; I cannot. Opera indeed! Do you think I am made of money? Wife (after a pause)—I don't see any need of your spending so much time brushing your whiskers, dear. Husband (turning around with an angry glitter in his eye)—Why not? Wife (smilingly)—Because one brushing is enough, and you are handsome enough without going to all that trouble; it would be hard for you to make yourself any handsomer, at least in my eyes, than you are naturally, no matter what care you give to your toilet. Husband (after completing his toilet)—I'm going down town for awhile. By the way, Bella, on second thought, I guess I can manage to get a couple of opera tickets, so you can consider the going settled. Ta, ta. Wife (solus, after his departure)—I thought I would fetch him.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

A Pretty Table Invention.

A lady who entertains charmingly and in her own large-hearted and original way has invented an additional course at her most delightful ladies' lunches by introducing after the dessert a platter of fresh Parma violets, from which each guest helps herself to a luscious bunch of fragrance and beauty. A side dish of silver pins accompanies this course of sweets. Before being served to the guests these same beautiful flowers did duty as a centrepiece on which the guests feasted their eyes.—Boston Post.

Dressed as Flowers.

The wild imagination of mantuamakers has taken a new flight; they are dressing people to personate flowers. A young girl appeared at a recent ball in a white silk and tulle sprinkled over with white and purple violets; the corsage was covered with a network of heavy gold cord, which formed a complete basket, and in this receptacle violets were strewn. The straps over the shoulders were a violet ribbon, tied in bows to represent the handles of the basket; the stockings were embroidered with violets and leaves; she wore green satin slippers and carried a voilet bouquet. Another young woman wore a skirt of pink poulte de soie, with a garniture of pink rosebuds and fern leaves, placed over a drapery on moss-green crepe, with a pocket of moss rosebuds and fringes of grass that fell to the bottom of the skirt. One shoulder was adorned with moss roses and ferns, and the corsage was of pink moire antique trimmed with bands of cut crystal. These astonishing costumes appeared at a private, not a fancy, ball.—New York Letter.

Fashion Notes.

Old Normandy laces are again in use.

The full sleeve gathered at the elbow is more and more popular with evening dresses of transparent material.

Shoes with uppers of patent leather and foxed with thick soft kid are still preferred for carriage and house wear, and walking shoes maintain the patent leather tipped toe.

Corsets are made very high over the bust, and long in the waist for street wear to increase the long-waisted effect aimed at in all French gowns, but for evening wear they are cut very low to provide for the very decollete gowns that are fashionable.

Stockings in silk and Lisle thread repeat all the new greens and shades of heliotrope. For wear with evening dress are silk stockings with black feet and black half way up the leg, the rest flesh colored. This gives a curious appearance as if only half high hose were worn.

Large shell ornaments for the hair grow more and more popular and in the shape of long daggers, stilettos, two-handled swords, tridents, etc., are thrust through the elaborate long puffs. A pretty one worn by a woman with light brown hair heaped in silky folds on the crown of her head was of dark reddish shell in the shape of a crescent, three inches across from tip to tip.

In line of the new fancy for ribbons and cuffs with small loops of linen along the upper edge, through which narrow, picot-edged ribbon of different colors is run and tied in a bow of many long loops, under the chin and on the outside of the sleeves. Another fancy is for ruffles of crimped lisse, set thick with innumerable loops of narrow white or colored ribbon.

With the approach of spring many new black lace gowns make their appearance. The prettiest have plain skirts of narrow stripes of satin and moire, finished around the foot with a narrow plaiting of the same. The drapery is best made of very wide flouncing, which lends itself readily to the present mode of plain, full folds, and is as deep as the skirt. An economy is to have an extra pair of lace sleeves made with lining, which can be easily substituted and worn in the evening.

To those who can stand the severity of the style the Greek knot is the most becoming style of wearing the hair. The hair should be waved, with a few light curls in the middle of the forehead, but drawn away from the temples and twisted in a close knot on the back of the head, immediately below the crown, not allowing it to drag downward towards the nape.

Misses wear tailor-made suits of dark serge, or of striped or plaid homespun, with a kilt skirt that has short drapery, with a postillion basque with velvet revers and a vest of gay watered or striped silk. Dark blue serge, with red watered silk vest and blue velvet revers, makes a pretty frock. The high collar of blue velvet has a red watered ribbon inside, with a small bow on one side, and the cuffs are similarly finished.

A pretty tea gown has a petticoat of thickly gathered lace flounces sewn with big, dark red chenille balls. The gown, of white cashmere with a long train, buttons to the waist, from which it is open, showing petticoat, and turned back with broad revers of red velvet, the edges of which, like the full open sleeves, are hung with the chenille balls. The inside and train of the gown is lined with the palest pink surah.

Fashions in Mourning.

In Brittany widows' caps are made of yellow material.

In England it is still customary to wear white silk hat-bands for the unmarried.

Grayish-brown is the color used in Ethiopia—the color of the earth to which the dead return.

South Sea Islanders express mourning by a garb of striped white and black cloth. This signifies mingled sorrow and hope.

The Romans during the Republic wore dark blue for mourning and purple and violet to express royalty—"kings and priests to God."

White is the emblem of hope, and still prevails for all mourning in China. In England and this country it is used for children to denote purity.

In Persia pale-brown is used, while sky-blue, to express the assurance that the deceased has gone to heaven, is the color used in Syria, Cappedocia, Armenia and Turkey.

The Cardinals and Kings of France have always to be mourned for by the use of purple, and this use of the color has been handed down to the present time. It is said that the purple signifies the "blue" or aristocratic blood of the deceased.

Women's Work and Ways.

The Nebraska girl is by law her own "boss" at the age of 18.

Dr. Laura Weld, a graduate from a Boston medical school, has hung out her shingle in Dresden, Germany.

Miss Anna Siegel enjoys the distinction of being the only woman in the States who plays the trombone. She was educated in Vienna.

The Iowa Agricultural College has a new degree, M. D. E. (Master of Domestic Economy.) It has already been bestowed upon two women.

There are about 500 women employed in Berlin making rosettes for shoes and slippers. About 1,000,000 of these are exported to other countries each year.

Prussia pays women from sixpence to tenpence a day to act as guards at railway crossings. The work is mainly to open and close the bars and light and sweep the crossings.

The Rockwood Pottery at Cincinnati, founded by Mrs. Bellamy-Storer, is celebrated for its colors and glazes, than which none are finer outside of China and Japan, and for the beauty of form and finish generally. The initial experiments which have led to this perfection have been mainly conducted by women.

San Francisco has a novelty in an itinerant female button adjuster, who stands at the street corner with her box of buttons (the mechanical self-fastening kind) ready to repair the accidents of the day.

Jenny Lind is described as being white-haired, plain, severe and extremely pious; intolerant toward young singers, sneering at their voices and their vocation alike, and regretful of the days when she was sinful enough to appear on the stage. She sharply rebukes any one who ventures to address her as Jenny Lind. She left the name behind her with her sinful youth, and will not tolerate any allusion to it.

THE QUEEN AND THE BIBLE.

Memorable Testimony from Queen Victoria to the Value of the Holy Scriptures.

The public learned with some disappointment from a letter written, it is understood, by Sir Henry Ponsonby that the story of the Queen presenting a Bible to a heathen prince with the words, "This is the secret of England's greatness," was incorrect. It seems, however, that the interesting story is not without very solid foundation. It would appear that some time ago, a present having been made to Her Majesty by the chiefs of Abbeokuta, the Earl of Chichester was authorized to write the following letter: "The Queen and the people of England are very glad to know that Sagbua and the chiefs think as they do upon the subject of commerce. But commerce alone will not make a nation great and happy, like England. England has become great and happy by the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ. The Queen is, therefore, very glad to hear that Sagbua and the chiefs have so kindly received the missionaries who carry with them the Word of God, and that so many of the people are willing to hear it. In order to show how much the Queen values God's Word she sends with this, as a [illegible] a copy of this Word in the English."

House-Plants and Water.

Strange as it may seem, water is one of the greatest obstacles to the successful culture of window plants, in giving too much as well as in giving too little. Plants want water and in just the right amount. What is the right amount can be learned by filling a pot with soil to within an inch of its top. Pour on water, and when what will has drained off and it no longer drips, the soil will contain just the right quantity of water. But all soils will not let the excess of water drain off thus; when filled with water they hold it and remain as mud, in which no plant, save an aquatic, can grow. If it is inferred that such an impervious soil can be made into a porous one by adding a sufficient quantity of sand, a good conclusion will have been reached. A close soil may be made a porous one by adding sufficient sand. The writer was once called upon to inspect some window plants that were growing in the wrong direction, in spite of careful watering. We found a large plant stand in which was a collection of plants, in porcelain and other impervious pots, each of them filled with liquid mud. The owner, though a fairly intelligent man, was astonished to learn that it was possible to water too much, and that he was killing his plants with kindness. Pots with ample drainage and a soil made porous with sufficient sand will prevent the evil of too much water. Still, plants may suffer from a lack of water. The window gardener, finding that the surface of the soil in the pots looks moist, infers that no more water is needed and gives none, hence the plants suffer. The cause of this trouble is the same as that of over-watering; an impervious soil prevents the passage of water through it. Water is given, but it wets only a slight layer at the surface, it cannot pass downward and the roots may be suffering and dry, while the surface looks well. The remedy, as in the other case, is an open soil.—American Agriculturist.

One Hundred and Forty Elephants Captured at Once.

Mr. Sanderson, Superintendent of Government Kheddahs, succeeded on the 14th in capturing an immense herd of elephants, numbering no fewer than 140. This is the largest capture on record, and represents, it is estimated, about a lakh of rupees. The scene of the capture is only six miles from the Tura headquarters station of the Garo Hills. The stockade in which the elephants are enclosed is immensely strong, but is being further strengthened against pressure of so many powerful animals by being backed up with powerful timber supports, while an extra stockade is being prepared, into which some of the elephants may be admitted before the tying up process with tame elephants commences. The main stockade is literally tightly packed with elephants of all sizes. Col. Graham Smith, Commissary-General, who is paying an official visit to the Kehddahs, was, with Mrs. Graham Smith, fortunate enough to be present at this most exciting capture, and to witness a scene unequalled in Kheddah operations. Unfortunately during the drive, one elephant, breaking back, escaped, and in doing so killed one of the hunters.—Calcutta Englishman.

WITH THE SPIRITS.

Miss Brown's Peculiar Manner of Invoking the Dead.

Numbers of People Hear from Friends Across the Dark River.

The Atlanta medium, Miss Zaida Brown, held the fort again at Spiritualists' Hall, on Sixth street, last night. Miss Brown is a buxom young woman of 22, with a ready command of language and strong lungs. She was listened to by a large audience, most of whom were believers in her doctrines. The lady claimed to be controlled by mediumistic power in the address, which was well received. At the conclusion of the lecture Miss Brown gave some of her peculiar kind of tests, which consist of telling all about some dead person from some trinket or memento worn in life. She also gave a history of the wearer of the ornament. When the young woman called for applicants who wished to hear from departed friends there was a rush of men and women to the platform with rings, bracelets and other kinds of jewellery. Miss Brown remarked, as they overwhelmed her with the numerous articles: "One at a time, please." She also explained that to make the tests successful they must be handed directly to her by the wearer.

The first person to receive attention was a man who handed the medium a ring. Miss Brown pressed her hand tightly on the treasure as she said: "The person who comes to me has had many changes. There is more down in her nature than is understood. She has a gentle face, with gray hair. She is about five feet seven or eight inches in height, and has dark eyes. She always rushed into things impulsively, but earnest and sincere, and went out of life rather suddenly. This man must have his own way, and was very skeptical. I hear the name. He went over to the other side a long time ago." The owner of the ring said that Miss Brown's statement, which was unintelligible to the rest of the spectators, was correct.

The next individual accommodated by the medium was a lady, who took off a bracelet, which Miss Brown held in her hand. "This brings an influence of some one very amiable, of some one not closely connected. There come to me the names of Ellen and William. The possessor of this article has lately buried something, whether in the grave or not I am unable to say. I also see a lady, rather short, with dark hair. A man is also connected with this in some unaccountable way."

The lady who put her faith in Miss Brown's powers declared that William was her husband, but was silent as to the other persons whose first names were suggested.

The medium received another ring and told how it brought visions of a lady who had passed through startling changes in the past few months. There was a feeling of a child dying, and the influence of a two-story brick house, and in a room was a woman leaning over a bright fire. The names of Charlie and Jim came to the medium, and she was moved by an accident on the street. The lady [illegible] spoken of by Miss Brown except the name of Charlie, which was rather remarkable because Charlie is such a rare name.

So far the efforts of the Atlanta girl had not been conspicuously successful. The next trial was on a ring. The young woman said she was influenced by a feeling of impetuosity. The person was disposed to rush into things, and was inclined to regret it afterward. An element of travel entered into the impression. She regretted to say it, but the young gentleman of dark eyes and sallow complexion who was brought out in the test chewed tobacco. There was also the influence of a storm, the thunder rolled and lightning flashed, and the additional influence of something lost. She revealed the names of Jimmie and Herman. The matter was made still more complex by a large brick building which fell in and killed a man. A man also appeared in the vision. He was 45, with dark hair and eyes. A lady also came who was a great lover of music. The man that owned the ring said that Miss Brown's disclosures were correct.

The next subject was a young man who surrendered a ring to the medium. She took it and at once brought up in her spiritualistic way two young girls, Tillie and Mary. The former was very pretty, with light hair and blue eyes, and of rather slender build. Miss Brown complimented the owner of the ring by saying if he was not a lawyer he ought to be one. He was too skeptical to be religious. The young man was given lots of taffy, and during the course of the test the medium brought up the names of David and William, whom she described minutely. When she had finished the young man stated for the benefit of the audience that he didn't recognize any one spoken of, but everything said about himself was true. Several other individuals submitted articles upon which Miss Brown cast a horoscope. She pleased the believers, but the skeptics were inclined to doubt the efficacy of her declarations.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Matrimonial Commencement.

A Cincinnati newspaper man, who recently led a blushing maiden to Hymen's altar, is said to have started out upon his matrimonial career the proud possessor of the following housekeeping outfit:

1 oil stove	$1 00
1 coffee pot	25
1 frying pan	25
1 stew pan	25

The object of this article is to encourage those who are contemplating a journalistic career by showing them what can be accomplished in that profession by industry, sobriety and economy.—Colorado Dispatch.

—Young woman, listen to this: Tom Moore began to write poems when he was a boy of 14, Southey wrote his first verses when he was 11, Keats was a successful poet at 18, Leigh Hunt talked in rhyme at 13, Chaucer at 12, and Milton when he was 10. And where are they now, Ethel? Where are they now? They are dead. Go wash the ink off your thumb and help your mother pare the potatoes, Ethel, if you would live long. I'll write the poetry; I don't care to live any longer. P. S.—In fact, I'd rather die than pare the potatoes. —Burdette.

THE DEAD ALIVE.

A Man Who Was Drowned is Arrested for Conspiring to Defraud an Insurance Company.

Supt. Cornish, of Pinkerton's detective agency, and Chief Inspector Hanscom escorted to police headquarters a man who, according to the certificate of death, was drowned more than four months ago, says a Boston despatch of February 9th to the New York Sun. At headquarters he met the man who had sworn to seeing him drown, and who was so mad that he exclaimed, "You fool! If you got out of the way why didn't you stay out?" These two men, with two others, were arrested for conspiring to defraud the United States Mutual Accident Association out of $5,000. One of the conspirators took out a policy for that amount, and soon afterward was reported to have been drowned. Application was made for the insurance money, but the conspirators made one or two blunders, and failed to get the cash. The story of the conspiracy, as confessed by the supposed drowned man, is this:

Early last summer Henry J. Thomas, of Cambridge; Charles L. Frost, of North Andover, and Walter E. Bray and Eugene L. Saunders, of Chelsea, were discussing schemes for making money. They decided to try a plan for defrauding the United States Mutual Accident Association, of New York. On June 8th Thomas procured a blank application, and Saunders filled in the necessary answers to interrogatories concerning his health and general condition. A policy of $5,000 was taken out, and Mary Leonard, who passed as Thomas' intended wife, was made the beneficiary. It was understood that Thomas was to die at a certain time, and that the money would be equally divided among the conspirators. Two assessments were paid, and then the men thought it was time to act. On the morning of September 30th the four men met in a saloon in Boston and decided to drown Thomas in Beverly Harbor. Thomas went to his room at West Springfield street, packed all his things and took them away. Then he went to Beverly and met Bray and Frost. They spent some little time in discussing who should assist Thomas in his voluntary sacrifice. Frost was chosen, and he and Thomas went to the docks. Frost and Thomas spent two hours in examining the yacht Mayflower, which lay alongside one of the wharves, and at sundown they went to the railroad bridge and hired a boat. That was the last that was seen of them until to-day. Late that night Frost returned to the bridge alone and reported, with every appearance of grief, that the boat had capsized and that his companion was drowned. He said he searched for the body, but without success. All he could find was his friend's hat, which was in the boat. After telling the boatman where to look for the body, he drew a wallet from his vest pocket and paid the man with a note that had not been wet. The boatman did not notice this important fact until after Frost's departure.

The papers announced the death of Thomas, and on October 2nd Mary Leonard telegraphed to the secretary of the insurance company claiming the amount of the policy. The agent visited her to make the usual inquiries, and found her at a restaurant [illegible] she promptly replied that she had seen the account of the drowning in the Journal, which was taken regularly by the proprietor. The agent had not seen it, so he went to the proprietor and asked for the paper. The man said he did not take it. The girl's confusion made the agent suspicious, and an investigation was begun. After patient shadowing, a man who partly answered the description of Thomas was seen visiting the woman, and was traced to Taunton, where he went by the name of Thompson. He recently moved to Cambridge, and the police went there to arrest him to-day.

"Well, you are looking pretty well for a man who has been drowned four months," said Chief Inspector Hanscom.

Thomas recognized Hanscom and turned as though to run, but the inspector stopped him. He pretended he didn't know what the inspector meant. He denied being Thomas and stoutly maintained that his name was Thompson, but when Detective Thornhill produced a picture of him, taken before his alleged departure from this world, he confessed. He said that he and Frost rowed around the harbor until a specified hour. Then they rowed to the shore and he got out and met Bray. Frost then jumped overboard in water up to his waist, and careened the boat until several buckets of water had been shipped. Then he got in again and rowed back to the bridge with his sad tale.

Frost was arrested in North Andover to-day, and protested until confronted with Thomas in Inspector Hanscom's office. The men stared at each other without a sign of recognition. Then Frost went up to Thomas, touched his face, and said, facetiously: "He's alive, that's sure." "Yes, I'm alive," was Thomas' dry retort. The woman heard of Thomas' arrest and fled.

A Ton of Prune Sweepings.

On Friday night the butcher who supplies meat to the British steamship Saxmundham asked Night Inspector Whelan if it was all right for him to buy and take away a lot of prunes which had been offered him by officers of the steamer at 4 cents a pound. Inspector Whelan investigated the case and learned that the steamer had cleared for her outward trip with a cargo for Havre. The prunes were said to be the sweepings of a cargo of dried fruits landed in New York before the vessel came around here to load. The case came up before a board at the Custom House yesterday on a charge against the vessel and captain of violating section 4,368, for having goods on board and not on the manifest or store list. The captain satisfied the board that he had no knowledge of the concealment of the prunes or of their being on board, but he was condemned to pay a fine of $100 in addition to the confiscation of the goods, which weighed nearly a ton. This was the penalty affixed in section 4,368, but will probably be slightly reduced by the Secretary of the Treasury on account of the innocence of the captain.—Baltimore American.

A Dakota woman in the upper James valley decided that she wanted a fur cloak. She began trapping mink and tanning the skins. These she sent to St. Paul, where they have been made into a beautiful cloak for which she was offered $125.

UNCLE TOMMY STERETT.

The Husband of Five Wives and Father of Twenty-five Children.

One of the most familiar characters about Hamilton, and one whom everybody knows, is Uncle Tommy Sterett, writes a Hamilton, O., correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette. The 7th of this month he celebrated his 77th birthday anniversary, and from appearances will live to celebrate many more. He was born near Venice, on the Miami. His first work was for Isaac Anderson, with whom he lived as a farm-hand, receiving $3 a month for the first year. Mr. Sterett has outlived four wives, and now lives in happiness with his fifth. He first married Mary Wells, of Kentucky, the couple starting in life together in a log cabin twelve feet square with dirt floor and a chimney made of mud and sticks. The wife weaved and purchased flour, while the husband mauled rails in exchange for meat. By his first wife Mr. Sterett was the father of eighteen children. Mr. Sterett's second wife was Isabel Brosier, by whom he had one child. The old man said he could not remember the dates when he married his different wives, as his memory was poor, and he "couldn't recollect these little things." After living four or five years Isabel died, and Mrs. Martha Nichols took her place. This was along about 1852, and five children resulted from this union. Mrs. Robert Pierce became the fourth Mrs. Thomas Sterett, and she died about twelve years ago in Indiana, without leaving any children. Uncle Tommy's present wife was the widow of William Smith. One child—Johnnie, aged 10—is the last addition to the Sterett family, and he completes the even quarter of a hundred children who claim the old man as their father. These children have grown up, married and emigrated, and many of them are living to-day in parts unknown to their aged parent. Mr. Sterett lived in Hamilton in 1815, when, as he says, it was a common sight to see Indians, bears, panthers, deer, wild turkeys, foxes und wolves in the roads, and prowling about the town. He has always been a Democrat, always expects to be, and first voted for Andrew Jackson for President. When the war broke out five of his own sons and four step-sons went to the front and served until they became veterans. The old man wanted to go, but the boys thought there were enough out of one family, and that he had better stay home and take care of the children, while they did the fighting. The farthest he was ever away from home was a trip to Louisville to see his boys during the rebellion. Although a bitter Democrat, and from Butler county, too, the old man was loyal, and opposed to the conduct of the South. Had he had more sons fit for duty they, too, should have gone, Mr. Sterett asserted, as he recalled those stirring days. Uncle Tommy has been a laboring man all his life, and was boss of the First Ward street gang for nine years. To-day he is able to walk to his daughter's house, fourteen miles away, in less than four hours, and none can work harder than he. He has used the weed since his 14th year, and worked for half a century, seeing nothing but hard knocks and much trouble, but is at present strong and

PRINCE OF NEW YORK DETECTIVES.

How He Manages to Corrall Thieves, Big and Little.

Markedly individualized and independent, Inspector Byrens in manner is very gentlemanly, insinuating, and invitive of confidence. He knows the thoughts, plans, ways and characteristics of "crooks," and readily infers how any one of the category will proceed in the projection and execution of crime, and what he will do to cover his tracks. Charles Reade's advice to "put yourself in his place" he follows in practice of a profession to which pre-eminent fitness rather than choice has called him. Like every genuine "sleuth hound" of just government, he exhibits rare coolness, self-possession and bravery, persistence unwearying, sagacity almost unerring, and the fine scent that sniffs the slightest odor of the quarry. Kind as keen, and impartial as imperturbable, he has formed a class of police officers equal to the needs of a municipality so free to ingress and egress that it is the most difficult of all to guard against criminals. "Honor among thieves" is one of the time-worn lies that he denounces with emphatic scorn. He says: "I never met a thief in my life, provided he could benefit by peaching on his confederates, from whom I could not find out anything I was desirous to know. There is no such thing as honor among thieves." * * * Some of the men reporting to him are said to be college-bred, and can pass muster in the best society. All are chosen in view of individual aptitude for certain kinds of work. The stamp of officialism is about the last of which there is any trace. Keeping incognito as much as possible, the chances of prompt detection are multiplied. "Crooks" are now afraid of their shadows; great robberies have ceased, and minor crime been reduced over eighty per cent. Detectives more or less closely imitate the example of their chief, who says: "Every evening I make it a point to meet some of these men in resorts, and learn from them the whereabouts of their friends, and what they are doing. One crook of consequence generally knows what other good men are doing. In this way I keep posted, and know in what part of the country all the sharp men are. As experts are liberated from the State Prison I follow their tracks in this way."

Variety may be the spice of life, but advertising is the pepper and salt of a newspaper, and the bread and butter of the advertiser. The customer comes in for the cream.

—A literary man says: "I have surely discovered the author of 'The Breadwinners.' It is John Hay, as has been asserted. You remember the peculiar name of Offit in the book. Well, a man of that name appears in the early chapters of the life of Lincoln which Hay and Nicolay are publishing in the "Century." I mentioned the coincidence to one of the assistant editors of the magazine, and he admitted, on being pressed hard, that John Hay wrote the much-talked-about novel."

First Lady—Yes, I have tried three different sewing-machines in the past six months. Second Lady—What pests these sewing-machine agents are, an't they? First Lady—Pests? Why, if it wasn't for them I should have had to buy a machine ten years ago!"

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, MARCH. 10, 1887.

OUR TOWNSHIP FATHERS.

When the genial Clerk commenced reading the minutes of previous meeting of Council, at 11 o'clock, the following gentlemen occupied seats around the green table, viz., Dr. Christoe, Reeve; Deputy Reeve Boland, and Councillors Sharp and Cairns. Shortly afterwards Deputy-Reeve McArthur entered and took his seat.

Minutes of last meeting approved.

Petition from Thos. Crow, Eugenia, complaining that his property in the town of Eugenia was assessed much higher than its cash value, and asking for a refund, was read and duly considered by Council.

Moved by John Boland, seconded by Wm. Sharp, that a refund of taxes amounting to 45 cents be made to Thos. Crowe.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp, That the account of G. Lattimer for 4½ cords wood to Boyles $4 50 be paid; also W. J. Bellamy, Clerk, for Registration under Sec. 26, Chap. 36, R. S. of O., amounting to $17.90, be paid.—Car.

Sharp, Cairns, That Report of Committee on Treasurer's Securities be adopted and fyled.—Car.

Resignation of Mr. John Whitby, as Assessor, laid on the table, when following motion was put and carried unanimously:

McArthur, Cairns, That Mr. Whitby having placed his resignation in our hands, as the Assessor of the Township, we take the opportunity to express that we believe (1) That Mr. Whitby discharged his duty to the best of his ability, and in accordance with the statutes as he understood them. (2) That we believe, that has the Township, as a whole, been more equally assessed; and that notwithstanding any contradictions, either public or private, the Township may congratulate itself upon the faithful services of our late Assessor.

In the matter of two petitions from the Tyrone neighborhood, Artemesia, the following motion was put and carried:

McArthur, Boland, That the petition of Geo. Binnie and seven others be entertained, and that the Twp. Clerk be instructed to make application to the Government, as provided in section 58 and the two following sections, at the cost of the proprietors of the lands in each concession or part of a concession interested the expenses not to exceed twenty-five dollars.—Carried Boland, Sharp, That the parties interested in petition (from M. Akitt and others) asking for license for Eugenia to sell intoxicants be advised to submit it to the proper authorities, viz., the License Commissioners for adjudication, as this Council has no control whatsoever in the matter, this Council not having this counter petition before them at the time a contrary one was presented, can not now feel it to be their duty to change the course thus adopted.—Carried.

By-law 410 to amend 409, appointing Assessor, and By-law 411, appointing Municipal officers for 1887, introduced and passed.

Mr. Wm. McLaughry was duly appointed Assessor in place of Mr. John Whitby resigned.

Pathmasters.—Samuel Coleman, H. D Irwin, John Slidwell, Wm. Davis, H. Matthewson, Robt. Best, Chas. Irwin, jr., John Allan, David Stinson, Geo. Ludlow Thos. Talbot, R. Watson, Thos. Davis Arch. Foster, Jacob Holley, Price Teeter, Geo. Wardrobe, John Pedlar, Wm. Talbot, Thos. Henry, Wm. Gallop, Jas. Cornfield, sr., Samuel Shuttleworth, James Patton, John Walker, W. J. Whyte, Wm. Spears, Wm. Armstrong, Geo. Murphy, Thos. Kells, Wm. Hutchinson, Alex. McDill, Henry Williams, Robert Cooper, Geo. Sewell, James Hanson, Samuel Martin, R. Carruthers, John Williams, sr., Robt. Graham, John Weber, and Richard Whittaker, sr. *

Fence Viewers.—Richard Whittaker, jr., Joseph Aussum, Donald McMillan, Alex. Muir, Dugald Currie, H. D. Irwin, Robt. Shannon, Wm. Blair, Wm. Hill, Geo. Moore, Geo. Stewart, Chas. Bellamy, Ed. Ross, J. McKee, sr., Jonathan Hickson, J. B. Sloan, and Jas. Stewart, sr.

Poundkeepers.—Duncan Lamont, Priceville; J. E. Marsh, Markdale; A. Munshaw, Flesherton; M. Akitt, Eugenia.

Boland, Cairns, That the Auditors' Report be referred to Auditors to insert statements regarding School Debentures, as this Council thinks that the law intends that each debenture account should be shown separately and distinct, showing annually the amount of Sinking Fund deposited as well as the accumulated interest, for it would be entirely aside from the intent and spirit of the By-law creating the debt.—Car.

Boland, Sharp, That T. B. Gilhland be paid $5.50 for surveying Valley Road.—Carried.

McArthur, Sharp, That the Reeve issue his order for this day's session of Council and indigent monthly allowance.—Carried.

* Flesherton pathmasters will be appointed next meeting of Council.

Council adjourned

Eugenia.

From our own Correspondent.

On Feb. 21 as announced, the tea-meeting for Eugenia Sunday School was held. The weather was favourable and sleighing excellent. So the tea and entertainment was well patronized, resulting in a fair, financial success, in aid of S.S. Funds. The tables presided over by the lady friends were loaded with choicest viands which were heartily appreciated by the merry throngs collected around them and replenished again and again and their remained an abundance. The esteemed Superintendent Mr. Elijah Paul, occupied the chair at the church, called the assembly to order, and opened the meeting in their gatherings should do by singing, and prayer by Rev. Thibadoe, and afterwards displayed to the audience a programme of some 3 feet long by 8 in. wide, consisting of speeches, readings, recitations, dialogues, vocal and instrumental music. The evenings entertainment suffice it here to say, that the children of the school and young men and women acquitted themselves creditably in the rendering of their recitations and dialogues and the singing by the children, under their instructor, F. Carr, fairly captured the audience, all singing some 7 pieces from memory without aid of a book, also the Eugenia choir rendered some 5 or 6 pieces with remarkable credit to themselves and pleasure to all who heard it. Miss M. Carr presided at the organ for the children, and Miss Augusta Akitt for the choir, and proud we have talented musicians in our midst, of no mean order. Votes of thanks were tendered by the pleased audience to all concerned in contributing to the evenings entertainment and enjoyment and profit and thus one of the most successful tea-meetings held here was brought to a close with benedictions.

Cheese Factory Meeting.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Sir,—On reading the adventure of Tommy Cullen in your last issue, I resolved to send you a few extracts from a letter of another Artemesia boy who is Foreman rancher on a "sheep outfit" in Wyoming, he says "we are now moved on to the winter range some 16 miles from town," (Rock Springs) the last 2 months (Nov. and December) have been very tough on me. Storm after storm came tearing down the mountain from 1st to 15 Nov., sometimes I gave up all hope of saving the sheep, but have them all snug now but lost over 300 in the drifts. my boss thought I had done first rate as other outfits' loss was much more. A very sad affair happened on Nov. 9th, two men were heading for Rock Springs from the mountains North, some 140 miles, and struck me at steam boat mountain, some 70 miles North of town. As I was starting to move on winter range, and as the trail was snowed under, they offered to help me down for their grub, as they were afraid of getting lost. I said O.K., and being out of meat, one of the men went out to try and get an elk or a deer, and a terrible storm came up when he was gone about 3 hours, and he never returned. I delayed moving for 10 days and went out searching for him every day, but found no trace. He is dead and buried under some snow drift. There was no escape for him as there was no house or timber within 40 miles, and the temperature was 17 below zero. For nearly a month we had up no tent at all that was on the trail down here. I baked in a frying pan on the open Prairie when the wind was blowing at least 30 miles an hour, done all our cooking with no shelter whatever, and made our beds on from 6 inches to 6 feet of snow, we however, doubled up bedding (2 beds cut) so we slept first-rate, but the cooking, trailing sheep and driving team and pack horses, especially riding horse-back, was a terror. Such is ranching. Yours, H.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

From our own Correspondent.

The excitement over the elections has abated considerably here since the 22nd.

Miss A. Scott, of Angus, is spending a few days with friends in this neighborhood

Mr. Wm. Williamson has sold his farm containing 200 acres to a gentleman in Orangeville, for the sum of $5,500.

Mr. J. Thompson, of Manitoba, is visiting his daughter, Mrs. S. Wakely.

Mr. R. Cornet, of Dundalk, has been engaged to make the cheese in the Inistioge factory for 1¼ cents lb.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather there was no service in the Methodist church here last Sabbath.

Gone but not Forgotten.

Death—"The King of Terrors"—is always an unwelcome visitor. Nevertheless it is true that "it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." Recently we were called to mourn with our friend and neighbor, Mr. Joseph Pedlar and his family, the loss of his son Joseph, who was in his seventeenth year; having been an invalid for over a dozen of years and unable to walk, he was seldom seen outside, unless on the 12th of July, and at Salem tea meeting and pic-nic. It is needless to say he was a great favorite with all the family particularly his father and mother who feel his loss very keenly. He was a kind hearted boy and had such a nice ear for music that if he heard an air 2 or 3 times he would beat it correctly on his little drum which to him was a constant delight. During his illness he suffered very little pain but needed constant attention; indeed all through his trouble he was seldom an hour out of his mother's sight by night or day and this makes the bereavement much more severe to her. The whole neighborhood and all who knew Mr. and Mrs. Pedlar sympathise very much with them in this time of their affliction.

The extraordinary popularity of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the natural result of its use by all classes of people for over forty years. It has proven itself the very best specific for cold, coughs, and pulmonary complaints.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

FAITH FAILED.

Cora Stickney Again Consigned to the Grave—A Mother's Belief in the Power of Prayer.

A St. Paul's despatch says: The body of Cora Stickney, of Minneapolis, which was exhumed by her mother for the purpose of making a test of the faith cure, has been returned to the grave. Mrs. Stickney says that many wrong impressions have been formed by what has been printed and facts have been badly twisted. She accordingly makes this full and final statement of the case: "When my daughter died, on November 30th, I had no thoughts of having her restored, neither did I have then, nor have I had any time since, any doubts about my daughter's death. About a week before death Cora received divine healing. Prayers were being offered for her at the faith meeting and she was instantly healed. Her skin changed its color, her eyes their expression and her strength returned. Very soon a caller came and she wished her cure kept a secret, and immediately her nose began to bleed again. Her wavering faith was not supported by my own, for I had none. Six days after this she died. Seven days later God laid it on me to pray for her to be raised. About three days after this I was impressed to bring her home, but left her in the vault until February 1st, when I had the body removed to my home and placed where the frost would come out slowly at first. Then I had the temperature slowly raised.

"Sunday, February 6th, the frost was out, and we met for prayer and watched for life. God heard our prayer. Life did return to the body. She breathed; her heart beat; her body became warm and remained so for six hours. There was also a strong smell of brandy around her which we noticed before we noticed any breath. Others also saw her breathe and felt the warmth of her body. I stood by and rubbed her for a long time, expecting to hear her speak and see her rise. The hands grew cold while I rubbed her, and they also stiffened and became somewhat discolored. I became frightened and thought that life had gone. I asked God to show me what we had done, and it came to me that I had put my hands in the way of God's work. Life did not entirely leave the body, however, when I thought it did. There was warmth and a smell of brandy for days after. It did seem sometimes for days that I could detect a little breath, but I cannot say that I really knew that she breathed after that Sunday night.

"On February 14th, Dr. Palmer examined her and said there was inanimate life there then. Dr. Palmer, from his standpoint, says she had been in a trance; but we believe that life was given in answer to prayer. The body kept warm until February 16th, without any marked change except that the tips of the fingers and the end of the nose dried from freezing and thawing."

Mrs. Stickney says that she can see no difference whether God heals a sick person who is half dead or one whose breath has just left the body, or one who has been dead for months, and she quotes a number of Scriptural texts in confirmation of her view.

TERRIBLE INJUSTICE.

John H. Hall Dies in Prison Awaiting a Too Long Delayed Pardon.

A Joliet, Ill., despatch says: John H Hall, sentenced for life in 1884 for the Mount Pulaski triple tragedy, in which John McMahon, a rich bachelor, and his two hired men—Robert Melthew and John Carlock—were murdered, died on Monday in the prison hospital. Hall was generally believed to be innocent, and recent developments tend to confirm that belief. Hall and McMahon were neighbors, and Hall's brother married McMahon's sister. McMahon also had a sister half crazy, who remembered after the murder to have heard Hall talk about the gagging and murdering that had been done in Texas while he was there. She insisted from this that Hall did the deed, since all three of the murdered men were gagged, hobbled and blindfolded when found with their throats cut. Suspicion was at once directed to Hall. The murder was committed in August, 1882, but Hall was not arrested until a year later, and was tried in June, 1884. He proved a distinct alibi by three of his neighbors and his two daughters, but was convicted on the evidence of a fellow-prisoner, who swore that Hall confessed to him that he plotted and carried out the job. This, Hall said, was a hired detective, who perjured himself. His name is Charles Montgomery, and he is now in penitentiary for burglary, and says he swore falsely. Hall made a dying statement, in which he maintained his innocence, and stated that he know the truth would come out some day. He was a stout, good-looking man when received, but gradually wasted away brooding over his misfortune till disease finished him.

Heating Cars by Steam.

A St. Paul despatch says: An official test of steam heating apparatus was made yesterday on a Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad short line train between St. Paul and Minneapolis. The device consists of the use of exhaust steam from the dome of the engine carried through pipes underneath the engine and cars, with patent flexible coupling between each car. This pipe connects in the centre of each car with a radiating pipe on each side, with a branch under each seat. The test seemed perfectly satisfactory, the thermometer registering eighty degrees within the car, while outside it stood at zero, with a pressure of six pound to the square inch inside the car. The engineer declared he saw no perceptible difference in the amount of coal used.

Wine from Jerusalem.

A Chicago despatch says: Invoices for a large consignment of wine from Jerusalem were received at the custom house yesterday. The invoices cover 500 gallons of wine and 100 gallons of liquor, and are intended specially for the feast of the Passover, which begins April 9th, and continues one week. This feast is particularly observed among the Hebrews throughout the world, with imposing ceremonies and rejoicing. The wine is said to be of superb quality, seven years old. The invoices left Jerusalem December 15th.

A man ought to be careful about going to drink between the acts. It may result in his acting bad between the drinks.

THE FISH TIT FOR TAT.

Belmont's Retaliation Measure Passed by Congress.

A Washington despatch says: The House of Representatives yesterday by a vote of 138 to 123 practically decided that there shall be no retaliatory legislation at this session of Congress. The vote was on the Belmont substitute for the Bill which passed the Senate four weeks ago, and by this vote the House determined to substitute the more radical for the more moderate measure. Belmont wanted absolute nonintercourse between the two countries, and to bring this about he was willing to extend the embargo to the rolling stock of Canadian railroads. The debate on the latter extended from 11 o'clock a. m. until 2 p. m., and called forth all sorts of patriotism and gush from the able Representatives on the floor. The members from New England were far more moderate in their demands than those from the Southern States. The Massachusetts and Maine Representatives declared that the fishermen most interested did not ask for the Belmont Bill, but would be entirely satsfied to apply the same treatment to Canadian vessels that Canada meted out to those sailing under the United States flag. But the House was not disposed to pay any attention to the wants of New England, and the Northwest, which is directly concerned in the proposition to exclude Canadian cars and engines, cut no figure in the controversy. The Bill as amended was passed by a vote of 252 to 1. This would seem like a very forcible endorsement of the Bill, but there is something behind all this. The Senate has expressed itself very emphatically upon the original Bill, and it will certainly not agree to the amendment of the House. The measure will therefore go to a conference committee, and the conferees on the part of each House will be instructed to stand out for the will of each body as expressed by the vote, and the prospect of a compromise is not at all good. It is the general belief on the Republican side that the Administration is opposed to any retaliatory legislation, and that this method has been adopted to prevent action, while at the same time the country will be led to think that blood is wanted.

TRANSPORTS ON THE LAKES.

The United States Authorities Investigating the Means of Attack on Inland Waters.

A Cleveland (Ohio) despatch says: The local custom house authorities have made almost daily reports to Washington for three months past about dealings with Canada. Fishermen who have caught fish in Canadian waters have been compelled to tell of their doings for the past three years, and now comes a query to all of the owners of steamboats in the city from which it would appear that the authorities at Washington are paying more attention to the fisheries question and the possible outcome of the controversy than is generally believed. All the owners of large steamboats have received from Captain F. A Mahan, of the United States Engineers' Office at Buffalo, a letter in which he says he wishes to know the shipping facilities of the port of Buffalo. He asks for a full description of each vessel and how much room there is available in each to carry passengers. Instead of asking outright, "Will your boat carry so many men through the Welland Canal?" the officer gets around the point with several indirect questions. These letters are undoubtedly for the purpose of ascertaining what steamers there are on lakes capable of landing men on the Canadian frontier in case of sudden cause for an attack in that direction. Cleveland has an immense fleet of large freight and ore carrying propellers that could be utilized as transports at short notice.

A MONTREAL TRAGEDY.

Young Girl Seriously Wounded by a Crazy Drunken Man.

A Montreal despatch says: On Thursday night a young French Canadian girl named Demise Lavigne, aged 13, who lives with her father, a pilot, was shot in the back and thigh by Patrick Maloney, a man about 50 years of age, who, with his wife, lived in the same house. Maloney, who had been considerably addicted to strong drink of late, has been laboring under the impression that the Lavigne family were attempting to take his life by injecting poison through the wall which separates their apartments. During the evening he entered Lavigne's house and without saying a word began to discharge a seven-shooter. Two balls struck the girl, who fell on the floor badly wounded. Her brother, who was present, escaped, and two balls fell to the ground without effect. Maloney then left the house and coming up town quietly gave himself up to the police authorities. He was brought before Judge Dugas yesterday morning and, having pleaded not guilty, was committed for trial at the Court of Queen's Bench. The young girl is as well as can be expected and is cared for at the General Hospital.

Trouble Among the Tongas.

A London cable says: Advices from the Tonga, or Friendly Islands, show that there continues to be great excitement among the natives over the trial of the men under arrest for the attack on Missionary Baker. Five more of the prisoners have been sentenced to death, and thirty others are awaiting their trial. The British Consul, it is said, has succeeded in averting further executions, but he declines to interfere otherwise with the course of justice as administered by the King. The party known as Old Wesleyans now accuse Mr. Baker of jury-packing and of personally trying the natives, and have appealed to the Governor of the Fiji Islands to send a war ship to allay the excitement fomented by Baker's conduct. The Catholic priests are appealing to France for protection. The British corvette Diamond has started from Melbourne for the Tonga Islands.

A wide field for speculation is opened by this paragraph in the Nashua Telegraph, describing dancing parties in Amherst, N.H.: "These dances have been kept upon as purely a moral basis as practicable."

A MODERN JACK SHEPPARD.

Tom Worth, the Desperado, Recaptured in Chicago—A Close Shave from Being Cremated.

A Chicago despatch says: Tom Worth, alias Jim Truman, who escaped from Oconto Jail on Sunday night, was caught here yesterday. Worth was under arrest for shooting the town marshal last summer. This is the third time he has broken jail since his arrest, and the story of his escape this time, told by himself, is interesting. He effected it by burning a hole through the ceiling. "I was over two months," Worth said, "in burning that hole through. I had only four or five minutes each day in which to work. That was when a fellow confined in another cell on the same floor went down stairs to get coal. I didn't dare do anything when he was about for fear he would give me away to the jailor. I was confined in a cell on the second floor of the jail. The building is constructed of heavy logs, 20 inches thick. The ceiling is of logs, about 14x16 inches. In the corrider in front of my door was a coal stove. Along in December the plan came into my mind to burn my way out. I knew it was no use to try the walls, but thought I might make my way through the ceiling that was covered with inch boards over the logs. I managed to pry those off and save the nails and then started to burn off the ends of the logs. When I thought I could raise it I managed to burn the ends off but found a heavy log rested across it above. Then I had to commence over again. The cell was whitewashed and the chips that would fall off I saved and dissolved in my water cup and with this painted the place about the nail holes so nothing would be suspected. You see they inspected my cell once or twice a week and I had to be mighty careful. As soon as the other prisoner would go down stairs every day I would remove the board and burn one or two holes. It was slow work, but I had good luck and finally the block was only held by a few unburned points. The smoke—they had good ventilation in the jail—was all carried up and out. Sunday night I removed the block and crept up after getting rid of the shackles. Overhead I had to cut through the weather-boarding. I came near sticking there, as I got the hole too small. Oh, by the way, when I was burning out the hole in the ceiling the wood got on fire. I put it out, by taking a mouth full of water from my cup and climbing up and blowing it over the flame in a spray. It was a close shave both times."

A ROMAN WEDDING.

The High Contracting Parties Assaulted by a Madman.

A Rome cable says: A matrimonia event which has excited great interest in the ecclesiastical world came off a few days ago when the wedding of Signorina Maria Jacobini, the Cardinal's niece, to Signor Alibrandi, a wealthy merchant, took place with great rejoicing at the Vatican. After the religious ceremony the wedding party adjourned to the Cardinal's apartments, just above the rooms occupied by the Pope, whose meditations must have been curiously disturbed by the laughter and clinking of glasses at the breakfast table. The Cardinal seemed to have forgotten his illness for the moment. In the afternoon the young couple had been married civilly at the Capitol. The proceedings were interrupted by a sensational incident. The registration clerk, seized with a sudden fit of insanity, greeted the bride and bridegroom by pitching a candlestick at their heads. The bride fainted, the bridegroom fumed, and several bystanders cried and shrieked. Finally, after a hand-to-hand struggle, the madman was collared and the ceremony ended happily.

A MEDICAL SUBJECT.

A Mutilated and Decomposing Human Body Found in a Trunk at Pittsburg.

A Pittsburg despatch says: The employees of the Baltimore & Ohio Express Company in this city made a ghastly discovery yesterday, which may turn out to be another trunk horror. A wooden box, about four feet long, was received here this morning from Cincinnati. It was addressed to James Osborne, Pittsburg, Pa., and had a peculiar odor. A search of the city failed to find the person to whom the box was consigned, and it was then decided to open it. When the lid was broken the mutilated remains of a man in an advanced state of decomposition were revealed. The legs and arms were severed from the trunk in order to crowd it into the box. A surgeon here gave it as his opinion that the body had been the property of a medical student, who had probably shipped it to some friend in this city. The top of the head was sawed off, and the work showed it to have been done by a professional hand. The authorities have telegraphed to Cincinnati to investigate the affair.

Two Ladies Dragged out of Church.

A Montreal despatch says: Misses Alice Lamareux and Mary Ellen Foley, respectable and well-connected young ladies here, the latter the daughter of Mr. Foley, a dry goods merchant, on the afternoon of Sunday last entered the Notre Dame de Bonsecours Church and knelt down in a pew. They were not acquainted with the regulations of the church, and, shortly after their entrance, the proprietor of the pew came in and took his seat. He appeared quite satisfied, when suddenly the beadle of the church approached the young ladies and caught one by the arm and the other by the neck and endeavored to drag them out through the aisle into the street. A large number of worshippers noticed the scene, and three young gentlemen who were passing at the time came to the ladies' rescue. They were indignant at the beadle's conduct, and applied through their attorneys to Mr. Justice Ouimet in the Practice Court yesterday for leave to take a joint action of $1,000 against the beadle and the reverend gentlemen of St. Sulpice Seminary, the proprietors of the sacred edifice.

On the 5th inst., at Liverpool assizes, Jessie Robertson, aged 34, was found guilty of forging an order for the delivery of some jewellery in the name of Lady Gibson Craig, of Riccarton, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, with hard labor.

On the 7th inst., in Edinburgh, Professor Sir Douglas Maclagan was presented by the Lord Justice-General with his bust and portrait, which had been subscribed for as a mark of general appreciation by the profession in connection with the honor of knighthood conferred on him.

On the 1st inst., there were interred in Kilmuir churchyard the remains of John Macfie and his wife, both of whom were found dead in their house at Totscore. They had been attacked by fever, and dread of the infection had prevented any one from entering the house, and they were simply left to perish.

The Tay Bridge, to replace the structure blown down several years ago, when a train dashed into the river and many persons were killed, will be opened for traffic in May. The last of the large girders is ready for being placed. The Queen will formally open the bridge in June.

Lord Gifford, an ex-Judge of the Court of Session, Edinburgh, who died recently, has bequeathed £80,000 to found National Theology Lectureships at the four Scottish universities. Edinburgh gets £25,000, Glasgow and Aberdeen £20,000 each, and St. Andrew's £15,000. The total value of the property left by His Lordship is £190,000.

Intelligence has been received from Cairo of the death of General Sir Charles MacGregor, of the Bengal Staff Corps. This distinguished Indian officer was the son of Major Robert Guthrie MacGregor, Bengal Artillery (and grandson of Major-General James MacGregor, Bengal Cavalry, of the MacGregors of Glengyle), by the daughter of General Archibald Watson, C.B., Bengal Cavalry.

A Great Undertaking.

A Pittsburg despatch says: Ira D. Sankey, the evangelist, was in the city today. He will leave in a few days to confer with his old co-laborer, Moody, in Chicago. These two men have on hand a monstrous undertaking. They will endeavor to evangelize Chicago, and will erect a building in that city, to cost $250,000, for the training of Christian workers.

"This is something new," said Mr. Sankey. "It is somewhat of an experiment, but Mr. Moody is confident of good results. Remember this is to be no theological scheme, but just what its name implies—a school for the training of Christian workers. The ablest and most practical teachers will be secured. We want to reach the lowest class of people; we want to send these workers, whom we expect to educate especially for this kind of work, out into the highways and byways, and help lift up that portion of Chicago which is beyond the reach of the ordinary agencies for the good and blessing of mankind. Mr. Moody believes that Chicago is the best place to try the new work. The field is certainly a large one. If we are successful there we propose to advocate the same system in other cities, and will and have similar buildings erected in New York and Philadelphia."

A very deaf Boston man has a charming wife and a cross dog. The other morning a friend met him and said: "Good morning, Mr. Blank. Your wife made a very pleasant call on us last evening." "I'm very sorry," was the startling answer of the deaf citizen, "I'll see that it doesn't occur again. I'm going to chain her up after this."

LATEST FROM IRELAND.

Mr. Vernon, Irish Land Commissioner, is seriously ill at Londonderry.

St. Luke's Church, the largest Protestant place of worship in Cork, was destroyed by fire on the 4th inst.

Prof. Salmon, of Dublin, has a new volume of sermons in the press entitled "Gnosticism and Agnosticism."

The sum of £400 has been subscribed in Cork towards the erection of a statue to the memory of the late Dr. Delany, Bishop of Cork.

Mr. James Robertson, Manager and co-partner in the extensive drapery firm of Robertson, Ledlie & Co., Waterford, died on Jan. 28th.

A tragic affair has occurred in County Kerry, when at a dance a young man named Falvey, in a fit of jealousy, stabbed another man named Sullivan, who has since died.

Mr. W. P. Hanley, J. P., of Thurles, agent for the extensive estates of Pennefeather Wood and Ballymure, County Tipperary, has announced to the tenants a reduction in their rents of 50 per cent. on the former, and 40 per cent. on the latter property. All the tenants paid.

Subscriptions are invited to a fund to relieve Mr. Daniel O'Connell, of Derrynane Abbey, County Kerry, of immediate and pressing calls upon him through hard times, and not arising from any fault of his own, in order that the historic pile and relics of the great O'Connell should not pass under the auctioneer's hammer into the hands of speculators.

The Duke of Leinster died on the 10th inst. in his 68th year. His Grace was Premier Duke, Marquis and Earl of Ireland. He sat for Kildare in the House of Commons from 1847 to 1852, and was called to the House of Lords as Baron Kildare (peerage of the United Kingdom) in 1870. He married in 1847 Lady Caroline Sutherland Leveson-Gower, daughter of the second Duke of Sutherland. He is succeeded by his eldest son, the Marquis of Kildare, who was born in 1851.

LOCKED IN AN ICE FIELD.

The Steamer Monte Rosa's Voyage From Dundee—Hurricane and Snow Squalls.

A New York despatch says: The Dundee steamer Monte Rosa came into the port yesterday after a stormy passage of twenty-one days from Dundee. The steamer experienced a succession of gales, hurricanes and snow squalls.

At 2 o'clock on the morning of February 18th, the Monte Rosa was off the northeast coast of Newfoundland. The snow flew in whirling gusts and a moderate gale was blowing from the southeast. The lookout reported ice on the port bow, but before the crew were aware the steamer had cut its way into a tremendous ice field. Captain Thomas took his bearings and found he was in latitude 49 degrees north. The steamer lay to until daylight. Nothing could be seen in the morning but ice as far as the eye could reach. The ice was snow covered and dotted here and there by huge icebergs rising to the height of fifty feet or more. The steamer followed a narrow opening to the southeast for thirty miles, when an [illegible] leading southwest. This was followed for fifteen miles, [illegible] closed completely around the vessel. The ship floated with the ice for some time, when it again broke up, and the steamer threaded her way out of the dangerous field. The Monte Rosa held her course to the southward until 4 o'clock in the afternoon of February 20th, but on steaming to the westward the ice again appeared. The vessel managed to escape it by skirting the southern edge of the field. Captain Thomas says that the ice extended northward for miles, and that in the open water he passed a number of huge bergs. The steamer is not in any way injured.

Justin McCarthy's Good Chance.

Justin McCarthy has put aside the proffer of a salary of $12,000 a year to devote his entire time to a leading New York daily. He is hardly making as much as that at present, but he is master of his own time—free to write story or history, free to labor as a Parliamentary wheel-horse for the advancement of the Irish cause. He is a great "all-round" worker, having qualified himself by early travel and study to deal with great questions of special concern to the United States. During the war he was editor of a prominent London daily, and was a steadfast friend of the Federal cause under all circumstances. He understands the machinery of this Government theoretically and practically. He is fully as well-informed regarding Russia, France, Germany, Austria, Italy and Spain. He readily assimilates what he reads, and is a close observer.

Lord Randolph's Rapid Speech.

Lord Randolph Churchill has become a mild terror to the reporters—mild, because the sonorousness of his voice and the general distinctness of his utterance are some set off against the rapidity of his delivery, says the Pall Mall Gazette. On Monday night, in fifteen minutes, he spoke 208 lines of the Times, or nineteen-twentieths of a column, three-fourths of a column being about the average spoken by members who are reported in the first person. Lord Randolph's rate of delivery, without allowing for cheers or other interruptions, was at the rate of 140 words a minute, and, as there were some pauses in the fifteen minutes, His Lordship when he was speaking kept up the pace of 150 words a minute or more. This puts an unusual strain on reporters taking notes under conditions not favorable to the hearing of every word with certainty, and gives them individually a disproportionate amount of work to do on leaving the gallery.

She Knew Him.

"John, where are you going?" asked Mrs. Brown, as he was preparing to go out between the acts.

"Oh, I'm tired of looking at the backs of tall hats. I'm going out to look at a horse-car for a change of scene."

"Well," replied Mrs. B., severely, "I guess there'll be more pony than horse-car in what you're going to see."

Some time ago Wheaton Huntley moved from the East with three marriageable daughters and located by Henry Berchard in Mercer county, Dakota. Berchard had three marriageable boys, and the natura result followed. The three brothers have married the three sisters.

HOMES OF THE HOURI.

Lovely Dancers in the Shah of Persia's Harem—Women in the Orient—Her Intrigues and Amusements.

The seclusion which the Shah requires of his wives is shown by the quarters they occupy at the Ark or city palace. This is a vast enclosure, entered by a separate gate. In the centre of the court is an elegant garden. The ladies have each their own apartments in regular order in the quadrangular building, which in its general plan is not unlike barracks, although of course more ornate and attractive. No windows open on the street, but every apartment faces the court. Ventilation is gained not only by the open windows reaching to the floor, which in that delightful climate are open the greater part of the year, but also through shafts leading from the roof and connected with wind towers called badgers.

These towers form an important feature of Persian dwellings, and are often very gracefully shaped. They have apertures opening to the four winds of heaven. Not only are the wives of the Shah forbidden to gaze into the street, but neither must any other ladies of Teheran enjoy that cherished privilege. The flat roofs are surrounded by high walls, and thus while one may enjoy a delightful promenade toward evening on the roof of the house and contemplate the vast and lovely landscape, one can see no one nor be seen. These restrictions are much more rigorous in the case of ladies of rank than of the lower classes. The latter enjoy much greater freedom, and while obliged to keep the face well concealed when abroad are allowed much liberty, a liberty that there is no question results in adding to the corruption of morals. If a Persian wife cannot have the society of her husband she is likely to seek the society of other husbands. Intrigues are arranged by third parties, generally professionals, usually old women. The women being able to see the man while he cannot see her face until she makes the first advances, such intrigues usually commence by the woman first taking a fancy to the man. It is comparatively easy for the lovers to meet after all is arranged, owing to the disguise worn by the woman, which makes it exceedingly difficult to distinguish one woman from another, and somewhat hazardous even for a jealous husband to attempt to penetrate that disguise.

The wives of the Shah are not without entertainment at home, in spite of their apparent imprisonment. Many of them enjoy embroidering, and are capable of exquisite skill in the arts of needle work. Occasionally a lady is found in the Royal Anderoon who is inclined to intellectual pursuits, and interests herself in the study of languages, in composing poetry, painting or practising on the piano. Pianos, by the way, although carried over the mountain with extreme difficulty, are becoming quite common in Teheran.

If our Government had been more alert in protecting our interests in Persia and advancing our commerce there, doubtless American pianos would have found their way to that distant land before this. Not unfrequently these ladies give entertainments, to which the wives of most of the high dignitaries are invited, and one may judge from hearsay that these occasions possess many features of a romantic character. The afternoon is always the time selected.

The sod under the pavilions or the trees is spread with carpets embroidered by hand; the air is cooled by the spray of fountains tossing silver streams in every quarter of the shaded terraces. Amid these fairy-like scenes hundreds of ladies move, slightly clad, the costume resembling that of a ballet dancer without the tights and stockings. On such occasions a white cymar of embroidered gossamer is thrown over the head, giving almost an ethereal effect to the flesh tints underneath. Music on the zither, songs and dancing girls add to the attractions of the fleeting hours, and abundant refreshments, including unstinted confectionery, appeal to what some call the grosser senses. The kalian, with its aromatic fumes, lends a finishing touch to a scene which suggests the voluptuous episodes of the Arabian Nights.

But one form of diversion is forbidden these royal ladies; I refer to their interviews with the court physicians. Next to the sacred luxury of a confidential talk with a father confessor or a favored pastor, there is scarce any solace which possesses such attractions for the average woman as a sympathetic recital of her troubles and ailments to a trusted family physician. But neither one nor the other is allowed to see the wives of the Shah. No priest nor doctor can receive from them the soothing confession of sorrows and sins or the narrative of aches and pains.

Of course if she is ill then a wife of the Shah receives medical attention. But the physician may not obtain even a sight of her face. Behind a curtain, surrounded by her attendants, she responds to his questions; in extreme need she may show her tongue, but no other part of her features. Nor is the interview altogether attractive to the physician, especially if he be a native, for he must necessarily be extremely guarded in his language, and if the patient dies it may go hard with the doctor. He does not venture to prepare or furnish the drugs himself, and the medicines he prescribes must be compounded by servants of the palace to insure against danger of poisoning, as well as to protect the practitioner from suspicion.

The European physicians practising at the court of the Shah exercise somewhat greater liberty in the matter of drugs and prescriptions, but even they are obliged to proceed with great caution and never attempt any serious surgical operations when the patient is a Mussulman. In the matter of windows alluded to above I am reminded of a case growing out of the laws and customs regulating that question which gave me more trouble than any other which I had to deal with while at Teheran.

The missionaries had built a chapel in their own grounds, but adjoining the estate of Emir Sultaneh, a powerful courtier, who had been endeavoring to persuade them to sell the mission premises to him. As no price could be agreed upon they declined to sell, and he then entered on a series of annoyances intended to force them to sell at any price. Twice he raised a mob of his own servants, aided by some of the canaille, who by violence drove the men working on the chapel from the premises. By employing great urgency at the Foreign Office I succeeded in preventing a recurrence of such outrages. By the expressed wish of the Shah a conference was then held at the Foreign Office to agree upon a modus vivendi.

The plan I suggested proved entirely acceptable to the Shah and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the Emir Sultaneh was instructed to accept it. While apparently doing so he yet raised difficulties, doubtless in part because a powerful faction opposed to the missionaries was behind him, and eventually he resorted again to his tactics of annoyance. One of these was the erection of a screen wall on a party wall between the two premises. In this addition he caused two windows to be opened, overlooking the grounds of our citizens. This was such a direct violation of the Persian law that, although not contrary to American customs, it could, under no circumstances, be accepted except as a gross insult, intended as an act of persecution. To allow it to pass unnoticed would be to invite further attacks on our rights. With some difficulty I succeeded in having the windows walled up. A few months later, during my temporary absence in the suburbs, the Emir Sultaneh hastily threw up a pavilion on a corner of the party wall and opened five new windows directly overlooking the girls' school of the American mission. The matter had now reached a crisis; the Minister of Foreign Affairs was either in league with or afraid of the power of the Emir Sultaneh, who seemed determined to invade the right to the quiet enjoyment of property awarded by the treaty. In this emergency I succeeded by finesse in obtaining a legal decision from Hadgi Mollah Alee, the head of the Musulmans of Persia, and also Chief Justice and expounder of the law, which officially and emphatically announced the law on the subject, in language so strong that the aggrieved party was even given authority to shoot any one opening windows overlooking a neighbor's grounds without his permission. Armed with this document, which represented the highest authority in the land, I succeeded at last in bringing the Government to terms, and the offending windows were finally closed with masonry. The effect was at once seen in the quick redress given as soon after in an affair of far more importance to Selmas.

Late U. S. Minister to Persia.

The Modern Methods.

We do not sigh for a return of the "good old days" when boys went barefooted until they were 21, and walked ten miles to and from school. There are now new and improved methods of "toughening" boys. They are about as tough, generally speaking, as they can very well be. But we do sometimes long for a little of the old-fashioned discipline and "trouncing" methods that made boys subservient to the will of their parents in some slight degree. Imagine a good, old puritan mother getting her son Waitstill or Godspeed up of a morning after this, the fashion of our modern mother. Fancy her saying:

"Waitstill, you getting up?" And fancy Waitstill surlily replying:

"Yes'um, by'n by."

"Well, I don't want any by and by about it. Hump yourself out of that now."

"Well, purty soon."

"It had better be pretty soon, young man, if you know what's good for you."

"Well, I reckon there ain't no hurry about it."

"I'll let you know if there ain't, about the time I come up there with a pan of cold water."

"Can't ye let a feller sleep half a minute?"

"'Half a minute!' I'd say 'half a minute' if I was you, when you've been in bed thirteen hours. Now you crawl out of that instantly!"

"All right."

Half an hour passes—Waitstill does not appear. His mother's voice cuts the air in the hall.

"You Waitstill Prosperity Dogood Winthrop!"

"Whacher want?"

"I want you to h'ist yourself out of that bed too quick! You hear?"

"I ain't deef."

"Breakfast was over an hour ago, and not one single bite shall you have in this house before dinner."

"I'll see about that."

"So'll I, young man! You crawling out?"

"Yes'm."

Another half-hour passes, and Mistress Temperance Prudence Piety Winthrop's voice goes ringing upstairs——

"You Wait!"

"Hey?"

"I'll 'hey' you, you idle thing, you! I'll tell your father on you."

"Tell away."

"You'll see what you'll get, Wait Winthrop. Not a single bite of breakfast do you get."

"Guess I'll stay in bed, then."

"I guess you won't, if I come up there; you out of bed yet?"

"Almost."

"Well, I'll help you the rest of the way with the broomstick if you aint out in five minutes."

Half an hour later he gets up. His breakfast has been kept warm for him. It is set on the table and a fresh cup of coffee made. His mother dances attendance on him during the meal, unmindful of all past threats and promises.—Tid-Bits.

A Peer's Compunction.

When near his end, Lord Northington was reminded of the propriety of his receiving the consolations of religion, and he readily agreed that a divine should be sent for, but when Rev. Dr. ——, not with whom he had formerly been intimate, was proposed, he said, "No, that won't do. I can well confess to him, for the greatest sin I shall have to answer for was making him a bishop."—Glasgow Herald.

A Colorado Sensitive Plant.

Colorado man—So you think the trouble with your boy is sensitiveness, eh?

Omaha man—Yes; he isn't fitted for knocking around in the world.

"It may be. I know all about that. My family is the most sensitive folks you ever seed; can't stand nothing. Why, I've got a brother that goes most crazy if he sees a collector coming with a bill he can't pay."

"I can sympathize with him. What does he do usually?"

"Well, he most generally shoots the collectors."—Omaha Herald.

CANNIBALISM IN HAYTI.

Decline of British Possessions—Facts About West India.

U. B. Powter, a resident of Kingston, on the Island of Jamaica, is at the Laclede Hotel. He is the manager of a company which is engaged in mining phosphate on the Grand Cayman's Island, near Jamaica, and shipping it to the United States, where it is used for fertilizing purposes. This phosphate is the remains of animal life, according to geologists, and is thought to have been left in the immense beds in which it now lies by the subsidence of some prehistoric sea. The deposits upon the Grand Cayman's Island are in masses from three to fifty feet deep and at some distance from each other, some of them sustaining upon them the growth of forests known to be more than one hundred years old. Upon the present commercial and social condition of Jamaica and the whole group of West Indian islands, Mr. Powter talks discouragingly.

"The islands and their inhabitants are retrograding rapidly," said he yesterday. "They are exporting less and less every year, and the natives are departing more and more from civilization. The reason I believe to be the abolition of slavery in 1824. The effects of that step were not felt by the white planters until the old slaves began to die, and the new generation had to be depended upon for labor. They would not work, not having been bred to industrious habits, and each old slave that died was so much loss to the quantity of labor to be obtained. Some of the planters resorted to the expedient of importing cooly labor and did very well, but a large number of owners did not do this, and estates on the island went to ruin fast. As time passed on it became more and more difficult to obtain laborers, and the evil effect of this unusual idleness was seen in yearly decreasing imports. The negroes need not work to get food and a house—these can be had for nothing—and the only reason why they work at all is that they may earn enough money to dress in expensive and gaudy colored clothes. That is the only use they have for money. If slavery had not been abolished, or if it could be reestablished, the islands would flourish."

"What of the reports that the practice of cannibalism has been revived in Hayti?"

"In the main they are true. Hayti, of all the West Indies, is the most marked example of the decay of the islands. When the French left it, in 1772, they left a superficially, at least, religious people, with churches, factories and roads. Now there is not a church or factory in the island, and but one road, while the Catholic religion has been abandoned for the Obi or fetish worship, and cannibalism has again sprung up. The island is a black Republic, and no whites are allowed to own property. In fact, the only whites on the island are a few European traders, who conduct the financial affairs of the Government and lend it money. The island is not communicated with by the people of the other islands, and the negroes are left to devour one another as fast as they please. Their human flesh eating is not that of the past century. They do not eat the flesh of those who have died, and having nobody to war with they can take no prisoners to cook and eat. They eat the flesh of children, taken when young, penned and fattened for the feast. Sometimes they steal children from the neighboring islands and fatten them for their tables. They are drifting back into complete barbarism, and there is no inclination on the part of other islanders to interfere with their gradual extinction."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Scotch Wheelbarrow Craze

The wheelbarrow craze underwent a new and novel phase on the morning of the 31st ult. in Crieff, where at 10 o'clock a tailor named Robert Cowper, with a wooden leg, started from James' Square with an ordinary one-wheeled barrow, "from Crieff to the Cross of Glasgow and back." Robert was advertised to leave the Cross at 9.45, at which hour the town's bell was rung. He was attired in a grey coat, open vest with white front, and his only foot adorned with a light spat, while his head-gear was a sou'-wester cap. On proceeding along to James' Square the pilgrim was received with cheers and much laughter, numerous jokes being passed with regard to this the latest phase of the barrow mania. After receiving a considerable sum of money, which was dropped into a collection box placed on the barrow, Robert started on his journey, passing down King street followed by a large crowd, while both sides of the street were densely crowded by spectators, who laughed and cheered by turns. Robert passed through Stirling on the afternoon of the 1st inst. He had experienced a strong head wind and heavy roads all the way. He complained at Stirling of having been illiberally treated so far. On the night of the 3d inst. a Glasgow reporter awaited the arrival of Robert, who reached the Post-Office at 1.15, and when he entered the building to get the office postal stamp placed on his book he was awaited on the outside by a large and enthusiastic crowd. The barrow-pusher was attired like a seaman ready for a storm, as he wore a sou'-wester and an oilskin coat. He appeared cheery, and not the least fatigued.

A Novel Dress.

A novel suggestion in connection with a gift to the Queen on the occasion of her jubilee comes from South Africa. Shortly before Christmas the Eitenhage Times, a Cape paper, suggested that a present be made to Her Majesty the Queen of a robe, dolman, fan, etc., made of South African ostrich feathers, contributed by South African ostrich farmers. The conditions were that no person contribute more than three feathers, so that all might participate in the demonstration of esteem for Her Majesty. In a few weeks the names of one hundred and seven farmers willing to contribute were received by, and published in the Eitenhage Times, the proprietors of which paper undertake to have the articles made up and forwarded to Her Majesty. A rare collection of feathers will doubtless be got together, and some valuable and unique articles of dress made up.

A VERY DEADLY NEEDLE.

Hypodermic Injections Which Cause Death in Many Cases.

Opium has been known as a drug from a remote period, and is produced as an article of commerce in India, Persia, Egypt, and Asia Minor. In China opium is used to an enormous extent by all classes, the mode of taking it being to smoke an aqueous extract in a peculiarly formed pipe. Opium smoking began in China in the latter half of the seventeenth century, and in spite of all the efforts of the government to prevent it rapidly spread till now it may be called a national practice. That the drinking and smoking of laudanum and opium are not unknown vices in New York any physician will affirm. But there is a practice which is even more deleterious, the use of the hypodermic syringe. To estimate the growth of this evil, it is only necessary to take the testimony of druggists and dealers in surgical instruments. The fact is, it has become a problem with which social reformers must deal. Acquaintance with this method of taking opium is made innocently enough, it generally having been prescribed by the family physician to alleviate some temporary ailment. The effect is observed by the patient, and too often when the doctor goes the syringe stays. There have been many stories of large quantities of opium taken by those addicted to the habit without producing a fatal effect. An Englishman lately residing in this city was known to consume sixty grains each day. Prominent up-town druggists declare that they sell more needles to their general customers than to the medical profession. Equally conclusive as to the prevalence of the habit of subcutaneons injection is the fact that, whereas druggists' customers used to buy in quantities of from 60 to 120 grains in the crystalline form of the muriate, the sulphate, or the acetate, the sale now largely consists of the solution in quantities of from one to six ounces. A reporter talked yesterday with a prominent physician upon this topic. "Many medical men," said he, "are unaware that the use of the hypodermic syringe is always attended with danger of instant death. The cause of this danger is not well understood, but the fatal accidents that have been recorded were not due to the taking of larger doses than usual by mistake, nor to the culminative effects of the drug. Cases have occurred in which persons have taken large doses for months without producing a single unpleasant symptom, and have died in a few minutes from the effects of a quarter of the habitual quantity taken in the usual manner and at the regular hour.

"There is a danger of fatality against which no vigilance can guard. The symptoms are not always so severe as to produce coma, unless arrested. They occur about once in one hundred administrations, and prove fatal at least once in ten. That is to say, a man who uses the hypodermic syringe at the rate of ten punctures a day, which is a very moderate average, should encounter the symptoms and their attendant danger of death once in every ten days on the average, and the probability is that they will prove fatal within six months after the habit is formed. The danger that he may be found dead is thus always a real one with the habit of the hypodermic, a danger that may at any moment involve a coroner's inquest and the imputation of suicide."—New York Mail and Express.

An Old Masonic Scandal.

So much has been said from time to time in relation to the Morgan affair of 1826 that I have been induced to give particular attention to the affair. Half a century ago most of the men connected with the affair were alive and willingly gave me their statement of the facts. Some time in 1824 a man calling himself William Morgan, a stonemason, came from Canada to Rochester, N.Y., and settled there. He was a disreputable, worthless fellow, but smart and forward. He brought with him what purported to be a Masonic diploma, and he succeeded by its aid in visiting the lodge there. A few months later he began to travel among the lodges of Western New York, and in 1826 removed to Batavia. Here he was detected as an impostor and publicly exposed. This so exasperated him that he announced his purpose of publishing an expose of the secrets of Freemasonry, and actually began, in company with one Miller, a printer, to prepare such a work. Some of the more thoughtless Masons threatened him with grievous penalties if he did not desist, and the public gave credence to the idea that he was in peril of his life. Gov. De Witt Clinton, who had long been Grand Master, concerned for the honor of Masonry, took the lead in raising money to induce Morgan to go back to Canada. A committee of most respectable gentlemen took the matter in hand at Clinton's request, and on September 10th, 1826, Morgan started for Canada, where he had promised to settle down near Hamilton, and his family were to be sent to him. But free, and with money in his pocket, he pressed on to Montreal and all trace of him was lost. He may have been murdered for his money by the roughs with whom he associated, or, which to me is more probable, he may have shipped before the mast on a European-bound vessel. At any rate he absolutely disappeared from the pages of history.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tired of Giving Away Neckties.

"I don't mind giving up my neckties before they're half wornout," said a society young man yesterday, "because they look pretty in crazy quilts. Do you blame me?"—Buffalo Courier.

TRICKING A DUKE.

Forced to Remain in an Antique Chair by a Mechanical Contrivance.

An amusing story concerning the Duke of Edinburgh is being told. While at Chester His Royal Highness was shown, at his own request, by Canon Tarver, an establishment where antique furniture might be picked up. The foreman who waited on them was all unconscious of the quality of the Duke, and on His Royal Highness noticing a peculiar antique chair, asked him in jocose manner to try it. The Duke sat down, and immediately his arms were imprisoned by a mechanical arrangement of the chair. The Duke struggled to get out, but could not do so until the shopkeeper released him, after giving him a certain amount of polite chaff. The Duke asked the price of the chair and bought it. The shopkeeper asked where he was to send it, and on being told that he was to send it to Canon Tarver's for the Duke of Edinburgh, the shopman was literally dumbfounded at the familiarity he had used. The Duke afterward remarked that never had he seen a man so frightened in his life.—London Exchange.

Some Old England Gossip.

The old Crown Court Church, Covent Garden, once and for long the scene of the labors of the Rev. Dr. Cumming, of prophetic memory, is now the Church of the Highlanders resident in London, with services in Gaelic.

The two copies of the Bible used at Queen Victoria's coronation are still in existence. One is an heirloom in the family of the late Dr. Sumner, Bishop of Winchester, and the other is preserved in the Cathedral at Norwich.

Lord Herschell, addressing the young men at Aldenham Institute, said that for a long part of his life he workedon most days of the week sixteen hours a day—a fact to be borne in mind by any one ambitious of reaching the woolsack.

Lord Mostyn has intimated his intention of presenting the Happy Valley, Llandudno, to the town as a pleasure ground in commemeration of the Queen's Jubilee.

Mrs. Harriet Kemp, Manchester, who died recently, has left £1,000 to the Wesleyan worn-out ministers' fund, £500 to their foreign missions, and about £4,000 to pay off the debt on Victoria Wesleyan Chapel, Cheetham, and to capitalise the ground rent.

A Singular Fact.

It is a singular fact, almost without exception, the most successful literary men have always been those who did very little reading. This seems unaccountable in an age when the world is flooded with cheap and attractive publications. Some one asked a French writer what books he read. He replied, "I never read anything but my own works: when I want to read a novel I write one!" Sublime assurance, you will say. There is something in it, nevertheless. Dickens was very much like the Frenchman. When he wanted to have a jolly good time it was his custom to lie down and read "David Copperfield" or "Pickwick," and laugh himself into fits. —Atlanta Constitution.

Snug Little Fortunes

may be had by all who are sufficiently intelligent and enterprising to undertake the business which occasionally is offered them. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, have something new to offer in the line of work which you can do for them, and live at home, wherever you are located. Profits immense and every worker is sure of over $5 a day; several have made over $50 in a single day. All ages; both sexes. Capital not required; you are started free; all particulars free. You had better write to them at once.

Observing the Proprieties.

At dessert: One of the guests has been speaking of rather a lively song which has made a hit in the Latin quarter. "Oh, sing it to us," says the Countess de Santa Grue. "Impossible, it's really too naughty." "Well, then," persists the countess, "give us only the words."—Paris Figaro.

Strictly True

In every respect and attested by the testimony of thousands that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is a sure and painless cure for corns. The claim that it is just as good made by those endeavoring to palm off imitations for the genuine only proves the superiority of "Putnam's." Use only Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Sure, safe, painless.

The Utmost Depth of Misery.

At the Club: "Upon my soul, Dodson! you are the dismalest company I know of since that Brown girl gave you your congi. I never saw a fellow take the mitten so wretchedly." "Wretchedly! Haw! Wretched isn't a name faw it. You can, aw, fawncy how wretched I am when I tell you, I, aw, don't cayaw a wap how my, aw, bweeches fit me."—Town Topics.

The chilling wintry winds develod rheumatic affections, for which the surest cure known is McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant, prepared by W. A. McCollom, druggist, Tilsonburg, and sold by druggists at $1. Sample bottles 25 cents each.

E. W. Rau, a German compositor of Baltimore, told Warner Rieve that when he died he wanted his body sold to a medical college and his debts paid with the proceeds. He died on Wednesday, and Rieve obeyed his friend's wish and sold the body for $10 to the Maryland University. Rieve was greatly surprised the next day when he was arrested for dealing in dead human bodies.

CONSUMPTION.

Improvement.

We see that Sproule's store in Flesherton, which has been closed for some time, is now in full blast with a complete stock of New Goods and Groceries. It is under the management of Wm. Sproule, of Barrie, brother of J. T. Sproule, Solicitor, &c., of same place, and as he is a young man of strict integrity and believes in honest dealing, he purposes selling very cheap and that for cash or trade only, as credit will not be given under any circumstances—thereby saving a nice profit to the purchaser—consequently the public may expect goods at right prices and very much cheaper than can be done under the old credit system. Give him a call and satisfy yourselves.

Bankrupt Sale.

Our Great Bankrupt Sale of General Goods now going on in Wright's old stand has far exceeded our expectations. On account of the great rush we have not been able to give each customer the attention which we would under ordinary circumstances. But the sale still continues. The crowds come and go; each one more than satisfied. The goods are being slaughtered and are fast dissapearing and cannot be replaced at the prices Therefore we would urge on you the necessity of an immediate call to inspect our stock. Come early as the goods must be sold at whatever they will bring.—J. G. ANDERSON.

Those Bible Questions.

We have received correct answers to two of the Bible questions in last week's ADVANCE from G. W. Legard, Ada Sproul, Lizzie White, Eva White, Mina Bunt, Martha Beatty. The correct answers were:—Shortest verse, John xi. 35, and alphabetical verse, Ezra vii. 21. None could tell us David's mother's name, which did not surprise us as it is still a matter of conjecture among theologians. "Biblicus" says it is generally conceded that David's mother's name was Abigail.

JUBILEE DRAWING-ROOM.

Buckingham Palace Thronged With Rank and Beauty—Description of the Dresses of Royalty.

A London cablegram says: The Queen yesterday afternoon held at Buckingham Palace her first jubilee drawing-room. The rush was so great that the Queen had retired before a large number of carriages had reached the grand portal, around which the brilliant military guards of honor were attending. One line of carriages extended eastward along the double roads of St. James' Park beyond the club district of Pall Mall, and another line westward around the Buckingham Hotel and past Hyde Park corner into Piccadilly. At least 5,000 curious spectators clustered along the lines staring at the inmates of the carriages and their gorgeous dresses, not omitting to make the usual sarcasms on the Jeames Yellowplushes who adorned the hammer-cloths. There was the usual fatigue of the guests awaiting their turns, a more than customary crush on the grand staircase. There was the wonted battle of trains, disregarding the motto noblesse oblige. There was the traditional pushing and wedging and the use of fans as weapons, all accompanied by the time-honored jealousies for precedence or degree in the royal sunshine.

The Queen, standing on the dais in the Royal Throne Room, looked a remarkably happy matron, with the Princess of Wales and the Princesses Beatrice and Helena and the Duchess of Albany just below her. Beyond the royal group of ladies the Prince of Wales looked as buoyant as one should who had slept through an earthquake. He wore the brilliant uniform of Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Horse Guards, of which Field Marshal Sir Patrick Grant is the active colonel. A squadron of the same regiment had escorted the Prince and Princess from Marlborough House amid the hearty cheers of everybody. The Marquis of Salisbury and nearly all the Cabinet were in another group beyond the Prince of Wales and suite. Some of the Ministers displayed in their court dress larger heads than calves.

Lord Randolph was absent from the Commoners, but her ladyship was present, smiling away the baseless scandals lately rife. Lady John Manners, who is a veteran at drawing-rooms, was heard to say that never within her recollection had there been such an immense and brilliant attendance at a drawing-room. The Lord Chamberlain's presentation book really makes up a bulky volume. The number of debutantes mindful of the notable Jubilee flavor of the occasion was very large. The supplement to to-day's Court Journal runs to sixty columns.

The Queen wore a train and bodice of black velvet and silk, trimmed with Russian sable over a black silk skirt trimmed with tulle and jet, a white tulle veil, surmounted by a coronet of diamonds, necklace and earrings of diamonds, and the Kohinoor as a brooch, with orders and ribbons dazzling in number and arrangements.

The Princess of Wales wore a dress of silver grey and silver brocade, with draperies of brocade and crape embroidered in silver, looped with grey and silver marabouts; a train of brocade lined with satin duchesse and bordered with silver fringe and marabouts; a corsage to correspond; head dress, a tiara of diamonds and feathers and veil; ornaments, pearls and diamonds.

The Princess Beatrice wore a dress and train of ruby velvet, embroidered with beads of the same color, headdress, a diadem of rubies and diamonds, feathers and veil; ornaments, rubies and diamonds.

The Duchess of Albany wore a black corded silk, with bead embroideries and a black veil; ornaments, pearls and diamonds. Both the Princesses of Wales, granddaughters of the Queen, wore trains of pearl white satin broche, lined with faille and bordered in tulle, and bouquets of lilies of the valley; corsage to correspond, trimmed with tulle and lilies over a jupe of tulle in bouillonces and plisses looped with bouquets of lilies of the valley; ornaments, pearls, diamonds and rubies, also the Orders of Victoria and Albert.

It was three hours after the close of the reception before the last carriage left the precincts of the palace in a dense fog, which made vehicular traffic and pedestrianism highly dangerous.

THE CANADIAN HORSE TRADE.

The Kind of Animals Wanted for the British Army.

A London cable says: Col. Ravenhill lectured last night before the Institute of Agriculture on the breeding of horses for military purposes. He said that the horse wanted was a cross on an English thoroughbred stallion, up-standing, with short legs, good bone, heavy shoulders, plenty of length, depth of girth and good action.

Col. Goldie has been instructed by the War Office to purchase 300 horses in Canada for army purposes in England. Veterinary Matthews, of the Royal Horse Guards, has been ordered to Canada to assist in the purchase of horses which are required here. Owing to continental countries having prohibited the export of horses, Canada can, by producing suitable horses, obtain a large market. There is no reason, if the matter is properly undertaken by Canadian farmers, why the Dominion horse trade should not become of large importance and as profitable as the cattle trade.

Coal Famine at Halifax.

A Halifax despatch says: The continuous strike of coal miners at the Pictou mines has created a coal famine in this city and very serious results will ensue if the strike continues much longer. The Cape Breton ports are frozen up and no coal can be obtained thence. The Spring Hill mines cannot supply their orders from the upper provinces. Halifax people, therefore, will soon be compelled to burn wood or pay about $10 a chaldron for coal.

Emperor William has conferred the order pour le merite for arts and sciences upon the historiographer of Prussia, Privy Councilior Professor Dr. von Treitschka, of Berlin; on Privy Councillor Dr. Gustav Freytag, the author of Wiesbaden; on the composer, Herr Johannes Brahma, of Vienna, and on Maestro Guiseppe Verdi, of Milan.

Rev. Archdeacon Ellwood, of Goderich, was struck with paralysis the other day, and now lies very low.

SPRING FASHIONS.

Cable News of the Latest Parisian Novelties.

THE HIGH HAT TO GO.

A cablegram from Paris says: March sunshine has given a new impetus to the fancies of the Parisian modistes, and a coming revolution in ladies' head covering is impending. The high hat is decidedly doomed, and toques are making their appearance in all kinds of pretty fancy straws, trimmed with velvet and with wide faille ribbon, with a wing placed at one side or else two quill feathers. The capote bonnet, with the sides covered with large leaves instead of birds' wings, is one of the latest novelties.

COLORED STRAW BONNETS.

A pretty innovation is the bordering of the bonnet brim with small flowers, such as primroses, violets or very small rosebuds. Tortoise shell pins are a good deal employed on black lace bonnets. Colored straws are exclusively shown for the present, and are very stylish trimmed with faille ribbon of a paler shade than the bonnet itself, such as Ophelia lilac on dark purple straw, pale blue on marine blue and pink on wine colored straw. A few high crowned Tyrolean hats that are still shown have a trimming in some cases passing over the crown in flat bias folds of velvet, with a large flower caught here and there among the folds. This style of trimming is very picturesque, but has to be carefully managed in order to prevent a topheavy appearance.

The newest colors of the season are a delicate shade of old pink or dying rose, as it is poetically called, and a silver shade of green known as serpent green.

TWO ELEGANT TOILETS.

Two elegant dresses worn by hostesses at two recent receptions were made as follows: One was in crushed raspberry velvet, made with a long train and plain, full skirt, the beauty and richness of the material requiring no elaboration in making or trimming. The pointed corsage was high to the throat and was shaded by a fichu in exquisite old point d'Alencon. The other toilet was worn by a young married lady. The corsage was in olive green velvet, brocaded with roses in their natural hues and bordered with a fringe in dark green jet. The skirt was composed of Pekin, in very wide stripes of olive faille and net, looped over an underskirt of olive faille. A costume, all in silver gray velvet, even to the bonnet, muff and jacket, was worn by a young lady visitor.

It must be admitted, in fact, that some of the most effective of these afternoon dresses have been in plain rich velvet, very simply made, and with scarcely any trimming, the beauty of the material and the perfection of the fit of the dress forming the highest types of elegance.

A FANCY COSTUME.

An original costume, to be worn by a well known military man in Paris at a fancy dress ball, is called image d'Epinal. It consists of white satin breeches and a coat, upon which are printed in colors and in small square blocks fairy tales of all kinds. Epinal, in the Vosges, is famous for its children's picture books. Sheets of fairy tales are sold there to the multitude for the modest price of one cent each.

A NOBLE WIFE.

Pathetic Story of Her Attempts to Save Her Husband's Life.

A Shell Lake, Wis., despatch says: Fritz Hass and his wife were in Shell Lake doing some trading on Thursday, and about 2 o'clock in the afternoon started for home. The aged couple had walked to town in the morning and felt equal to the task of walking back again, a distance of five miles. It was a bitter cold day, and as they advanced the wind began to blow. Before half of their journey had been accomplished they were wrapped in a blinding snow storm, and their progress became slow and difficult. Soon Mr. Hass sank down in the snow, thoroughly exhausted and unable to proceed. His now frantic wife tried in vain to urge him on. But she was compelled to leave him and seek aid at the nearest house. When she arrived at the house she sought she found a woman alone. It was then about 10 o'clock at night, but taking blankets the two women started back to succor Mr. Hass. He was unconscious when they reached him and with difficulty they succeeded in getting him a few rods further toward shelter. But Hass was a large, fleshy man, and the women were compelled to abandon their efforts in his behalf. Wrapping her exhausted husband in blankets and again giving him some nourishment, his noble helpmeet sat down beside him, while her kind assistant started for home. Mr. Hass remained with her husband until he died, about 8 o'clock in the morning. When help arrived at the scene the unfortunate couple were taken home, one nearly as lifeless as the other. Mr. Hass was nearly 70 years of age, and his faithful wife a few years his junior.

AN ECCENTRIC MAN'S END.

He is Cremated, and His Ashes will be Scattered Over a Saloon Keeper's Grave.

A Buffalo despatch says: The remains of the late Edward Kuehl, of Omaha, arrived here yesterday. Mr. Kuehl was engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes. He had been in ill-health some time and unable to attend to business. On Monday last he took an overdose of morphine, from the effects of which he died. A week ago yesterday he made his will. In it he directs that his body be cremated and his ashes placed in an urn, and that when a certain saloon keeper in Omaha dies, that they shall be strewn over his grave so that no flowers will bloom upon it. The body was put in the crematory at 4 o'clock, and it took one hour and a quarter to incinerate the 200 pounds of flesh and bone.

Michael Krueger, of Manchester, Wis., was born 113 years ago in Posen, Prussia. He is the father of nine children, seven being sons, and when the seventh son was born Michael received a letter and $50 from the King of Prussia. Four of the children are dead; and the oldest living child is Gottlieb, who is 78 years old and lives in Milwaukee. The youngest of the nine is now 50 years old.

FEMALE AMERICA BEFORE THE QUEEN.

How New World Beauties Look and Feel.

The London correspondent of the New York Sun thus describes the presentation at court of American ladies:

Each lady will be most awfully low-necked, with train reaching from almost anywhere to the door. With that train wrapped two or three times round her lower extremities she will sit for a good long time in her carriage in front of the palace, while the carriages of most important personages drive in, and while more or less gilded youth walk up and down and stare. By and by she will be huddled into a cold room with about 499 other trains as big as her own. She will wait there for an hour or more, probably more. When her arms are getting blue and her dignity has pretty well oozed away she will be requested to hand a card with her name on it to the Lord Chamberlain. He will read it and steer her to the door. She will drag the train past a big chair on which the Queen sits perched, and as she goes past will make her finest bow. Her eyes will be dazzled by gay costumes, and her wonder will be excited, if she is not too much flurried, by the tremendous display of calves all about, from the Prince and noble ambassadors right down to the servants. Then everything will fade like a scene from a magic lantern, and she will find herself outside the second door and not at all impressed with her own greatness, and free to find her carriage and go home. Next day there will only be one thing to console her. It will be the pleasure of mailing to all her friends and relatives a copy of the Times which tells of her presentation to the Queen. The knowledge that her deluded relatives will picture her sitting on a ounge with the Queen of England drinking tea and swapping baby stories will be the only sordid return for the considerable investment. Apart from an excusable vanity, the presentation at Court can be of use only to American ladies who intend residing in London, who want to go into society and bring out their daughters.

A PHANTOM SIGNALMAN.

A "Spook" Disturbing Baltimore & Ohio Train Employees.

A Tiffin, O., despatch says: The village of Republic, O., has a ghost which stops trains, and there is great excitement there. A few nights ago when limited express No. 5, the same train that was wrecked and burned on January 4th, was approaching the scene of that horrible disaster, the engineer saw a red light—the danger signal ahead. He applied the brakes and reversed his engine, and the train came to a standstill on almost the exact spot of the great wreck. Strange to say, when the train came to a standstill the light had disappeared and could nowhere be seen. Before stopping both the engineer and fireman noticed that the light appeared to be carried by a woman dressed entirely in white. Puzzled by the disappearance of the signal, the engineer and conductor walked over the track for some distance ahead, but could discover nothing wrong. The train then backed to Republic station and the operator was questioned, but he assured them that no signal had been sent out. The train proceeded on its way, running cautiously for several miles and the engineer keeping a sharp lookout, but nothing more was seen of the mysterious woman or signal. This strange apparition has appeared on three different occasions and has greatly excited trainmen and residents. A posse of men have watched the place for several nights, but the ghost has not since appeared.

What an Armless Man Did.

There recently died at Potsdam, St. Lawrence county, N.Y., Richard Donovan, who was in some respects one of the most remarkable men in northern New York. Twenty years ago, when a boy, Donovan worked in a flour mill. One day he was caught in a belt and received injuries that necessitated taking off both arms at the shoulders. This misfortune did not discourage him, and after recovering his health he set about earning a livelihood as best he could without the use of hands or arms. Part of the time he lived alone, and from the necessity of helping himself he became wonderfully adept in performing all kinds of work, using his feet and mouth principally. He owned a horse, of which he took the entire care, harnessed it, fastened and unfastened the buckles with his teeth, and drove with the reins tied around his shoulders. Being in need of a waggon, he bought wheels and axles and built a box buggy complete and painted it. He went to the barn one winter day and built a cow stable, sawing the timber with his feet, and, with the hammer in one foot and holding the nail with the other, he nailed the boards on as well as most men could with their hands. He dug a well twelve feet deep on a farm in this town and stoned it himself. He could mow away hay by holding the fork under his chin and letting it rest against his shoulder. He would pick up potatoes in the field as fast as a man could dig them. He would dress himself, get his meals, write his letters, and, in fact, do almost anything that any man with two arms could do.—Boston Transcript.

Decorum in Western Courts.

"When Eastern people read Puck and see signs which are claimed to be taken from court-rooms out West, they imagine that the signs are burlesques. I thought so until I went West," said a gentleman to the Arounder last night. "I know now that the signs are literal in every sense. I have two pasted up in my office which may do as samples of those I have seen. They were taken from a court-room in the northern part of Wyoming Territory, and read: 'No cracking peanuts in this court-room,' and 'Lawyers are not allowed to kiss the baby during court hours.' This latter being translated means that they are not allowed to take a drink. Then I saw one in a court-room at a town on Lake Superior which read: 'This court adjourns at 2.30; the court is going to the dance at H——.' The dance was held in a camp about six miles back of the town.—Buffalo Courier.

BISMARCK AS BIG AS EVER.

Utter Inability of the French to Solve the Great Man's Riddles.

(Paris Letter in Chicago Inter-Ocean.)

As an American I recognize in Prince Bismarck a gift which he possesses in a greater degree than nature has vouchsafed to any diplomatist since the days of Benjamin Franklin—namely, that of appearing frank, simple and sincere, and yet of being, at the same time, deep, cunning and enigmatic. In fact, the Sphinx, Franklin and Bismarck have been the world's three great masters of diplomacy. The Sphinx outwitted all the world; Franklin outwitted all Europe, and Bismarck outwits all France. This is because the astute Chancellor, conscious, like Pericles, not only of his great position, but also of his great ability, always, or nearly always—that is to say, ninety-nine times out of a hundred speaks his mind with honest simplicity and audacity, and without the "forcible feebleness" of diplomatic reserve. On the other hand, once in a hundred times he ceases to be Bismarck and for the nonce becomes Machiavelli. In all the Chancellor's recent utterances, save one, there has been a charming frankness. For instance, he said sublimely that the German victory over France was an accident. A lesser statesman would have boastingly claimed it as a foregone conclusion. But Bismarck, the Franklin of Europe, is capable also of the most drab and downright Quaker duplicity. The Chancellor's Parisian critics, subtle as they are, have failed to fathom one of the most deceptive of his recent meanings. I mean deceptive in the honorable sense, just as a varnish, a veneer, a stucco, is a pleasing and commendable deception. I have vainly searched the volumes of twenty French journals to find even a passing reference to the point to which I refer. It has strangely escaped French notice; the Gallic mind does not comprehend the Germanic. Bismarck, in asking for an army appropriation covering seven years instead of three, adduced as one of his cogent reasons for the proposed measure a singular statement, which, on being rendered into plain English, would be the following:

"I may hope to be alive at the end of three but not at the end of seven years."

This remark at once set the whole Paris press agog with a pleasing wonder as to whether or not the great enemy of France was really likely, himself being the judge, to pay the debt of nature so unexpectedly and conveniently soon. There were innumerable articles on his age, on his rheumatisms, on his gout, on his dyspepsia, on his other ailments, and on his possibly imminent "shuffling off this mortal coil." All these jesting and jubilant comments were based on the above quoted allusion, which he was erroneously thought to have made to himself. I venture to declare that this allusion was not to himself at all. It was to the Emperor. The Chancellor could not decently say: "The Emperor is very, very old, and may drop off at any moment." His real meaning, however, was: "The Emperor has but a few days left; while he lives his prestige will be enormous; but his life, and the phenomenal weight and reverence attaching to him as the honored patriarch of living sovereigns, may be lost to the Imperial party in Germany at any moment; and hence before the Emperor dies, I, his Chancellor, who expect to be Chancellor also under the new reign, want to put the German army, now while I may, beyond all possible interference by the next Reichstag." This was Bismarck's real meaning.

Personal Points.

Hon. Carl Schurz slipped on the side walk in New York on Friday and fractured his thigh bone.

Gen. B. F. Butler fell in the railway station at Philadelphia on Friday night and dislocated his arm.

Rev. A. M. Banchet, Roman Catholic Bishop of Nesqually, died at Vancouver, W. T., on Friday night, aged 90.

Justin McCarthy was banqueted by the Boston Press Club Saturday night, and delivered his final American lecture last evening.

Dr. Horatius Bonar, now of Edinburgh, but for many years of Kelso, Scotland, one of the poets of the modern pulpit, the author of not a few of our most popular hymns and of many religious books, has made arrangements to retire from active ministerial life. Dr. Bonar was ordained in 1837. He this year, therefore, completes his fifty years in the ministry.

The Board of Trustees of Rev. Dr. Talmage's Brooklyn Tabernacle are puzzled on the question of enlarging the church. The church now has seating capacity for 3,700 people, but very often at the evening services there are over 6,000 people present. The building will either have to be enlarged or extra galleries will have to be put in.

Amateur Arctic Explorer—Well, well; the books are all wrong. I thought those people dressed in sealskins.

Native—Oh, no! Ordinary fur is good enough for us.

"Great St. Arctic. Where did you learn English?"

"English! We all talk English."

"Well, I don't see how these former Arctic explorers could lie so. Say, my friend, the North Pole is right about here somewhere, and I want to get together a party of natives to help me find it."

An Explanation.

Customer—"I must say I don't like this milk." Milkman—"Why, what's the matter with it?" "Just look at it; don't you see that it is blue?" "Well, yes; it is a little darker than usual." "What is the cause of it?" "I think I can explain it." "I'd be glad to hear it." "You see, we weaned the calf a few days ago, and probably the old cow feels a little blue about it. That's the only way I can account for it."—Texas Siftings.

BISHOP BALDWIN'S PROHIBITION.

No Church Revenue Should be Raised by Games of Chance or Theatricals.

The following decree has been issued by Bishop Baldwin in his Diocese of Huron:

"Inasmuch as serious injury has for some time past been inflicted on the cause of Christ in this, our diocese, by the use of unscriptural and utterly fallacious methods of raising money for church purposes, and seeing, moreover, that the principles which should regulate our giving, advocated by us in our primary charge in 1884, have in some instances been neglected, forgotten or ignored, we deem it best, for the interests of our Redeemer's kingdom and the furtherance of His truth among us, clearly and unreservedly to state what are the practices to which we refer, and to take such action as the welfare of our sacred religion demands.

While allowing to congregations all reasonable liberty in the conduct of their own affairs, we yet feel that certain abuses in connection with the raising of money for church purposes have crept in among us, of so secular and unholy a character that to leave them unchecked would be not only to injure the spirituality of the church at large, but also, by implication, to make us partaker of other men's sins.

In accordance with the above, and in virtue of the authority committed unto us, the chief pastor over this portion of our Lord's flock, we now formally inhibit all churches and congregations within our diocese using the following methods of raising money for ecclesiastical or parochial purposes

First—Raffling, throwing of dice, games of chance or gambling of any kind.

Secondly—All theatrical, dramatic or impersonating exhibitions, whether public or private.

Beyond these two injunctions it is not our intention to proceed, preferring to leave all other matters connected with this subject to your Christian judgment and sense of what is right as professors of the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. We may, however, state our opinion, and in this we think we have the "mind of Christ."

The only true and Scriptural method by which we can raise money for the cause of Christ is the exercise of the divine principle of self-renunciation. The spirit too often invoked is that of self-gratification, or aggrandizement. Our offerings, to be acceptable to God, must represent, not the price which some have paid for amusement and others for gain, but the self-denial of our hearts for the love we bear to Christ.

MAURICE S. HURON.

CONFERRING THE RED HAT.

Representatives of Canada and the United States to Receive It.

The two American cardinals, the Cardinal Archbishop of Baltimore, Gibbons, and the Archbishop of Quebec, Taschereau, who are at present in Rome, will receive their red hats at a public consistory, to be held March 17th, the feast of St. Patrick. The insignia of a cardinal can only be given by the Pope himself in person. The ceremony of conferring the cardinal's hat is a very impressive one. The new cardinal is led into the Pope's presence by two of the cardinal deacons, and he immediately makes a triple profound reverence to the head of the Catholic Church—one at the threshold of the hall, one in the middle and still another at the foot of the throne. The Pope then bestows upon him the kiss of peace, and he is embraced by all his cardinalitial colleagues in turn. The Te Deum is chanted, and, after encircling the altar with his colleagues, the new cardinal prostrates himself, and remains in that position while the canticle is being finished, and the proper prayers said by the cardinal dean. Arising, next his hood is thrown back, the cardinal dean receives his oath of office, and leads him before the Pope, who confers upon him the red velvet hat, with due prayers. The Pope then withdraws, and the new cardinal receives the congratulations of his brethren. The cardinalitial ring and title are not conferred until the second consistory; only the hat is given at the first.

The cardinal's hat is of red cloth, with a very small crown and broad brim. Two ties, each ending in five rows of red silk acorns or tassels, three in each row, are fastened to the crown, and fall on either side, being long enough to meet under the wearer's chin. Originally, instead of this fringe, each tie had but a single tassel, because the hat was then used on all solemn occasions. At present the hat is not worn, and, therefore, the fringing may be more elaborate. Indeed, after the hat has been conferred, it is not again seen till the cardinal's death, when it is placed upon his bier, and, as a rule, suspended in the church above his tomb. The red hat of the late Cardinal McCloskey may be seen thus suspended in St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York. The red ferreta of the cardinal is of felt, of the same shape as those of simple ecclesiastics. On ordinary occasions they wear a black hat, with a red ribbon gold embroidered. The ring given to the cardinal to consecrate his marriage with the Church is a sapphire set in gold.

Canadian News Notes.

The Township of Otonabee is trebly honored. Its Reeve, Mr. Jno. Lang, has been elected M. P. for East Peterboro'. Its Deputy-Reeve is Warden of the county, and Mr. Blezard, M. P. P., is a resident of the township.

Measles and diphtheria are very prevalent about Watford and have proved fatal in a number of cases. Three members of the family of Mr. John Lightfoot, of Brooke Township, and two daughters of Mr. Wm. Clutterbuck, of Watford, have died.

An offer of prizes by the Brant County Sabbath School Association to the Sunday School pupils on the Indian reserve has borne good fruit. Three schools have sent in lists of those entitled to a prize for attendance. One school carried off forty prizes, twenty-two of whom had been present every day; another school claimed eight, four of whom had been present every day; the latter school seventy-two, most of whom had been present full time.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Working the Garden—Spring Suggestions -Use of Fertilizers.

Peas may be hastened by sprouting the seed in a box of moist sand before planting.

Do not use fertilizers too lavishly on potted plants. A small quantity applied frequently is better than a full allowance at one time.

Never use whitewash in the stables or hen-houses unless carbolic acid is added to it, as a single application of the mixture is better than two or three applications of the whitewash alone.

The silver maple is a rapid-growing tree, often attaining a diameter of ten inches in ten years. It also thrives well on sandy soils, requires but little care, and has few insect enemies.

Make your hot-bed frames in sections, so that they can be stored away when not in use. It is much better than allowing them to remain on the ground to become useless.

The best place for your wood ashes is around your peach trees. The effect may be easily noticed the first season after the ashes shall have been applied.

It is an easy matter to have a garden so arranged as to cultivate it with a horse-hoe, but the best results are usually obtained on small plots well manured and worked by hand.

A few boxes in the house filled with earth, and planted to tomatoes, lettuce and cabbage, will be found a cheap mode of securing early plants. Now is the time to begin, as they will not grow too rapidly when the seeds have sprouted.

If potted plants be watered around the roots with lime-water the angle-worms will be destroyed in the soil. The caustic qualities of the lime-water kill all soft-skinned worms. Only a small amount of the lime-water is necessary.

Clean out the old stalks of the carnations, sprinkle the soil and plants with lime-water and clean off the space around them so as to permit of plenty of heat from the sun. They are well worth the small amount of labor required for bringing them to perfection.

There is no advantage in having young ducks, geese or turkeys too early in the season, as they will not thrive as well as when hatched in April or later. A good start in dry weather will enable them to grow rapidly and entail less labor, while dampness is fatal.

Freas' grafting-wax is four pounds of resin, one pound of tallow and one pound of beeswax. Melt all together over a slow fire and when it is melted turn out into a tub of cold water and pull as shoemakers' wax is made. Soften with hot water.

Mr. Galloway, of Malden, N. Y., who has tried cold storage for peaches, says that with him it has been a decided success. This indicates that the time is coming when peaches may be stored and offered for sale in the middle of the winter season.

Do not be tempted with all the new "novelties" offered in garden seeds, as some of them are only old varieties with new names. Before devoting the garden to any new variety, give it a test by procuring a packet of seeds for experimenting, as a loss from poor seed or from an inferior variety cannot be recovered. Time is an important item in gardening.

Place the hotbed in a position so as to get the most sunlight, and cover the sash at night so as to avoid loss of heat by radiation. Glass permits heat to escape very rapidly, and it is best, therefore, to use a double glazed sash, as the air space between the panes of glass will serve as a protection from the cold.

Here is the way the large strawberries are produced. Apply a heavy dressing of a mixture of two parts each of muriate of potash and superphosphate, with one part nitrate of soda. Keep the young plants clean, water when necessary, and do not allow a single runner to start, as they should be pinched back. Mulch the young plants in the fall and remove the mulch early in spring. Then apply another dressing of fertilizer and clean the soil by stirring it about an inch. When the young berries are set pinch off all but the largest. It requires work, but it will pay.

Regarding strawberry rust opinions differ. Some ascribe the cause to too much moisture, others to excess of manure on the plants, while it is also claimed that it is due to the effects of too much heat from the sun. What is known as rust, or blight, may, however, be traced to a minute worm, which does the mischief by working around the plants. It is suggested that the best remedy is to burn a light covering of straw over the plants.

Warmth of Bodies After Death.

Cases have of late been frequently reported in the newspapers in which, despite medical evidence to the contrary, bodies have been kept from burial because they did not become cold. Faith-healers and miracle-workers have been called in on such occasions to resuscitate the supposed victim of suspended animation, and indulged in diatribes at being called in too late. It is not generally known that there is, as a rule, an elevation of temperature immediately after death, owing to the blood no longer being cooled in its passage through the lungs, and to the stoppage of the circulation, and in many cases where the nervous system has been affected, and in cholera, small pox, yellow fever and hepatic abscess. The post mortem rise in temperature is often very decided. The heat of an apparently dead body is hence not conclusive evidence of life.—Medical Standard.

The Widow's Mite.

"My friend, we expect a contribution from you to aid this good work."

"I would be glad to contribute," responded Johnson, "but I am so very poor that I don't believe I can contribute anything."

"But it is for your own good to contribute. A contribution from your poverty will win you a credit mark above. The widow's mite is of more value than the offering of the rich."

"Yes," replied Johnson, "but you see, I'm not acquainted with any widows."—Pittsburg Despatch.

"IN Canada," the Montreal Trade Bulletin says, "the bounty on pig iron has been a complete failure, for instead of encouraging the profitable manufacture of that article, it has caused heavy losses to those investing capital therein, and it is contended that in face of these facts the Government cannot consistently continue the system. The bounty system is wrong in principle, and cannot be tolerated much longer in Canada."

THE efforts of Prince Bismarck to discourage German emigration have had their effect. In 1881, 210,547 persons left the Empire; in 1882, 193,869; in 1883, 166,109; in 1884, 143,586; in 1885, 103,642, and in 1886 only 76,687. But rumors of war have caused an increase during the last few months, for in December, 1886 (the last figures issued), 2,754, against 2,117 for the same month in 1885, emigrated. It may be found necessary yet to entirely prohibit emigration, as well as the exportation of horses.

DURING the year 1886 Austria expelled from her dominions 558 men and 112 women, including one nobleman by birth, many pseudo-aristocrats, several schoolmasters and a large number of merchants, dangerous international criminals and bank note forgers. The expelled were sent to various countries, as follows: To Hungary, 219; Russia, 131; Prussia, 101; Bavaria, 106; Italy, 61; Saxony, 11; Roumania, 7; Montenegro, 7; Wurtemburg, 5; Baden, 4; Bosnia, 4; America, 3; Switzerland, 3; Servia, 2, and 1 each to Africa, Denmark, Herzegovina and Turkey.

IF a person thinks of committing suicide in New York State, it may be to his advantage to take care that he shall succeed. The attempt is a crime, under New York law, but the success relieves suicide from criminality. Such is the effect of a recent decision of the New York Supreme Court, general term, in the suit of Darrow vs. Family Fund Society. An alleged life insurance society was the defendant in this case. Perhaps that had something to do with influencing the decision. But why should a "crime" thus be awarded a premium upon its successful commission?

FOR five years the prohibition law has been evaded in Portland, Me., by an ingenious contrivance, just unearthed. Three beer barrels were sunk in the ground and connected by tubes with a joist in a stable near by. On the side of the joist an innocent looking board, apparently nailed, when released by a pressure on a hidden spring, turned on a hinge at the bottom and disclosed the faucet by which the beer was drawn. The barrels in the earth had galvanized iron pipes extending up to near the surface of the ground. When the barrels were to be replenished the dirt was removed from these pipes, a funnel placed in each and the beer poured in. Afterward the pipes were again covered and there was nothing to show the existence of the hiding place.

THE new German repeating rifle is the Mauser model perfected. It has just been distributed to the soldiers of seven army corps. By next March, the whole army will have it in hand. It is rather difficult to describe this gun technically, as it is the result of studies made simultaneously in the State manufactories and at the Military School, and no complete specifications have yet been issued. The gun is shorter than that in use to-day in the German army, and, although the stock and the barrel are the same, the bridge is a little raised. It has an automatic unloader which makes the cartridge fall out as soon as the shot is fired. The most important improvement is the chamber which the soldier can use in exceptional cases, that is to say, when an officer thinks that firing at will is necessary. This chamber is formed of a steel tube placed in the barrel under the movable breech, and each time that the weapon is loaded, a spring seizes the cartridge. A hook then catches it and pushes it into the breech; at the command to fire at will the soldier has only to push a cog on the left side of the chamber, and then eight shots can be fired, and the cartridges removed automatically. After these eight shots, the soldier can reload with ten more shots; eight in the cartridge chamber, one in the pan, and one in the barrel.

DURING the recent exciting debate on the Army Bill, in the German Imperial Parliament, Prince Bismarck narrated the following bit of inside history regarding the acquisition of Metz: "In 1871, to speak frankly, I was not inclined to take Metz, I was then for the linguistic boundary. But I made inquiries of the military authorities before I finally decided. It was M. Thiers, if you will permit me this historic episode, who said to me: 'We can only yield one, either Belfort or Metz. If you claim both, we will not conclude peace at present.' At that time, I was quite anxious about the interference of neutral Powers, and had been thinking for some months that we should receive a communication from them. I was urgently desirous that Thiers should not be compelled to return to Bordeaux in order to retract the peace. I therefore discussed the matter with our military authorities, and especially with my friend Von Moltke, who is now seated in front of me. 'Can we agree to renounce one of the two?' I asked, and received the answer: 'Belfort, yes. But Metz is worth a hundred thousand men. The question, then, is this, whether we are willing to be a hundred thousand men weaker against the French or not, in case war breaks out again.' Thereupon I said: 'Let us take Metz!'"

Living With a Heart-Valve Burst.

Edward H. Palmer died at the City Hospital this afternoon under peculiar circumstances, writes a Louisville correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. On December 21st last he was admitted to the hospital, and, owing to his swarthy complexion, he was assigned to the colored medical ward. He conversed intelligently with the officers and nurses and was recognized as a man of education and refinement. To all appearances he was healthy, but an examination proved that his ailment was of a most serious nature. At times he would complain of a sudden twitching of his heart, but there were symptoms and complications in the way which rendered an accurate and complete diagnosis difficult to reach. His appetite was all that could have been desired, and for some time the contradictory symptoms were a puzzle to the attending physicians. This morning, however, the patient complained more than ordinarily, and one of the physicians, on sounding his chest, heard the blood rushing to and from his heart with great speed and violence, the sounds being distinctly audible to the listener. In an instant it dawned upon the physician that one of the valves of the heart had burst. The patient admitted that he was affected with heart disease for some years, but until his admission to the hospital here had never been treated for it. Further examination developed the fact that the auricular ventricular valve had been burst for several months, and that the hissing sounds were produced by the hurried uninterrupted passage of the blood to and fro between the auricle and ventricle. The valve had originally served to allow the blood to pass from the auricle to the ventricle, but prevented its return to the auricle, and it is most remarkable that the man has lived as long as he has. According to medical research death would have been the inevitable result as soon as the valve gave way. As it was, Palmer lived for four months at least with his heart in this condition, and up to the last moment was able to converse intelligently with all around him, remarking to his sister, who had arrived a short while before his death, that his time had come, and that he felt as if he were full of blood running riot over his body. When he died there was not the least tremor or exhibition of pain, and he merely closed his eyes, after looking at all around him, never to open them again. From his sister it was learned that Palmer was a member of a creole family residing in the neighborhood of New Orleans; that he had been given the best education money could afford, and had held several lucrative positions in the South. He was, however, never satisfied to remain at home, and would wander aimlessly over the country, never writing to his relatives unless taken ill. He spoke English, Spanish and French fluently.

A Letter from His Dead Wife.

Benjamin Harley is a well-to-do resident of Roaring Branch, this county, writes a Lock Haven, Pa., correspondent. He is an old man, and is a strong believer in Spiritualism, no thing having ever been too miraculous if done in the name of Spiritualism to weaken his faith or arouse his suspicion. He has two sons, one a wild and shiftless young man named Henry, the other a thriving citizen. The latter is a partner of his father's in the mercantile business. Old Mr. Harley is a widower, his wife, who was also an enthusiastic Spiritualist, having died only a few weeks ago. The other morning old Mr. Harley awoke and found lying on his pillow a piece of paper, folded and addressed to him. He opened it, and found that it was a letter purporting to come from his dead wife. It was a business letter. It informed Mr. Harley that the writer was in heaven, which was a thoroughly practical place so much so that she had set up in the millinery business. She was just then in need of $50 to put in the business, and requested her husband to inclose her that amount. She instructed him to put it in a letter and place the letter in a stump near her son Henry's house. Extravagant and ridiculous as this letter was, old Mr. Harley did not doubt for a moment that it came from his wife. He could not spare $50 that day, but he wrote a letter to his wife, inclosing $20 and informing her that he would send the remainder in a few days. The letter he placed in the stump as directed. Young Henry Harley long ago exhausted his credit at the tavern and other places in Roaring Branch, and his longing for convivialty had been necessarily unsatisfied for some time. Two or three days ago the tavern-keeper was surprised to see the young man walk in and pay up the old score out of a neat roll of bills. Young Harley paid up other small accounts about town, and the astonishing fact that he had money soon became the talk of the village. The news was not long in reaching old Mr. Harley's ears, and, after pondering over the matter for some time, and closely examining the letter from his departed wife, he at last reluctantly made up his mind that he knew how Henry had got the money. This belief was made positive when, in a business transaction with Charles Green, another storekeeper in the place, he received the veritable $20 bill he had inclosed to his wife to help along her celestial millinery business. He learned that the bill had been changed for young Henry Harley.

Perhaps you have noticed that it is the man who shakes hands the most that is the hardest to shake.

CANADIAN VICE-ROYALTY.

Views of the Wife of a Canadian Judge in Paris.

(Paris letter in the London Truth.)

The wife of a Canadian judge, who read what Sir C. Tupper said upon the "Truth eries," has called to give me supplemental information about the past and present representatives of Her Majesty at Ottawa. She was in that city when the announcement was made that the Lansdownes were to get the chateau of Montreal (?) fitted up and to spend there the coldest months of the year, which are the ones in which tobogganning, sledging, curling, skating tournaments and torchlight processions are in full fling. This news caused intense excitement and the Anglo-Scotch thought it rather a shame that the Vice-regal court should go in midwinter every year to show the light of their countenance to the French at Montreal. Lord Lansdowne, I am told, keeps up a fine show. His carriages and horses have given a great idea of his wealth to the colonists. What must it have been, they wonder, before his income from his Irish estates was reduced by a quarter—a reduction which was on his side voluntary, and, therefore, to his honor. But there is no burning of candles at both ends of the Government House as in the Dufferins' time. At their entertainments the Marquis and Marchioness do things magnificently, but close economy is the every-day rule.

Lord Dufferin not only spent his £10,000 yearly, but dipped his estates and sold the timber off them when he could gain political points by a judicious use of money. My visitor assured me that "Lorne and the Princess Louise did not salt away a dollar" when they were away in Canada. The Princess was as beneficent as could be, and was never appealed to for money without (when she was satisfied that she had to deal with honest people) putting her hand in her pocket or signing a cheque. She was a great success until the sledge accident befell her. Her nervous system then got upset, with the effect that, in speaking, she was apt to make use of words just the contrary of those she wanted to say. She, therefore, imposed on herself the rule of silence with those whom she did not well know. This passed for sullen reserve and favoritism, and caused a good deal of resentment among the ladies.

"Lorne was just as good as he could be, and first-rate in business," said my visitor, "but he was unendurable." "How so?" I asked. "He was so stand-off in his demeanor. Dufferin knew the Christian and pet names of all the children in Ottawa, read of the births in the papers, and remembered to congratulate the fathers of the new-born babes. He shook hands publicly with a grocer's wife who had triplets, and one day got out of his carriage to go and admire them when they were with their mother and the servant in the street. If a newsboy said a smart thing to him he'd stop to talk to him, and I often saw him shake hands with a conductor of the street cars who came from his part of Ireland, and he had always something bright and pleasant to say. Lorne's stand-offishness after Dufferin's chaff and heartiness was like an icy blast in the month of May."

The Princess Louise enjoyed best in Canada the society of the French. She was very fond of getting away from Ottawa and going to live en artiste at the citadel of Quebec—an old place that dated from the Marquis de Montcalm. (It was built by the Duke of Wellington.) It became the thing there to be artistic. Officers, the sons and daughters of judges and of ministers (preachers), successful trades people, and so on, went in for sketching, impressionism, art furniture and art unions, to be bien en cour. The princess used to go out on sketching expeditions in a boat. She had some narrow escapes near rapids; that, however, was not at Quebec, but high up the river. It used to be said of her that she was all radiance to the French Canadians, and had more French than English books on her drawing-room table. But Lady Sophia Macnamara understood the "independent" temper of the ladies of the Anglo-Scotch provinces, and helped to make things smooth and agreeable.

Ephemeral Fathers.

An estimable lady of the West side has had the fortune of three husbands—two having passed over to the majority. By the first husband there is a son; by the second a very bright little daughter. One day, while some lady friends were lunching with the mother, the little girl asked: "Mamma, has Jack a papa in heaven?" "Yes, darling; hush!" replied mamma. Have I a papa in heaven?" "Yes, darling; hush!" repeated mamma. After a pause and profound thinking, the little miss added: "Papas don't last long, do they mamma?"—Yenowine News.

Pass It Up This Way.

Spring has arrived and has registered on the open page of nature's book in her own bright chirography. Wild violets and lilies are blooming, the green grass is growing, the swelling buds are bursting, the larks are singing their spring matins and everything indicates that nature is glad to welcome spring's early arrival.—Albany (Ga.) News.

No Doubt He Can.

Juvenile hostess entertaining the widower—Mr. Filtrip, can't you walk as well as you used to?"

"Why, yes, Bessie, why shouldn't I?"

"Oh, I heard mamma say that you were on your second legs, but I thought they're 'most as good as your old ones."

At the opera—"I can't explain the success of that singer." "Neither can I. She sings through her nose most atrociously." "Perhaps that is the reason why every one is waving a handkerchief at her."

The simplest and one of the most convenient methods of tracing and transferring designs is the use of tarlatan instead of tracing paper. Place the pattern to be copied upon the drawing-board and cover it with the tarlatan, and pin both to the board with drawing tacks. Then, with a moderately soft pencil, draw the pattern carefully. Remove the pins and the design will be found to be quite clear. Then lay the tarlatan upon the material, pin to the board as before, and again go over the lines with the pencil. The result will be a perfect copy of the design upon the material (fabric or paper) in minute dots. The tarlatan design may be used again and again

MIND-READING.

Amusing Experiences of the Prince of Elucidators.

Mr. Washington Irving Bishop, who has lately been exciting so much attention by what he terms his "mind-reading," has had many interesting adventures and not a few amusing ones. While I was in Belfast Mr. Bishop gave an entertainment in Ulster Hall, which caused a great deal of animated discussion among those present. During the evening, and after the successful performance of several astonishing feats, a temporary lull occurred, during which a rich voice in the gallery loudly called out:

"Misthur Bishup, Misthur—"

"Well, well, what do you want?" inquired the entertainer.

"Oi s'pose yez can foind annething a man wants?"

"Well, I think I can—nearly anything."

"Will yez foind somethin' for me, thin?"

"Certainly."

"Well, the morrow's Sunday, an' oi'd loike yez to foind me a moighty foine dinner."

Mr. Bishop is authority for the statement that the hero of this occasion received a "goold" half-sovereign. "It was about the best advertisement I ever had," said he.

He also tells that while in New Zealand the King of the Maoris was so desirous of viewing an exhibition of the Professor's unusual powers that he obtained a private seance. After some parleying it was decided that his dusky Highness himself should conceal an article which Bishop was to discover. Mr. Bishop was taken from the room, and on the Maori King's signifying his readiness, the mind-reader was brought blindfolded into the kingly presence and at once began the search. In a few minutes Mr. Bishop turned to the monarch's mouth as the place where the article was concealed. His Highness grunted an emphatic dissent to the place located by the Professor as containing the article for which he was in search. Bishop insisted that it was there, and finally demanded that the royal mouth should be opened wide. After considerable refusal and persevering persistence on the part of the King and the Professor, the mouth was slowly and reluctantly opened. The next instant, however, the King began to cough violently, which resulted in a button being expelled. The King, finding the place had been correctly located, attempted to swallow the button, and thus defeat the determined mind-reader. What might have happened to Bishop had the Maoris lost their King, is one of those things we tremble to contemplate.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for March.

Money Makers

don t let golden opportunities pass unimproved there are times in the lives of men when more money can be made rapidly and easily than otherwise can be earned by years of labor. Write Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine, who will send you, free, full particulars about work that you can do, and live at home, wherever you are located, at a profit of at least from $5 to $25 daily. Some have made over $50 in a single day. All is new. You are started free. Capital not required. Either sex; all ages.

A Rome, N. Y., girl filled three stone beer jugs with wet sand, corked them tightly, and set them in the oven to heat, so that she could warm her bed with them. The heat generated steam from the wet sand, and an explosion followed, which filled the room with flying sand and fragments of beer jugs. The girl and the rest of the family were badly scared, but unhurt.

I suffered 7 years with sciatic rheumatism. No treatment relieved me. McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant cured me, so that for 2 years I have not had least symptoms of rheumatism. A. Furtaney, Potoskey, Mich., formerly of Berlin, Ont.

Barnard's comet is now visible to the naked eye on the eastern horizon about daybreak, but is so low down that it is not readily seen unless one knows exactly where to look. It was discovered October 6th. About 5 a. m. it makes a beautiful object in the telescope—a final halo of light surrounding a sharp white mass in the centre. It has a short nebulous tail, about 2° in length. Its distance from the earth is now about 113,000,000 miles.

With Satisfaction.

Polson's NERVILINE, the new and certain pain cure, is used with satisfaction in every instance. There is abundant reason for this, for it performs all that is claimed for it. Nerviline is a never-failing cure for cramps, pains in the side or back, lumbago, sore throat, chilblains, toothache. Nerviline is in fact a sure remedy for all pains, both internal and external. Try a 10 cent sample bottle. Large bottles only 25 cents, by all druggists and country dealers.

ROLLER MILL WANTED.

If there is one thing more than another needed in Flesherton at the present time it is a Roller Flour Mill. This process of manufacturing flour is growing more and more in public estimation instead of diminishing as many thought would be the case when it was first introduced. Stone flour is rapidly becoming a thing of the past and it behooves enterprising millers to open their eyes at once to the fact, that the new process has come to stay, and govern themselves accordingly.

We are aware that strong arguments are still being used in favor of the old stone process and against the rollers. Some say the very "life" is ground out of the grain by the latter; but, immediately after giving utterance to this remark, those very men march off to a flour and feed store and order a barrel of—not stone, but roller flour! Why? Simply because the prudent housewife derives the best results from it, and no matter what the "liege lords" may say to the contrary, they must obey orders from headquarters or listen to a "curtain" lecture.

It has been said, "roller flour is so fine that it inevitably produces dyspepsia." No matter! the Canadian housewife prefers it to any other; it makes whiter bread; and the fact of the matter is she will have it if John has to carry it on his back twenty miles. Shrewd millers soon noticed the growing popularity of the roller flour and at once proceeded to put the rollers into operation in their mills. Now wheat is ground by the new process in cities, towns, villages and hamlets all over the country; and while the enterprising miller is reaping a rich and well deserved harvest, the "old process" man's lower jaw drops about two inches (more or less) as he notes how often the hopper is empty and the stones silent, simply because he will not adapt himself to the wants of the people.

One reason why Flesherton has not a roller mill, it is said, is because the proprietor is of opinion that in a few years the rollers will be discarded in favor of the stone process! This is not good logic. Just imagine a capitalist standing with folded arms for years—his mill idle a good part of the time—while all around him roller millers are "fairly coining money" by adapting themselves to circumstances! Day after day scores of teams pass close by his mill door and proceed to patronize his more progressive rivals. And yet that is precisely our situation and has been for some years. Thousands of dollars have been thus lost to us—not only in the matter of inadequate flouring facilities but in the vast amount of trade diverted from its natural channel to others leading to places possessing superior flour manufacturing establishments. Feed stores have sprung up in our midst, which sell flour manufactured in neighboring villages, and here again hundreds of dollars are taken from Flesherton and used in building up other places at our expense. When will our capitalists wake up and grasp the situation with a firm hand?

People said Geo. Stevenson was a fool and that the old stage coaches would continue as before; but they were mistaken. The same has been said, in various ways, of all great inventions—the telegraph, telephone, reapers, mowers, &c. The same is being said by some to-day in reference to roller flour. But the "new process" has come to stay, and those who fail to recognize this fact must be very blind—or stupid. We must have a roller flour mill and a first-class one at that.

MR. NEIL McCOLMAN.

We are glad to learn that Mr. McColman has received the appointment of Light House keeper in Collingwood at a salary of $600 per annum with summer residence on the island, boats, &c. &c., and winter residence on the shore. Mr. McColman richly deserves this office. He occupied the better part of his life in the service of the public and his party thereby neglecting his own business, and we are glad to note that he has got his just reward. —Thornbury Standard.

It may be considered ungrateful on our part but we cannot help saying that in our opinion the Conservative party is digging a good deep grave for itself in thus putting a premium on political crookedness. All a man has to do nowadays is to act the traitor to his party and, forsooth! he is made a lighthousekeeper or something else! A few more such blunders and East Grey Conservatism will receive its congi.

The Hanover Post has attempted to reply to our editorial re South Grey Election. It is only an attempt, however, and a very feeble one at that. It does not omit to give a false construction to the sentiments we uttered and more than once deliberately misquotes us. This sort of treatment is simply intolerable and utterly unworthy the most rabid party journal. But it is in keeping with the actions of the parliamentarian who published garbled extracts from private letters during the recent contest. We have no desire to discuss public questions with opponents who will not, or can not, or dare not stick to the truth.

Another horrible railway accident is recorded in the daily papers this week. The scene was a new iron bridge on the Dedham branch of the Providence Railway, which is known among railway men as "the tin bridge." It is near Boston, U.S. Three cars plunged down an embankment about thirty-five feet high, were smashed to pieces. The cries of the wounded and dying were simply awful. That anyone escaped death seems almost miraculous. About 80 passengers were killed and 50 wounded, so far as heard from.

The Young Father.

HIS CANDID OPINION OF HIS FIRST BABY CANDIDLY EXPRESSED.

"There," said the nurse, proudly, as she put the new baby into the young father's arms, "she's a perfect beauty of a child."

"Is that all there is of her?" he asked.

"I'm ashamed of you."

"Well, this is all clothes, so far as I can see."

Then he took it and turned its head down.

"Oh!" screamed the nurse, "you'll kill the baby."

"Why, what's the matter?"

"You're holding her upside down."

"Well, it doesn't make any difference yet, does it?"

"I never saw a man so ignorant."

"How do you hold her anyway?"

Then the nurse showed him.

"I wonder what a father does under the circumstances," he thought to himself. "I suppose I've got to talk to the little thing."

And he began a string of baby talk. The baby did not show the faintest sign of recognition.

"Say, I'm afraid she's deaf, nurse,

"Deaf! you're a fool.

"Well, she doesn't hear. She doesn't even—"

The baby set up a terrible yell.

"She's sick," he said. "There's something the matter with her,"

"No, there ain't."

"Oh, do babies yell like that so soon?"

The baby kept up a bawl.

"I don't know about this. I suppose I ought to play the stern parent and spank her, oughtn't I?"

"Spank her! I'd like to see you try to spank the dear little thing."

"Here, take her away."

And he went off down stairs and lit a cigar and took a walk, reasoning to himself that there were some things in life only a woman seemed to grasp thoroughly.

From our own Correspondent

Having noticed Mr. Linleys emphatic denial in last weeks ADVANCE, there are many who seem to think that he must be wanting to play a little game of bluff. As there are a number of persons who are willing to testify at any time that they have seen dice and dominos in his house, your correspondent does not retract worth a cent, and as Mr. Linley conducts himself and his house properly, in the same manner will he be respected.

A grand entertainment under the management of Miss Drummond was given in the School Room of S. S. No 3, on Friday evening last. The evening was most beautiful and the house was crowded and a very pleasant evening spent. The proceeds amounted to $25.00.

A meeting of the Farmers' Institute is to be held in this place on the 22nd, when a large gathering is expected, as many interesting subjects will be discussed.

If the man who draws saw logs through the village and throws them off here and there at the side of the road, would bring a bundle of straw with him to feed his horses while he is doing business in the hotel and not keep them standing on the road from early morning until late at night they would probably not be so anxious to get away.

Our village Prophet predicts a great European war to commence about the first of June and also that there will be splendid crops this year and good times everywhere.

Dr. Kerr has been laid up for several days with a severe cold.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored. —C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

DEATH OF GEO. DINWOODY.

He Passes Peacefully Away to the Spirit World.

Although not unexpected, the people of this community were much startled on Friday morning last to learn of the death of Mr. Geo. Dinwoody. The sad event occurred at the residence of deceased, near Flesherton, on Friday forenoon, March 11th. Deceased passed away at the age of forty-three—in the prime of life.

Death is usually an unwelcome visitor, but it spares neither vigorous youth, sturdy manhood, or ripe old age. All must pass through the land of shadows, the cold waters of death's Jordan, into regions of light or darkness. Glorious the testimony do they leave behind, who, when taking a last view of earthly things, can say with the poet—

"It is well with my soul."

Such was the bright spiritual experience of Geo. Dinwoody. Who will soon forget his sunny countenance, his cheery smile, and his hearty Christian greeting of friends and acquaintances? He was a good man and the community will long hold him in kindly remembrance The influences which go out from a good man's life may be forgotten in time, but their beneficial effects will be felt long after the present generation has passed away to the other world.

Deceased was one of the most highly esteemed members of the Methodist church here. It will be extremely difficult to fill the vacancy caused by his death. He was assistant leader in the class of the venerable Wm. Rutledge, sr., a member of the official board, and a steward. In all of these important departments he discharged his duties promptly and faithfully. He attended divine service regularly, and his testimony in the class room was always cheerful and practical—indicating honesty of purpose underlying deep religious convictions. The last testimony he uttered in this world showed how strong his faith was in the Lord of light and life. He almost seemed impatient to pass away to the eternal habitations of the righteous—although his thoughts often lingered fondly and, perhaps, somewhat sorrowfully on his loving wife and dear little children whom he must leave behind.

The circumstances in connection with his death may be briefly given. Nearly two weeks prior to his decease he came to this village on business. While here he got wet and, before reaching home, he felt quite chilly. He sat down before the kitchen fire in his damp garments and fell into a doze. Afterwards he went to bed from which he never arose. The family physician, Dr. Christoe, did all that lay in his power but without avail. He sank rapidly and it soon became evident that the crisis was at hand. On Wednesday evening of last week Drs. Christoe and Hixon sat up with him until midnight. Thursday morning the news spread that he was improving, but the joy occasioned by tidings soon gave way to sadness and grief when word came that George was no more. The immediate cause of his death was inflamation of the lungs.

Sunday afternoon the remains were followed to the last resting place in the Flesherton cemetery, preceded by the Band which played such solemn and beautiful airs as "Dead March in Saul," "Shall we Gather at the River," &c. The funeral cortege was the largest we have seen since the burial of the late lamented Deputy Reeve of Collingwood Township, Wm. White. Service was held in the Methodist church, the pulpit of which was deeply draped in mourning. Rev. Mr. Ayers delivered a touching address to the vast congregation and paid a graceful tribute to the memory of deceased. Rev. A. Wilson addressed a few words of sympathy and encouragement, after which the remains were conveyed to the cemetery, where the last sad rites were performed with a solemnity befitting the occasion.

The funeral service was continued in the evening, when Rev. Mr. Ayers improved the occasion by preaching an impressive sermon.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

"LOST AND SAVED."

The Sacred Dramatic Cantata Scores A Big Success.

The Town Hall, Flesherton, was packed to the doors by a large and appreciative audience on Friday evening last. Dundalk, Markdale, Kimberley and Maxwell were well represented, Music-loving Flesherton was, of course, largely represented, and it is almost needless to add that the fine sacred cantata "Lost and Saved," was rendered in a manner equally creditable to Musical Director Prof. Morgan, Dramatic Manager Mr. Jas. G. Russell, and the various performers. The musical and Dramatic parts of the Cantata were well sustained from first to last. Great credit is due Miss Richardson, not only for the excellent manner in which she presided at the organ on Friday night, but also for her patience and perseverance during the various rehearsels and practices prior to the "eventful night." Following is the cast of characters:—

Miss Alice Leith.....Miss Ayers
Mrs. Howard Vane.....Miss Vandusen
Miss Betsy Sharp.....Miss Damude
Mrs. Leith.....Miss S. Wright
Kittie Gray.....Fairy Morgan

Faith Hope and Charity:

Miss Beecroft, Miss Gordon, Miss Leitch.

Women Crusaders:

Miss Vandusen, May Damude, Mamie Ayers, Lizzie Richardson.

Harry Gray.....J. G. Russell
Rev. Howard Vane.....John Anderson
Mr. Leith.....Wm. Irwin
Mr. Jinks.....A. R. Fawcett
Lawyer Smirk.....W. T. Thompson
Old Grim, the Landlord...W. Campbell

Saloon Boys:

Brown.....W. Petch
Jones.....J. Baskerville
Smith.....D. L. White
Parker.....A. M. Gibson

The cantata lasted about two hours and twenty minutes, and from commencement to finish the interest did not flag. Miss Damude, as "Betsy Sharpe," scored the principle hits of the evening. Her singing and acting was perfection itself—in short it was absolutely faultless. This may seem a sweeping assertion, but we believe those who were present will endorse every word we have said. Miss Ayers, in the difficult role of "Miss Alice Leith," never sang with greater effect. Her acting was true to the character she delineated with such faithfulness. Few amateurs could have sustained the part with such rare ability as did Miss Ayers. Miss Vandusen possesses a sweet voice, which musical culture has greatly improved during the past season, so that the fidelity with which she filled the role of "Mrs. Howard Vane" was not more than the delighted audience expected. Miss Sarah Wright made a graceful and natural "Mrs. Leith," and the same can well be said of Mr. Wm. Irwin as "Mr. Leith." Miss Fairy Morgan as "Kittie Gray" was of course an immense success. To us at anyrate Miss Fairy is more of a "child wonder" than she was the first night we heard her. The power, sweetness, and remarkable compass of her voice, together with her clear and distinct pronunciation, is truly marvellous. Miss Beecroft, Miss Gordon, and Miss Leitch were dressed in exact accordance with pictorial representations of "Faith, Hope and Charity," respectively. Their singing was good. The "Women Crusaders," Miss Vandusen, May Damude, Mamie Ayers and Lizzie Richardson, gave a correct rendering and dressed in perfect taste. Mr. John Anderson made a dignified and commanding "Rev. Howard Vane." Mr. Jas. G. Russell is always a success, and surely if "success is the reward of diligence" he deserves to succeed. He had a difficult part in "Harry Gray," but he came forth from the trying ordeal with flying colors and fresh laurels. "Lawyer Smirk" was faithfully delineated by Mr. W. T. Thompson, and Mr. W. Campbell, as "Old Grim," was equally natural. The "Saloon Boys," Messrs. Petch, Baskerville, D. L. White, and Gibson, added most materially to the interest which centred in the dramatic situations of the cantata. A. R. Fawcett acted the part of bashful "Mr. Jinks." The Flesherton Brass Band made decided hits it always does. "God save the Queen closed the evening's entertainment at a seasonable hour.

The Miller and the Maid.

Across the heath and down the hill,
  Aback of patient Dobbin,
The farmer's daughter rides to mill,
  And mocks the thrush and robin

For saddle she's a sack of grain,
  She sidewise sits and chirrups
A finger in old Dobbin's mane
  Is good as forty stirrups

The miller comes a merry blade!
  And doffs his hat and greets her—
"What wish you here, my pretty maid?"
  "I've brought a sack of wheat, sir"

"And have you gold to give for grist?"
  "Not I, we're poor, alack, sir,
But take your toll a tenth, I wist
  From what is in my sack, sir"

He lifts her lightly from her seat,
  And laughs a merry miller!
"I cannot take my toll in wheat,
  I must have gold or silver.

"But since you've brought no coin nor script,"
  He smiles and fondly eyes her—
"I'll ask no toll but from your lip—
  A kiss—who'll be the wiser!"

The maiden blushed and bowed her head
  And with her apron fingered,
And pouted out her lips of red,
  Where countless kisses lingered

"A single kiss?" (She smiled in glee,
  As one would say, I've caught you.)
My father said your toll would be
  A tenth of what I brought you."

The mill stream shouted to the sands
  "He kissed the farmer's daughter;"
But the grim old wheel stretched out its hands
  And spanked the saucy water

In the Lane.

And art thou then, my heart, too old
  Ever to leap with love again,
To feel the strong blood-torrent rolled
  Through heaving breast and teeming brain?
Is it no more, my heart, for thee
Life's one unquestioned ecstasy?

Are faded quite those dim, far days
  When music mothered every sound,
When up and down youth's happy ways
  Fared glories on eternal round?
Has chill of years killed every joy
That blossomed for the wandering boy?

These are the trees once known so well
  We felt to them all but be-known,
Their very shadow we could tell
  From others by the forest thrown
The same glad songs from bush and bough
As once we heard, we hear them now.

And these sweet flowers beneath my feet,
  Their young eyes greet us as of yore
The hope, there! Still they think to meet
  Her glance that shall not answer more.
To us alone it cannot be
They're looking up so tenderly.

This is the same gray path we took
  Behind the slowly going day;
As they do now, the light leaves shook
  When evening breezes blew this way
And there's the glow upon the dome
And here the cows are coming home

Ah, no, good heart, thou still canst stir
  Still lives the love first bid thee leap
Still are we at the side of her
  They laid away 'neath yonder steep
Though clods be on her and a stone,
In the dear old lane we're not alone

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"Then follows the reply dated Maritzburg, 2nd February."

"'Sir:

"'1. I have to direct you to convey to Lieutenant and Adjutant Kershaw, and the surviving members of the corps known as Alston's Horse, the high sense entertained by the Officer, etc., of the gallant conduct of that corps in the face of overwhelming odds at Isandhlwana on the 22nd of January.

"'2. It is with deep regret that the Officer, etc., learns of the heavy misfortune which has befallen Lieutenant Kershaw. He wishes to express his appreciation of the way in which that officer handled the remnants of his corps, and to inform him that his name will be forwarded to the proper quarter for the expression of Her Majesty's pleasure with regard to his services

"'3. I am directed to offer you a commission in any of the volunteer corps now on service in the campaign

'I have, etc.,

(Signed) "'CHIEF OF THE STAFF

Then comes a letter from Sergeant Major Jones, gratefully acknowledging the expression of the high opinion of the Officer, etc., and declining the offer of a commission in another volunteer corps.

Next is a private letter from the Officer, etc., offering to recommend Sergeant-Major Jones for a commission in the army.

And, finally, a letter from Sergeant Major Jones to Officer, etc., gratefully declining the same

Ernest looked up sharply. The raison d'entre of the movement was gone, for he could no longer see, but the habit remained

"Why did you decline the commission, Jeremy?"

Jeremy moved uneasily, and looked through the little cabin window.

"On general principles," he answered presently.

"Nonsense! I know you would have liked to go into the army. Don't you remember, as we were riding up to the camp at Isandhlwana, you said you proposed that if the corps did anything, we should try and work it?"

"Yes."

"Well?"

"Well, I said we!"

"I don't quite follow you, Jeremy."

"My dear Ernest, you can't go in for a commission now, can you?"

Ernest laughed a little bitterly.

"What has that to do with it?"

"Everything. I am not going to leave you in your misfortune to go and enjoy myself in the army. I could not do it; I should be wretched if I did. No, old fellow, we have gone through a good many things side by side, and, please God, we will stick to each other to the end of the chapter

Ernest was always easily touched by kindness, especially now that his nerves were shaken, and his heart softened by misfortune, and his eyes filled with tears at Jeremy's words. Putting out his hand, he felt about for Jeremy's, and, when he had found it, grasped it warmly.

"If I have troubles, Jeremy, at least I have a blessing that few can boast—a true friend. If you had gone with the rest at Isandhlwana yonder, I think that my heart would have broken. I think we do bear one another a love that 'passeth the love of a woman.' It would not be worth much if it didn't, and that is one thing. I wonder if Absalom was a finer fellow than you are, Jeremy; from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him. Your hair would not weigh 'two hundred shekels after the king's weight' though" (Jeremy wore his hair cropped like a convicts); "but I would back you to throw Absalom over your shoulder hair and all."

It was his fashion to talk nonsense when affected by anything, and Jeremy knowing it, said nothing.

Just then there came a knock at the door, and who should enter but Mazook, but Mazook transformed? His massive frame, instead of being clothed in the loose white garments he generally wore, was arrayed in a flannel shirt with an enormous stuck-up collar, a suit of pepper-and-salt reach-me-downs several sizes too small for him, and a pair of boots considerably too large for his small and shapely feet, for, like those of most Zulus of good blood, his hands and feet were extremely delicately made.

To add to the incongruity of his appearance, on the top of his hair, which was still done in ridges Zulu fashion, and decorated with long bone snuff-spoons, was perched an extremely small and rakish-looking billycock hat, and in his hand he carried his favorite and most gigantic knobstick.

On opening the cabin-door he saluted in the ordinary fashion, and coming in squatted down on his haunches to await orders, forgetting that he was not in all the freedom of his native dress. The results were most disastrous. With a crack and a bang the reach-me-down trousers, already strained to their utmost capacity, split right up the back. The astonished Zulu flew up into the air, but presently discovering what had happened, sat down again, remarking that there was "much more room now."

Jeremy burst out laughing, and having sketched his retainer's appearance for the benefit of Ernest, told him what had happened.

"Where did you get these things from, Mazook?" asked Ernest.

Mazook explained that he had bought the rig-out for three pounds ten from a second-class passenger as the weather was growing cold.

"Do not wear them again. I will buy you clothes as soon as we get to England. If you are cold wear your great-coat."

"Koos!" (chief.)

"How is 'The Devil?'" Ernest had brought the black stallion on which he had escaped from Isandhlwana home with him.

Mazook replied that the horse was well, but playful. A man forward had been teasing him with a bit of bread. He had waited till that man passed under his box, and had seized him in his teeth, lifted him off the ground by his coat, and shaken him severely

"Good! Give him a bran mash to-night."

"Koos!"

"And so you find the air cold. Are you not regretting that you came? I warned you that you would regret."

"Ou ka Inkoos" (oh, no, my chief), the Zulu answered in his liquid native tongue. "When first we come upon the smoking ship, and went out on to the black water out of which the white men rise, and my bowels twisted up and melted within me, and I went through the agonies of a hundred deaths, then I regretted. 'Oh, why,' I said in my heart, 'did not my father kill me rather than bring me on to this great moving river? Surely if I live I shall grow like a white man from the whiteness of my heart, for I am exceedingly afraid, and have cast all my inside forth.' All this I said, and many more things which I can not remember, but they were dark and heavy things. But behold, my father, when my bowels ceased to melt, and when new ones had grown to replace those which I had thrown forth, I was glad, and did eat much beef, and then did I question my heart about this journey over the black water. And my heart answered and said: 'Mazooku, son of Ingoluvu, of the tribe of the Maquilisini, of the people of the Amazulu, you have done well. Great is the chief whom you serve; great is he on the hunting path; great was he in the battle; all the Undi could not kill him, and his brother the lion (Jeremy), and his servant the jackal (Mazooku), who hid in a hole and then bit those who digged. Oh, yes, he is great and his breast is full of valor; you have seen him strike the Undi down; and his mind is full of the white man's knowledge and discretion; you have seen him form the ring that spat out fire so fast that his servants the horsemen were buried under the corpses of the Undi. So great is he, that the "heaven above" smelled him out as "tagati" (a wizard) and struck him with their lightning, but could not kill him then. And so now, my father wanders and shall wander in the darkness, seeing not the sun or the stars, or the flashing of spears, or the light that gathers in the eyes of brave men as they close in battle, or the love which gleams in the eyes of women. And how is this? Shall my father want a dog to lead him in his darkness? Shall his dog Mazooku, son of Ingoluv, prove a faithless dog, and desert the hand that fed him, and the man who is braver than himself? No, it shall not be so, my chief, and my father. By the head of Chaka, whither thou goest thither will I go also, and where you build your kraal there shall I make my hut. Koos! Baba!"

And having saluted after the dignified Zulu fashion, Mazook departed to tie up his split trousers with a bit of string. There was something utterly incongruous between his present appearance and his melodious and poetical words, instinct as they were with qualities which in some respects make the savage Zulu a gentleman, and put him above the white Christian, who for the most part regards the "nigger" as a creature beneath contempt. For there are lessons to be learned even from Zulu "niggers," and among them we may reckon those taught by a courage which laughs at death; an absolute fidelity to those who have the right to command it, or the qualities necessary to win it; and in their raw and unconverted state, perfect honesty and truthfulness,

"He is a good fellow, Mazook," said Ernest when the Zulu had gone, "but I fear that one of two things will happen to him. Either he will get homesick and become a nuisance, or he will get civilized and become drunken and degraded. I should have done better to leave him in Natal."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

ERNEST'S EVIL DESTINY.

About nine o'clock on the morning following Mazooku's oration a young lady came running up the stairs of the principal Plymouth hotel, and burst into a private sitting-room, like a human bomb-shell of attractive appearance, somewhat to the astonishment of a bald old gentleman who was sitting at breakfast.

"Good gracious, Dorothy! have you gone suddenly mad?"

"O Reginald, the Conway Castle is nearly in, and I have been to the office and got leave for us to go off in the launch; so come along, quick!"

"What time does the launch leave?"

"A quarter to ten exactly."

"Then we have three quarters of an hour."

"Oh, please, Reginald, be quick; it might go before you know."

Mr. Cardus smiled, and, rising, put on his hat and coat, "to oblige" Dorothy, he said, but, as a matter of fact, he was as excited as she was. There was a patch of red on each of his pale cheeks, and his hand shook.

In a quarter of an hour they were walking up and down the quay by the Custom-House, waiting for the launch to start.

"After all these years," said Mr. Cardus, "and blind!"

"Do you think that he will be very much disfigured, Reginald?"

"I don't know, dear; your brother said nothing about it,"

"I can hardly believe it; it seems so strange to think that he and Jeremy should have been spared out of all those people. How good God is!"

"A cynic," replied Mr. Cardus with a smile, "or the relations of the other people might draw a different conclusion."

But Dorothy was thinking how good God was to her. She was dressed in pink that morning, and

"Oh, she looked sweet
As the little pink dover that grows in the wheat."

Dorothy neither was, nor ever would be, a pretty woman, but she was essentially a charming one. Her kindly, puzzled face (and, to judge from the little wrinkles on it, she had never got to the botton of the questions which contracted her forehead as a child), her steady blue eyes, her diminutive, rounded form, and, above all, the indescribable light of goodness which shone around her like a halo, all made her charming. What did it matter if the mouth was a little wide, or the nose somewhat "tiptilted?" Those who can look so sweet are able to dispense with such fleshly attributes as a Grecian nose or chiseled lips. At the least, they will have the best of it after youth is past; and let me remind you, my young and lovely reader, that the longer and dustier portion of life's road winds away toward the pale horizon of our path on the farther side of the grim mile-post marked "30."

But what made her chiefly attractive was her piquante, taking manner, and the "chic" of her presence. She was such a perfect lady.

"All aboard, if you please," broke in the agent. "Run in the gang-way!" and they were off toward the great gray vessel with a blue pennant at her top.

It was a short run, but it seemed long to Dorothy and the old gentleman with her. Bigger and bigger grew the great vessel, till at last it seemed to swallow up their tiny steamer.

"Ease her! Look out for the line there! Now haul away! Make fast!"

It was all done in an instant, and next moment they stood upon the broad white deck, amid the crowd of passengers, and were looking round for Ernest and Jeremy.

But they were not to be seen.

"I hope they are here," faltered Dorothy.

Mr. Cardus took his hat off and wiped his bald head. He too hoped that they were there.

At that moment Dorothy became aware of a great black man, clad in a white smock pulled on over a great-coat, and carrying a big spear and a kerrie in his hand, who was pushing his way toward them. Next moment he stood before them saluting vigorously.

"Koos!" he said, thrusting the spear into the air before Mr. Cardus' astonished nose.

"Inkosi Casa" (chieftainess), he repeated, going through the same process before Dorothy. "This way, master; this way, missie. The chief without eyes sent me to you. This way; the lion bring him now."

They followed him through the press toward the after part of the ship, while, giving up the unfamiliar language, he vociferated in Zulu (it might have been Sanskrit for all they knew.)

"Make way, you low people! make way for the old man with the shining head on whose brow sits wisdom, and the fair young maiden, the sweet rose-bud, who comes," etc

At that moment Dorothy's quick eye saw a great man issuing from a cabin, leading another man by the hand. And then she forgot everything, and ran forward.

"O Ernest, Ernest!" she cried.

The blind man's cheek flushed at the music of her voice. He drew his hand from Jeremy's, and stretched out his arms toward the voice. It would have been easy to avoid them—one need never be kissed by a blind man—but she did not avoid them. On the contrary, she placed herself so that the groping arms closed around her with a cry of, "Dolly, where are you?"

"Here, Ernest, here!" and in another moment he had drawn her to him, and kissed her on the face, and she had returned the kiss. Oh, fie! Dorothy, fie!

Then she kissed Jeremy too, or rather Jeremy lifted her up two or three feet and kissed her—it came to the same thing. And then Mr. Cardus rung them both by the hand, wringing Ernest's the hardest, and Mazook stood by, and Zulu-fashion, chanted a little song of his own improvising, about how the chiefs came back to their kraal after a long expedition, in which they had, etc.—and how Wisdom in the shape of a shining-headed and ancient one, the husband without any doubt of many wives, and the father of at least a hundred children, etc.—and Beauty in the shape of a sweet and small one, etc., etc.; and finally they all went very near to crying, and dancing a fling on the quarter-deck together.

And then they all talked at once, and set about collecting their things in a muddle-headed fashion, and when these had been put in a pile, and Mazook seated, assegai and all, upon the top of them as a solemn warning to thieves (and ill would it have gone with the thief who dared to meddle with that pile), started off to inspect Ernest's great black horse, "The Devil."

And behold, Dorothy stroked "The Devil's" nose, and he, recognizing how sweet and good she was, abandoned his usual habits, did not bite her, but only whinied and asked for sugar. Then Ernest, going into the box with the horse, which nobody but he and Mazook were fond of taking liberties, felt down his flank till he came to a scar inflicted by an assegai, in that mad charge through the Undi, and showed it to them. And Dorothy's eyes filled with tears of thankfulness, as she thought of what the horse and its rider had gone through, and of the bleaching bones of those who had galloped by their side; and she would have liked to kiss Ernest again, only there was no excuse, so she only pressed his hand, feeling that the sorrow of the empty years which were gone was almost atoned for by this hour of joy.

Then they went ashore to the hotel, and sat together in the pleasant sitting-room which Dorothy had choson, and made sweet with great bunches of violets (for she remembered that Ernest loved violets), and talked. At length Mr. Cardus and Jeremy went off to see about getting the things through the Custom-House, where they arrived to see Mazook keeping half a dozen gorgeous officials, who wanted to open a box, at bay with his knobsticks, and plastering them with offensive epithets which fortunately they did not understand.

"Doll," said Ernest, presently, "it is a beautiful day, is it not? Will you take me for a walk, dear? I should like to go for a walk."

"Yes, Ernest, of course I will."

"You are sure you do not mind being seen with a blind man; you must give me your hand to hold, you know."

"Ernest, how can you?"

Mind giving him her hand to hold indeed! thought Dorothy to herself, as she ran to put her bonnet on. Oh, that she could give it to him for always! And in her heart she blessed the accident of his blindness, because it had brought him so much nearer to her. He would be helpless without her, this tall, strong man, and she would be ever at his side to help him. He would not be able to read a book, or write a letter, or move from room to room without her. Surely she would soon be able so to weave herself into his life, that she would become indispensable to it! And then, perhaps—perhaps—and her heart pulsed with a joy so intense at the mere thought of what might follow, that it became a pain, and she caught her breath and leaned against the wall. For every fibre of her little frame was thrilled with a passionate love for this blind man whom she had lost for so many years, and now had found again; and in her breast she vowed that if she could help it she would lose him no more. Why should she? When he had been engaged to Eva, she had done her best for him and her, and bitterly had she felt the way in which he had been treated. But Eva had taken her own course, and was now no longer in the outward and visible running, whatever place she might still hold in the inward and spiritual side of Ernest's nature. Dorothy did not underrate that place; she knew well that the image of her rival had sunk too deep into his heart to be altogether dislodged by her. But she was prepared to put up with that. "One can't have everything you know," she said, shaking her wise little head at her own reflection in the glass, as she tied her bonnet-strings.

She was an eminently practical little person was Dorothy, and having recognized the "eternal verity" of the saying that half a loaf is better than no bread, especially if one happens to be dying of hunger, she made up her mind to make the best of the position. Since she could not help it, Eva would be welcome to the inward and spiritual side of Ernest, if only she could secure the outward and visible side; "for, after all, that is real and tangible, and there isn't much comfort in spiritual affection, you know," she said with another shake of the head.

In short, the arguments which proved so convincing to her were not unlike those that carried conviction home to the gentle breast of Mr. Plowden, when he made up his mind to marry Eva in the teeth of her engagement to, and love for, Ernest; but, putting aside the diversity of the circumstances, there was this difference between them: Mr. Plowden recognized no higher spiritual part at all; he did not believe in that sort of things; he contracted for Eva as he would have contracted to buy a lovely animal, and when he had gotten the given quantity of flesh and blood he was satisfied. Of the beautiful soul which the human casket held, and which loathed and hated him, he had no account. He had got the woman, what did he care about the woman's soul? Souls, and spiritual parts, and affinities with what is good and high, and the divinity of love, etc., etc., were capital things to preach about, but they did not apply to the affairs of every-day life. Besides, if he had been asked, he would have given it as his candid opinion that women did not possess any of these things.

There are hundreds of educated men who think like Mr. Plowden, and there are thousands of educated ladies who give color to such opinions by their idle, aimless course of life, their utter inappreciation of anything beyond their own little daily round, and the gossip of the dozen or so of families who for them make up what they call society and the interests of existence; and by their conduct in the matter of marriage. Truly the great factor in the lowering of women is woman herself. But what does it matter? In due course they have their families, and the world goes on!

Now Dorothy did believe in all these things, and she knew what an important part they play in human affairs, and how they dominate over and direct finer minds. So did she believe in the existence of the planets, and in the blooming of roses in walled gardens; but she could not get near to know the beauties of the stars, or to see the opening rose-buds, so she had to satisfy herself with the light that poured from the one, and the scent that came from the other. When one is star-stricken, or mad in the matter of roses, that is better than nothing.

And so, taking Ernest by the hand, she led him through the crowded streets with tender care, and on to the quiet Hoe. And as they passed, the people turned to look at the handsome young fellow who was blind, and some thought that they would not mind a little blindness if it led to being personally conducted by so sweet a girl.

Soon they reached the gardens.

"Now tell me about yourself, Ernest. What have you been doing all these long years, besides growing bigger and handsomer, and getting that hard look about the mouth?"

"A great many things, Doll. Shooting, fighting, playing the fool."

"Pshaw! I know all that, or at least I can guess it. What have you been doing in your mind, you know?"

"Why, thinking of you, of course, Doll."

"Ernest, if you talk to me like that, I will go away, and leave you to find your own way home. I know well of whom you have been thinking every day and every night. It was not of me. Now, confess it."

"Don't let's talk of her, Doll. If you talk of the devil, you know, you sometimes raise him; not that he requires much raising in this instance," he laughed, bitterly.

"I was so sorry for you, Ernest dear, and I did my best; indeed I did. But I could do nothing with her. She must have been off her head, or the man and Florence had some power over her; or perhaps she never really cared for you; there are some women, you know, who seem very sweet, but cannot truly care for anybody except themselves. At any rate she married, and has a family of children, for I have seen their births in the paper.

"O Ernest, when I think of all you must have suffered out there about that woman, I cease to be sorry for her, and begin to hate her. I am afraid you have been very unhappy, Ernest, all these years."

"Ah, yes, I have been unhappy sometimes—sometimes I have consoled myself. There, what is the use of telling lies?—I have always been unhappy, and never so much so as when I have been in process of consolation. But you should not hate her, poor girl; perhaps she has her bad times too; only, fortunately, you women cannot feel, at least not much—not like us, I mean."

"I don't know about that," put in Dorothy.

"Well, I will qualify my remark—most women. And, besides, it is not quite her fault; people can not help themselves much in this world. She was appointed to be my evil destiny, that is all, and she must fulfil her mission. All my life she will probably bring me trouble, till at last the fate works itself out. But, Dolly, my dear, there must be an end to these things, and Nature, always fertile in analogies, teaches us that the end of sorrow will be happiness. It is from the darkness of night that day is born, and ice and snow are followed by the flowers. Nothing is lost in the world, as old Alston used to say, and it is impossible to suppose that all the grief and suffering are alone wasted; that they are the only dull seed that will not, when their day comes, bloom into a beautiful life. They may seem to be intangible things now; but after all, the difference between tangible and intangible is only a difference of matter. We know that intangible things are real enough, and perhaps in a future state we shall find that they are the true immortal parts. I think so myself."

"I think so too."

"Well, then, Doll, you see, if once one gets the mastery of that idea, it makes the navigation easier. Once admit that everything works to an end, and that end a good and enduring one, and you will cease to call out under your present sorrows. But it is hard for the little boy to learn to like being whipped, and we are all children, Doll, to the end of our days."

"Yes."

"And you see, Doll, for some reason I have been picked out to catch it pretty warm. It does seem rather hard that a woman like that should be allowed to turn all the wine of a man's life into vinegar, but so it often is. Now, if she had died, that would have been bad enough; but I could have borne it, and bided my time to join her. Or if she had ceased to love me and learned to love the other man I think I could have borne that, because my pride would have come to my rescue, and because I know that the law of her affections is the only law that the heart of woman really acknowledges, however many others she may be forced to conform to, and that a woman of refined nature who has ceased to love you, and is yet forced to live with you, is in consequence a thing worthless to you, and dishonored in her own eyes. Besides, I ask no favor in such matters. I have no sympathy, as a general rule, with people who raise a howl because they have lost the affection of their wives or sweethearts, for they should have been able to keep them. If any man could have cut me out, he was welcome to do so, for he would have proved himself the better man, and, as for the lady, I would not have her without her heart. But I gather that was not quite the case with Eva."

"Oh, no indeed; at least she said that she was wretched."

"Exactly as I thought. Well, now, you will understand that it is rather hard. You see I did love her dearly, and it is painful to think of this woman, whose love I won, and who by that divine right and by the law of nature should have been my wife, as forced into being the wife of another man, however charming he may be; and I hope for her sake that he is charming. In fact, it fills me with a sensation I can not describe."

"Poor Ernest!"

"Behold How Good a Thing It Is," etc

The oldest Protestant church in Canada is St. Paul's, Halifax; the next oldest is the Mohawk Church, near Brantford, and the next is St. Gabriel's Presbyterian Church, Montreal. Of the last-mentioned church, now a venerable edifice, but a very insignificant one compared with the modern churches of the commercial metropolis, Rev. Robert Campbell is writing the history. There are many interesting points connected with the old building, but one that stands out prominently is the fact that the congregation enjoyed in early times unusually friendly relations with other religious bodies. When an Episcopal church was burned the Episcopalians worshipped in this Presbyterian church, and when the Presbyterian church was undergoing repairs the neighboring Roman Catholic priest lent the congregation a Roman Catholic building to worship in.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

Taking Care of the Complexion in Cold Weather.

HOUSEHOLD AND OTHER HINTS.

Preserving the Complexion.

Cold weather is the ruination of complexion, and there is absolutely no way of preserving a good one or improving a skin of negative charm if much washing is persisted in. It may shock the neat to say it, but the ladies who know how to treat their faces do not apply water to it more than once a day, nor allow soap to touch it oftener than once a week. An ablution is made in the morning, and that ends the matter. Just the temperature of the water depends entirely on the nature and texture of the skin, and each bather is the best judge of the matter. Some complexions would be ruined with hot water; others require a tepid sponging, and there are still other faces that glow and thrive under a regular dash of cold water.

Pretty Miss Gertrude Griswold, of McCall's Opera Company, souses her face before and after rising with water as hot as she can bear it, following the boil with a dressing of rosewater and glycerine. This harmless wash is dried up with fine rice powder rubbed on with a fine cambric handkerchief. The face is kept clean by wiping off the dust or soil and applying powder when necessary. Speaking about powder, Miss Griswold said: "My only amusements are powdering and rocking," and she has a complexion that is as fresh and smooth as a baby's.

The leading lady in Barrett's company, Miss Eastlake, allows very little familiarity between her face and water, arguing that the skin is too delicate to endure through much washing. She knows the way the grain runs, and all rubbing is with it.

Miss Ellen Terry is one of the daily face-washers, but consumes rose-water and glycerine by the quart, and confesses that she literally breathes through the fumes of English breakfast tea and clouds of rice powder.

Emma Abbott has a beautifully white skin, which she keeps so by bathing in strong glycerine, an unusual habit, as the oil is generally irritating to the face.

Ladies who visit Paris for the purpose of studying fashionable life invariably return addicted to the use of cream of cucumber, which prevails among the fair sex of that city. There are as many creams and ointments for keeping the skin smooth and healthy as there are manufacturers, and, though all may not be valuable, any one is good that can be depended on to ward off chapping and dry skin.

After summing up the cost, vexation and risk of novel preparations, pure glycerine diluted with half the quantity of water is at least a reliable remedy against redness and eruption. If the skin shows a tendency to darken weaken the oil, but don't hope to weather a Chicago winter with a face wash of cold water and soap. One washing a day is enough for any beardless face, and in justice to the owner it should not precede exposure to the outer air.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Bangs.

Daisy Dean writes: I wonder why it is that every one—the newspapers in particular—should be so "down" upon bangs? I have waited in silent indignation for some of my sister women to speak up in defence of the style, but, though they have clung to it tenaciously—and with good reason—none has dared to lift up her voice against public (masculine) opinion. Now, I declare the fashion was both sensible and becoming, though, of course, like all other good things, capable of being carried to an extreme. A young and pretty girl was positively bewitching with her fluffy or straight hair shading her smooth brow; while to women not as young as they would like to be, it was a perfect boon to have the softening effect of the drooping hair, and the lines of the forehead so prettily hidden. It must needs be a young and pretty face that looks well with the hair combed smoothly back, while to the majority of women the Pompadour style gives an unpleasantly bold look. Besides, I can't for the life of me see why women should not be allowed to comb their hair as they please without such a fuss being made over it. When men took a notion to have their heads shaved as bald as a baby's, and displaying every bump, as if they had just come from a phrenologist's, we all knew it was ugly, yet you did not hear us ranting about it in the newspapers, or denying them religious privileges on that account. I suppose it doesn't matter so much about men's looks, only one likes fair play, especially in a free country.

Household Hints.

Cranberry jelly mixed with cold water makes a refreshing drink for the sick.

Silver should be washed with a chamois skin, saturated with silver soap, each time after use, thus avoiding a general cleaning.

Windows should never be washed while the sun shines upon them, as it is impossible to polish them without leaving blue streaks.

Preserving jars should be stood on their heads for at least an hour after sealing, when the liquor will escape if the jar contains air.

In ventilating a room open the windows at top and bottom. The fresh air rushes in one way while the foul air makes its exit the other; thus you let in a friend and expel an enemy.

Lace may be washed by winding it around bottles or sewing it on muslin and boiling it in soft water with white castile soap. It should be rinsed in soft water after removing it from the suds.

A damp cloth enveloping the broom head will be found desirable in removing the dust from a carpet in a room where there may be many small articles to catch the dirt raised by an ordinary sweeping.

To clean kid gloves rub them with very slightly dampened crumbs of bread. Or scrape French chalk upon them while on the hands and wash them in a basin containing diluted spirits of ammonia. Some gloves can be cleaned with milk, with rice pulp or with turpentine.

If the feet are tender or painful after long walking or standing, great relief can had by bathing them in salt and water. A handful of salt to a gallon of water is the right proportion. Have the water as hot as can comfortably be borne. Immerse the feet and throw the water over the legs as far as the knees with the hands. When the water becomes too cool, rub briskly with a fresh towel. This method, if used night and morning, will cure neuralgia of the feet.

To prevent the juice of pies soaking into the under crust, beat the white of an egg and brush the crust with it. If the oven is too hot when baking, place a small dish of cold water in it. Well-ventilated bedrooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude. Powdered rice, sprinkled upon lint and applied to fresh wounds, will stop bleeding. A tallow candle or piece of tallow wrapped in tissue paper and laid among furs or other garments will prevent the ravages of moths.

Soda will clean tarnished tin. Vinegar and salt will clean copper. Butter is the best polish to put into starch. Baking soda put on a burn will take out the heat. A heated knife will cut hot bread without making it soggy. Oil of cedar is sure death to vermin which infest chambers. Toilet sets and all chamber articles should be cleaned in cold water. White lead will cement broken crockery, a 10 cent bottle lasting for years. A small paint brush should be used in cracks and crevices while dusting a room.

A simple way of loosening a rusted screw is to apply heat to the head of it. When the burners of lamps become clogged with char, boil them in strong soapsuds. By using soda water as a wash you can clean ceilings that have been smoked by a kerosene lamp. If you drop soot on the carpet cover thick with salt, and it may be swept up without blackening the carpet. A few oyster shells mixed with the coal used for a furnace or large stove will prevent the accumulation of clinkers. To clean brass bird-cages use a tablespoonful of salt and a teacupful of vinegar, heat, and apply with a piece of flannel and rub till dry.

Bent whalebones can be restored and used again by simply soaking in water a few hours, then drying them. To restore crushed velvet hold it over the spout of the teakettle and let it steam well, then comb up the nap. Brooms dipped for a few minutes in boiling suds once a week will last much longer than they otherwise would. Kid shoes may be kept soft and free from cracks by rubbing them once a week with a little pure glycerine or castor oil. A piece of zinc placed on the coals of a hot stove will clean out the stove-pipe. The vapor produced carries off the soot by chemical decomposition.

Spiders and Telegraphers.

Spiders are one of the great obstacles to telegraphers in Japan. Filling the trees along the lines, these insects spin their webs between the earth, the wires, the post, the insulators and the trees. When these webs become wet with dew they constitute a good conductor, and the lines are found to be in connection with the earth. The only method of obviating this inconvenience is by employing brooms of bamboo to brush away the webs.—Good Cheer.

Little Felippe Meldonado, a seven-year-old Spanish boy of Los Angeles, while playing about the yard with his father's horse, tied the end of the halter around his own ankle. Then he and the horse trotted around until a jerk by the horse threw the boy under his heels and frightened him so that he set off on a run through the open gate, dragging his little play-fellow after him. He ran two miles without stopping, and little Felippe was alive then, but unconscious. He died soon after.

CURE AND CARE OF BURNS.

Advice to Those Who Have Suffered From Fire—Preservation of the Skin.

In all burns great care should be taken to save the cuticle—the raised portion of the skin that forms the blister. Clothing, etc., should be removed with the utmost gentleness. Blisters should be carefully punctured with a clean needle. The best way to be sure that a needle is clean when required for such service is to heat it red hot, allow it to cool, and then use it. It will thus be freed from any organisms, for in such a place as a burn germs will thrive abundantly and prove most detrimental, so that the utmost care is necessary. Then the raised cuticle should be pressed down to the true skin, and covered with a large quantity of clean cotton wool to prevent the access of air, as free exposure tends to increase shock and pain. Equal parts of lime water and linseed oil applied on lint and covered with cotton wool is a favorite remedy, known under the name of carron-oil, or the blister may be covered with wheaten flour. Lately powdered clay has been employed, but for the first few days it is best to wrap the part in cotton wool, sufficient oil being employed to prevent its sticking. The dressings once put on must not be removed for some days—not, indeed, until they have been lossened by the discharge or become offensive. The constant removal of dressings is disturbing, painful and consequently injurious, and to obviate any necessity for it carbolic oil, as a disinfectant, is used in the proportion of one to ten or more. Small burns or scalds may be treated by water dressing, lead lotion, chalk and water, collodion or Friar's balsam. Two parts of collodion to one of castor oil is an excellent application. The patient should be kept in a warm atmosphere, well covered up, and some wine or brandy and hot water may be administered.—The Family Doctor.

Wifely Pride.

We had called, Jennie and I, on a bright young bride, and very bright she was, with sparkling eyes and laughing lips, and a pretty, girlish way with her, half timid, half defiant, a mixture of girlishness and self-will that always looks pretty—when you don't see too much of it; then it becomes monotonous. Her husband was not in. We inquired for him, of course, and she answered, with a pretty toss of the head:

"He's at that horrid office. I hate it."

When we came away I said, "What a pretty bride Cousin Harry has!"

"But I'm sorry for him," said Jennie.

"Sorry!" said I, in surprise.

"Yes," said Jennie: "I am sorry for any man whose wife has no pride in her husband's business. Sorry for any man whose wife, by her undisguised contempt for what ought to be her husband's pride and ambition, does what she can to make it a drudgery for him. If she looks at his office or his store or his factory as a 'horrid' place, useful only to make money in, what must be the result? Either his joy in it will be quenched, or he will come to look on her with that pity which is dangerously akin to contempt. If, on the other hand, she has a wifely pride in his lawyer, his trade, or his theology, or his practice, whatever it may be, he will catch inspiration from her high thoughts about it, and his law will become to him an instrument of justice, and his trade a means of doing good to humanity, and his theology a spiritual experience; for she will illumine and elevate everything by her womanly aspiration."

"And what," said I, "if it be a business that a woman cannot have a pride in?"

"Then," said Jennie, "the sooner he leaves it the better; for no man ought to do what a true wife ought to be ashamed to have him do."

And I rather think Jennie is right. She generally is.—Spectator, in Christian Union.

A Sun That Winks.

Dr. Gould has recently discovered a new winking sun, resembling in the rapidity of its changes the famous Algol, which the Arabs regarded as a sort of demon in the sky. The theory most in vogue to account for the variations of the light of these unsteady stars is that an enormous planet, or rather an extinct sun, is whirling at close quarters around them, and partially eclipsing them when it comes between them and us.—New York Sun.

THE LOVE OF TOBACCO.

Remembering Life in Libby Prison Prompts a Veteran to Tell a Very Queer War Story.

"Tobacco! It's a blessing to mankind," said the old veteran, as he hitched a little nearer the sawdust box. "It cheers the sad; it consoles the weary and heavy-laden; it comforts the despondent; it lends hope to the hopeless; it makes the present enjoyable and the future rosy; it exhilarates the rich and makes the poor content. Yes, and occasionally it saves a life. Did I ever tell you of the time it saved mine? No? How did I overlook that reminiscence, I wonder? Well, it starts off a good deal like an antique chestnut, for it happened when I was in Libby prison. Don't run away! I'm not going to tell you how such and such a battle was won or how another could have been won, like the magazines are doing. My story is about tobacco. I was a prisoner, and was lolling in luxury as all the boys were at Libby. I wasn't having such a terrible time of it, though, for I had two big plugs of black tobacco, and I had a chum who didn't chew. You see there's such a thing as luck even in Libby Prison. My chum was the nicest fellow I ever knew. We were captured from the same company and had kept together by good luck. He didn't have fun at all, though in prison. He was the most temperate man in the company—neither smoked, chewed, drank nor cussed. He was a model. Still he was a prisoner just like any common every-day chap, and it was about an even thing for a good while as to our living through our imprisonment or dying there, as scores of the boys were doing right along.

"One day the news got abroad among the fellows that the Union forces were pushing on toward Richmond, and they were about to shout for joy when another rumor swept through the prison that the rebs were about to ship a lot of us to Salisbury for safe-keeping. A death-chill seemed to seize everybody, for all the boys knew that if they once got to Salisbury there would be no chance for them. It was bad enough in Libby, but all reports pronounced Salisbury infinitely more horrible. I didn't care about jumping out of the frying-pan unless I knew I could escape the fire, so I thought I would fix up a scheme to stay right there. I called my chum and told him that our only chance of living was in staying where we were. 'Now,' says I, 'if we can get sick enough to get into the hospital they can't move us. I'm going to eat this plug of tobacco and get sick on it if I can.' I gave him the other one and told him to do the same. He tried it, but couldn't swallow the first bite, try how he might. He smiled in a patient kind of way, and said that he'd have to take his chances. I ate my plug, though—swallowed every bit of it—and may I be blessed if it made me sick a bit. I waited for effects, and when I saw the doctor coming my way I tried to play sick, but he was too smart for me and wouldn't have it. I was disgusted with my attempt, and thought I would just take chances, same as my chum. I had some bread-crusts, and I burned them black and made some coffee from them—we called it coffee and drank a lot of that, wondering all the time why my stomach hadn't rebelled when I ate that plug of tobacco. But as soon as I had swallowed that hot coffee I heard from the tobacco right away. There was a row in my stomach equal to a Mexican revolution, and I began to roll and kick and double up with such energy that the doctor saw me from a distance and came and examined me. He didn't notice that I was the same fellow that he had caught shamming, and he knew at a glance that I wasn't putting it on this time, so he ordered me to the hospital.

"The very next day they sent a trainload of our fellows on to Salisbury, and among them was my chum. About two weeks after that I was exchanged with a lot of others, and got back in the Union lines. But my chum fell sick in Salisbury and died there. That's true—every word of it which is more than you can say for the majority of war stories nowadays. I figure it that I owe my existence at present to that big black plug of tobacco, and it will take a regiment of Concord philosophers to make me believe anything else. Gi' me a chew, kurnel," and the "vet" threw his worn-out quid at the Maltese cat under the stove.—Chicago News.

The stalls of the famous "Marche du Temple" at Paris, where great sales of second-hand clothing are made, are rented at an annual charge of $400, and the receipts for each occupant are said to average between $8,000 and $10,000 a year.

Two men of Burnett, Wis., have trapped 3,000 muskrats and 65 mink at Horicon marsh this winter. They are paid 11 cents apiece for the muskrat skins. Last season their trapping receipts amounted to $800.

Abe and Jeff.

An old colored woman stood at the station yesterday, waiting for the Jacksonville train. Beside her stood two little pickaninnies with faces as black as the inside of a stovepipe. When the old mamma's train arrived she exclaimed: "Bress de Lor'!" and then looking down at her children, remarked: "Here, you Abraham Lincoln, take hold of Jeff Davis's hand and come along heah, quick!" And the namesakes of the two great statesmen of the war joined hands and walked away together as though their names had not expressed such a dissimilarity of purpose.—Palatka (Fla.) Herald.

A citizen of Pocahontas, Ia., has invented a new fuel, which bids fair to take the place of coal in the prairie countries. He grinds cornstalks and coarse prairie grass together and moistens them. This pulp is pressed into blocks about twelve inches long and four inches thick and dried. One block will give an hour's steady heat. This fuel can be produced for $2 a ton, and the inventor claims that it will last twice as long as the best soft coal.

Deaths of English Sovereigns.

William the First got a bruise from his horse,
A random shot arrow made Rufus a corpse;
Henry the Clever on fish too well fed,
Stephen of Blois died quietly in bed;
Henry the Second of grief broke his heart;
Cœur de Lion got killed by a dart;
John, by the fever—and nobody sighed,
Harry of Winchester naturally died;
Edward the First died marching to fight,
Edward the Second was murdered at night;
The warrior Edward passed calmly away,
Richard, deposed, was starved out of the way;
Henry the Fourth died of fits to excess,
Henry the Fifth in the noon of success;
Henry the Sixth died of grief in the Tower;
'Twas lust brought Edward the Fourth his last hour;
Edward the Fifth in the Tower, too, was killed,
By Richard the Third—slain at Bosworth Field;
Henry the Seventh owes death to the gout,
Disorders untold put his namesake to rout;
Edward the Sixth died a natural death,
Mary, in quietness, exhaled her last breath;
Queen Bess closed in anguish an ill-spent reign,
Scotch James the First passed away without pain;
The First King Charles died under the knife,
Charles, his son, passed off without strife;
His second son, James, died exiled from his throne,
William the Third broke his right collar bone;
Queen Ann very suddenly went to her doom,
Apoplectical fits sent King George to the tomb;
King George the Second turned out in a rage,
His long-reigned successor slipped off in old age;
The Fourth King George, and William, his brother,
With an osseous heart left this life for another;
Victoria reigns—so good and so wise,
And she'll be greatly missed whenever she dies.

IN ROSEBUD ROW.

The Way Some Girls Keep Roses in Their Cheeks.

Down on Michigan avenue are six houses known as "Rosebud Row." There are from two to four girls in each house, and are all in society. They constitute a clique of themselves, and are so conspicuously inseparable as to give foundation to the report that they have one big dining-room in the rear of the houses wherein they eat together. "When one has the measles they all have it," is a common expression for the rapidity with which the breaking out of any craze in one member spreads through the crowd. Waiting in her parlor the other morning for the appearance of one of the rosebuds my curiosity was excited by hearing a constant tramp and occasional thuds followed by shrieks of mirth in the room overhead. Bertha came in quite out of breath, and I at once asked "What in the name of common sense are the girls doing upstairs?" "Come up and see," she answered. What I saw was eight girls dressed in white flannel suits composed of blouse waist, short skirts and trousers, marching around the room with great bags of sand on the head. Every few minutes some of them would grow frisky, break from the dignified step and "thud" would go the sandbag. A ninth girl was swinging Indian clubs in a wild and reckless manner, suggestive of the scientific way in which girls throw stones. Still another was on a rowing machine, puffing and working. And still another was vigorously punching at an air-bag, which now she hit and now she didn't. As I entered the room the procession halted, and in one breath they told me they were going in for a graceful carriage. "Just see my gait," said a giddy little blonde, stepping off for inspection. The girl with the Indian clubs came up for me to feel of her muscle. I took it for granted it was there. I couldn't feel it. The fat girl on the rowing machine wanted to know if I didn't think she had lost about 25 pounds, and the thin girl left the air-bag to tell me that she couldn't begin to get into her best black silk and that the seams could not be let out without showing. "There was a time when you could play hide and seek behind my shoulder blades, count 'rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief' on my ribs, and hang a hat on either knee. But, bless me! this exercise has put so much flesh on me, you couldn't do it now."—Chicago Letter.

The Housemaid Carries the Point.

Apropos of the movement on foot at present to encourage American girls to enter domestic service is told an amusing story. A lady whose consideration for her servants is only equalled by her kindness and charity toward the rest of the world, took an American girl into her service. Both mistress and maid got on well until it came to a question of curl papers. The maid gently rebelled when admonished about opening the door to guests in the morning with her hair done up in papers, her argument being this somewhat astonishing one: "Madame, something must be sacrificed to the cause of beauty." It is superfluous to add that the maid triumphed and still wears the curl papers until noon.—Boston Post.

Congregational Singing.

Rev. Bird Wilkins, of St. Paul, one of the leading colored divines of the Northwest, preached at Bethesda Baptist Church last Sunday. He is modeled somewhat after the Sam Jones style, and at the evening service, noticing that only the choir—a quartette—took part in the singing, he said: "My brethren and sisters, this will never do. Singing is a part of the worship, and I desire that all of you engage in it. Do you suppose that only four of the angels in heaven do the singing? This church is a model of the upper church. They all sing up there, and I would like to have you all sing down here. Now sing." They sang.

Applicant—I wasn't in any battles. I stayed at home and yipped and yelled for the grand old flag, and looked after defenceless women and children.—N. Y. Sun

Why They Stand Up.

Countryman (in the gallery of the stock exchange)—How much does it cost, mister, to do business down there?

Mister—The seats, I think, are worth about $30,000.

Cheerful View.

Landlord—"Yes, tenth story, including the basement. I think your wife will like it up here, sir. The family who occupied it last summer told me that they preferred it to the White Mountains."—Hartford Times.

CENTRE GREY!

Interesting Session of the Farmer's Institute in Flesherton.

Centre Grey Farmer's Institute held a very interesting session in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday afternoon last. Considering the practical excellence of the addresses and papers given by the several speakers, we were surprised to see such an evident lack of interest in the small attendance of farmers.

Mr. Thos. Kells, President of East Grey Agricultural Society, occupied the chair, assisted by Mr. D. R. Ellis. Mr. Kells introduced the first speaker, Prof. Robertson, in a very neat speech.

Prof. Robertson, of the Agricultural College, Guelph, then gave one of the most practical and intensely interesting addresses on the cow we have ever listened to. He went on to show that a cow's record during the past year was the best way of judging of her qualities as a milk producer. A cow is a milk machine, and in order that the most satisfactory results might be derived, it was essential that she possess certain qualities. In purchasing a cow, the speaker said he would like to have an animal with a broad poll, and mild, prominent eyes. Her face should be lean, long and quite thin, with broad muzzle, broad open nostrils, but not gaping. She should have a thin, lean and tapering neck, with sloping shoulder blade. The back bone should be either nearly straight or slightly arched between the shoulder and hip bone—not hollow. He didn't want a cow smooth across the hips, for that indicated she was better adapted for adorning the butcher's stall than producing milk; her hip should be prominent and angular, with in-sloping ham. The udder should have broad and long attachment to the body, as these were good features, showing large supply of arterial blood which went so largely towards forming milk. Milk is made, said the speaker, by blood being charged into small cells in the udder and acted upon by nerve power. It is very important not to excite cows by running them or "petting" them on the back with a milking stool! Such a course of treatment was decidedly injurious as it affected the nerve power so requisite to the production of milk and had a tendency to cause the cow to "hold back her milk." He would like the cow to have a deep chest as that indicated great heart and lung power—two important essentials in good milk producing cows. Good feed and warm stables were also requisite. The speaker then went on to speak of improving our methods of keeping the stock we have, and in this connection he urged the great importance of using only thoroughbred bulls. Even though more costly at the beginning, in the end the stockman, who used thoroughbred stock, profited much more largely than if he had used inferior sires. Sometimes farmers actually expended more money in feeding inferior stock than the animals would bring in the market. He instanced the man who puchased three hogs at one dollar each, and, after feeding them $9 worth of corn, sold them to the butcher for three dollars each! He seemed to think he had made a good bargain, for when a neighbor told him he had lost money, he triumphantly remarked: "Well, I might have lost on the corn but see what I made on the hogs!" The speaker then proceeded to talk about raising calves. He said calves should always be fed on sweet milk and never on sour. The reason for this was very simple and easily explained. In every 100 lbs. of sweet milk there was 4½ lbs. sugar, which latter becomes lactic acid when the milk gets sour; and, as everybody of course was aware, such acids did not possess any very fattening properties—causing indigestion, &c. Milk should be fed, therefore, sweet and warm. Calves would thrive just as well on $2 worth of chop stuff as on $15 worth of butter (or milk), so that at the end of about three months milk should be dropped and chop feed substituted. This latter should always be fed dry to prevent scours and other disorders arising from the imperfect assimilation of food by the digestive organs. They should have hay and chop feed in winter, and grass and chop feed in summer. Cows should have the best of hay after calving. Clover was better than timothy hay, and both mixed was better feed for the cow than either fed singly. Everything should be cut a little on the green side as the hay or straw made better fodder. Cows should have ready access to salt daily or they will fall off in milk production, and, besides, the milk will not be so good. Milk will keep 24 hours longer where the cows are fed salt every day. It should be carefully kept from taint by avoidance of all contaminating influences such as swill, &c. The udders should be clean and the milk should be strained through detached strainers. Milk should be well aired before cooling it, by pouring from one pail to another, or otherwise exposing it to the influence of the air. The speaker then fully and clearly explained how milk absorbs offensive ingredients, after which he paid a glowing tribute to the Canadian cheese factories and creameries, showing how largely our products have grown in public estimation in foreign markets. There was 750 cheese factories in Ontario at the present time, and last year $7,000,000 worth of cheese had been exported from this banner province of Canada. The speaker concluded his remarks amidst great applause. His speech conveyed more good practical common sense than a dozen pamphlets or agricultural papers could have done.

Mr. D. J. Hunter moved and Mr. S. Damude seconded, that the hearty thanks of the meeting be tendered the Professor for his able address, which was acknowledged by a unanimous standing vote.

Mr W. G. Pickell's paper, on "Horse Breeding for Profit," was short but comprehensive, and provoked a spirited and interesting discussion, in which Messrs. D. R. Ellis, D. J. Hunter, R. Lever and others took an active part. The chief point in the discussion was the difficulty of ascertaining when we really have thoroughbred animals. Mr. D. J. Hunter instanced a case, where a really good horse's pedigree was critically looked into and found to contain names of places in Scotland which only existed in the pedigree manufacturer's imagination. Others gave instances in other directions. A suggestion by Mr. Hunter, that horses be licensed, met with the hearty approval of the majority of those present—including the essayist, Mr. Pickell. It was believed this system once in vogue would soon do away with "scrubs." "Cleveland Bays" were spoken of very highly by Mr. Hunter.

Mr. McKnight, of Owen Sound—one of the four member's of the Bee-keeper's Association of Ontario who represented important body at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, recently held in London, England—was received with hearty applause when he appeared on the platform. He had been asked, he said, to tell them something about the great exhibition, but the subject was too great to be considered in the short time at his command. However he gave his auditors many interesting facts in that direction—always, however, keeping in view his subject, "Apiculture." The Colonial was the most successful exhibition ever held in London—from a financial standpoint. It lasted 6 months and two days and $41,000 per day were taken in at the gates as entrance money. The London school children were admitted at a nominal charge of 5 cents each, and thus tens of thousands of them were enabled to view the products of British colonists from all quarters of the globe, and could not fail to be impressed with the vastness and greatness of the mighty empire on which "the sun never sets." Mr. McKnight, who is a most pleasing speaker, then quietly drifted into the science of apiculture—showing how the bees gathered the honey from flowers, and how closely allied the study of botany was to that of apiculture; how young bees are fed with a mixture of pollen, honey and water; how necessary pollenization is to fruit and many other interesting facts familiar to botanists and apiculturists. He thought it would be a good idea for all farmers to keep bees. The Canadian honey department at the Colonial was 100 ft. long and 23 ft. wide, and in this was stored 17 tons of honey. In color our honey beats any other in the world. They had a number of saleswomen engaged selling and giving away honey. Some 3,000 or 4000 lbs. were distributed gratis during the exhibition, but they succeeded in establishing a market for Canadian honey, which was the chief point aimed at.

Mr. Kells.—Did the Queen get any Canadian honey?

"Yes," said Mr. McKnight, continuing, "and from the County of Grey, too!" (applause). He then went on to show how the honey found its way to the Queen's table through Sir Charles Tupper, Sir somebody else, and then Sir Frederic Ponsonby. They had also the satisfaction of seeing a full page notice of Canadian honey in the Pall Mall Gazette, one of the most influential and widely circulated journals in England. So that their mission was a grand success in every particular. Mr. McKnight paid a very graceful tribute to Prof. Robertson in the course of his eloquent but modestly worded speech.

Mr. D. J. Hunter's paper on "Farm Leak's" was very practical and readily commended itself to the intelligence of thinking, go-ahead, common-sense farmers. Mr. Hunter comes at the gist of his subject with a directness that is truly refreshing and edifying in these days of steam and electricity. Mr. Hunter is practical from the tips of his toes to the crown of his head.

Mr. T. B. White, another long-headed Collingwood Township farmer, next gave his magnificent essay on "Good and Bad Times." Few farmers in the Province go as deeply into such subjects as Mr. White. In that quiet unassuming manner, that possesses such force, he grapples with the great question of supply and demand, and before losing his vice-like grip, Mr. White does not fail to give a fresh and invigorating turn to our thoughts. Of course this question of "Good and Bad Times" is considered from a farmer's standpoint, but as our agriculturists are the backbone of the country, the logical conclusions drawn from such a point by a man of Mr. White's ability possess a deep interest. Mr. White concludes his essay with the following lines:—

"Mechanics all by him are fed,
Of him the merchants seek their bread,
His hands give meat to every thing,
Up from the beggar to the king."

Mr. McKnight regretted that there were not more farmers present and thought a mistake had been made by advertising two meetings on the same poster.

Mr. Damude agreed in part with Mr. McKnight, but attributed the small attendance not so much to a want of knowledge of the meeting as a lack of desire to obtain the knowledge imparted at meetings of this institute. Many farmers have the opinion that they are perfect in the art of farming, and do not care to hear any system propounded not taught them by their grandfathers. He was not a farmer at present, but had served 30 years of his life in that calling. It was a good long schooling, yet he did not think he became perfect and was always anxious to learn by the experience of others and profit thereby. If he as a manufacturer adopted the principle laid down by many farmers, a few years would suffice to close his business, and close any business where the proprietor claimed perfection and would not profit by the experience of others. Why? Because there are new methods continually being found out by thinking men to manufacture a better class of the same article at a less cost, and he must learn by the experience of others and imitate them or we are distanced in the race and shut out. And this applies equally to farming; and when this Institute educates the farmers to see that the system of farming adopted by their grandparents is not any more applicable in this our present day than the old coach compared with our railways, so soon will there be full meetings and the Professor's lectures be appreciated at their true value. He hoped the Institute would be the means of convincing many farmers that there are still some things to be learned in connection with the science of of Agriculture. (Loud applause.)

A Dialogue.

Good morning, John, how are you making it go this winter;

JOHN.—Well, so tell you the truth, Joe, I am feeling much better, but during the fall my lower lip was pretty long. I had $800 or $400 against me all told. My crops were short and funds low, and how to meet my payments was a conundrum. My wife and I had many a chat over the matter; so one night as we were talking over our affairs, Abigail made a suggestion. Says she, John go up to Flesherton and call on W. J. Bellamy; he lends money. So next morning I goes up and called at his office near the Town Hall, on Toronto street. After talking the matter over with him and telling my troubles, says he, I can get you out of that fix. How, says I. Well, says he, you have a good farm and I will lend you all the money you want at six and a half per cent. straight loan, and you can have your own terms to pay the principal. So I borrowed enough to let me out alright. I paid all my debts and am a happy man to-day, and Abigal says she hardly knows me.

JOE.—Do you think I can get any from him;

JOHN.—Yes, yes, all you want.

JOE.—Well, I shall see him on election day. I desire to consolidate my liabilities and owe only one, so I shall let you know how I get along.

BELLAMY.—Others may do likewise, as the North of Scotland has lots of money.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mrs. G. S. Bowes and Mrs. W. A. Brown, of Markdale, were visiting in Flesherton this week. They were the guests of Mrs. J. W. Armstrong during their stay.

Miss Lever is selling off her winter stock of Millinery and Dress Trimmings very cheap in order to clear out for spring goods. Remember place, Strain's block, Flesherton.

Auction sale of farm stock, implements, household, &c., at Lot 24, Con. 9. Artemesia, on Wednesday next, March 30th, commencing at one o'clock p. m. J. W. Heath, proprietor; A. S. Vandusen, auctioneer. See bills.

"The Local Action of Alcohol, its Effects and Cure," will be the subject of an address to be delivered in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Tuesday evening next, 29th inst., by Rev. W.F. Ferrier, Maxwell. The public cordially invited.

Auction sale of farm stock, implements, &c., at Lot 144, 1st E. T. & S.R., Artemesia (near Flesherton) commencing at one o'clock, on Tuesday, April 5th. For full particulars see bills just issued Thos. Graham, proprietor; A. S. Vandusen, auctioneer.

Mr. Wm. Clayton, the noted Flesherton Boot and Shoe man, has a magnificent Spring stock of Boots and Shoes now opened out to awake customers. Mr. Clayton has been in business here over a quarter of a century and is one of the most straightforward business men we ever knew. The goods handled by him will be found just as represented, and will be sold at bottom prices.

Two lads met on the "field of honor" one evening recently in order to settle a trifling dispute. The place selected for the combat was just in rear of the Methodist church here. The challenger was confident he could make his opponent "see stars" in no time; but, unfortunately for him, the "stars" were nearly all observed by himself. You can't most generally always tell how things will turn out on "fields of honor (?)."

Builders Hardware of every description, lowest prices at M. Richardson & Co's.

10 ewes belonging to Mr. James Stewart, Artemesia, had 22 lambs this year of which 20 are living and doing well. Mr. Stewart has 20 more ewes and if they do as well as the first he will have 60 lambs. A remarkable fact in connection with the lambs is that 10 of them are suckled by a cow which Mr. Stewart drives into the pen twice a day, as he finds this a much better and more profitable method than "spoon-feeding."

Saturday last a number of little boys and girls entered the ADVANCE office, threw down a letter—addressed to a gentleman in the West Indies—and a three-cent postage stamp, and vanished out of the door before the astonished Agricultural Editor had time to inform them that he didn't run the post office. However the letter was promptly posted by the A. E. himself. Only a day or two previous a little boy called at our office and asked for a gallon of coal oil!

COW FOR SALE.

One good cow in calf cheap for cash. R. Trimble.

If you require a spring medicine, if you are suffering with languor, debility, pimples, boils, catarrh, chronic sores, scrofula, or loss of appetite, or any disease arising from impure blood, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the safest and most economical of all blood purifiers.

The open Council of the Royal Templars, Tuesday evening next, will be addressed by the Rev. James Ferrier, Maxwell, on a popular subject; also addresses, reading, recitations, vocal and instrumental music by local talent. A good time is expected. Come!

A social will be held in the basement of the Methodist church, Flesherton, on Friday evening, April 1st, under the auspices of the Ladies. Besides refreshments, a good program of vocal and instrumental music, &c., will be provided. Proceeds to be applied towards fitting up church choir gallery. Admission 15 cents, children 10 cents. Doors open at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. Symons, who has been spending the winter in Flesherton, together with two of her children, will shortly leave for Victoria, British Columbia, and other points on the Pacific coast. During her stay here she won the universal esteem and respect of our people by her kind and winning manners and gentle demeanor. Her home is in Oregon, U. S. She desires us to tell the people of this locality that she will never forget their kindness and Christian courtesy toward her. May she have a pleasant journey across the continent to the "rock bound shores" of old Pacific. Bon voyage!

Priceville.

Mr. Joseph Ward will give one of his popular Magic Lantern entertainments in Priceville, on Monday evening next, March 28th. The views will be interspersed with a number of carefully selected humorous and pathetic readings by A. R. Fawcett, Editor of THE ADVANCE, who has promised to assist. Doors open at 7 o'clock, entertainment commences at 8 sharp. Admission:—Adults, 10 cents; and children 5 cents each.

East Grey Spring Show.

The bills are out announcing East Grey Agricultural Society's Spring Show, which will take place on the society's grounds here, on Friday, April 22nd. It is purely a stallion show, and in this respect we think the Society has exercised wisdom. All other sire stock will be found properly classified in the Prize Lists for the Fall Exhibition. In this connection we might add, that it is the intention of the directorate to spare no pains to make the forthcoming fall show eclipse all former exhibitions. For particulars in regard to the Spring Show, see bills.

Proton Station.

On Thursday evening last, an interesting social was held at the residence of Mr. W. Lochhead, Nearly 100 persons assembled, and, after enjoying an excellent tea, listened appreciatively to the various parts of the program. One tangible result of the gathering, was, that a very handsome cash present was made to Rev. T. Watson, who preaches there every alternate Thursday evening. Socials based on friendly intercourse, under Christian influence, do much to inspire lofty aims and pure ideals: and one day it will be found that those who by hand, brain and tongue have so willingly helped in promoting them, have not labored in vain.

Fountain Council No. 146, R. T. of T.

An open council of the above will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on the evening of Tuesday the 29th inst. Doors open at 7:30 o'clock. Good entertainment. Admission free.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mathematics.

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S PROBLEMS.

The following answers have been given from W. Irwin H. M. P. S., Flesherton. Solutions will be given in full if necessary.

(1) Amt. of sinking fund each year, $130.25+

(2) Depth of pond, 5 feet 7½ inches.

Fourth Class.

1.—(a) 18 10-11 seconds
(b) 69 6-11 seconds.

2.—Loss in transaction $16⅔.

3.—10 10-11 minutes past 2.

3.—3 15-19 days.

Fish question, ans. 32 feet.

Circumference of bucket, 35.476+ in.

Fence required for an acre, 160 rods long, 1 rod wide, 322 rods. For 10 acres, 40 rods square 160 rods. Several similar answers may be obtained.

The following Fourth Class Pupils have sent in correct answers to the number of questions indicated by the figures placed after their names.

Fred Ayers, 3. Robt. Keefer, 3. Wm. Sinclair 3. David Mathewson 3. Martha Beatty 2.

Hugh Muir, from Flesherton Station, sent in a correct answer to the Fish problem. Willie Sinclair solved the fence question correctly.

[NOTE.—Judging from the few answers sent in we presume the last week's questions were too difficult for our fourth classes. While we do not deem it advisable to publish more than 6 names from any one school we will give the full number of answers received from each. Give the questions a trial, send in your answers and keep up an interest in the column which we have opened for mathematical work.—MATH. EDITOR.]

MATHEMATICS FOR FOURTH AND FIFTH CLASSES:—

1.—The Flesherton ADVANCE is 27 by 41 inches and the regular weekly issue is 600 copies. How many acres, roods, &c., could be covered by a whole year's issue?

2.—A rectangular piece of ground contains one acre 3 roods 10 per. If the width be 4 chains, 75 links, how long is it?

3.—Water in freezing expands one-ninth of its bulk and a cubic foot of water weighs 1000 ozs. What weight of ice can be put in a building 80 feet long 24 feet wide and 12 feet high? (Ans in lbs.)

4.—A ship and cargo are worth $68,000. Two-thirds the value of the ship equals three-fourths the value of the cargo. Find the value of each.

(In sending answers give solutions also.)

The Toronto "Globe."

The Toronto Daily Globe can now be obtained by subscribers at the low subscription price of $5 per annum. Until recently the price was $7. This is a big reduction, and as the Globe is certainly one of the most progressive and enterprising journals on this continent, its sphere of usefulness is bound to be widened by the wise departure alluded to. But, besides this great stroke of enterprise, a special Globe train leaves Toronto at 8:55 a. m. and arrives in London at 6:40 a.m.—simply for the conveyance of the paper to subscribers at that place and en route. Thus the Globe is placed on the breakfast tables of thousands of readers between the Queen and Forest cities. Such enterprise is deserving of the highest commendation at the hands of all sections of the Canadian press.

Colonial Exhibition.

Mr. James Stewart received last week a magnificent award for the excellence of his honey display at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition held in London, Eng., last year. We presume the award is intended as a Diploma, and it is to be followed by a Commemorative Medal. Mr. Stewart is justly proud of his treasure, and we are certain the citizens of Meaford and vicinity will congratulate him on his success.—Meaford Mirror.

Solitaire.

Patience? Yes, that's the woman's game,
The dull delight of solitude,
Where rank on rank she tries to frame,
And speech and laughter ne'er intrude.

Night after night, beside the fire,
When evening's lonely lamp is lit,
Oppressed with thoughts that vex and tire,
Among the cards her fingers flit.

The woman's game! On some poor king
The sequence of her play is built;
The queen comes after, hapless thing!
And next the knave with grinning guilt

Then all her treasures, one by one,
Are thrown away to swell the pile;
At last and least; when that is done,
Begin again, the night beguile.

A woman's game; to sit and wait;
Build and rebuild, though fate destroy,
Shuffle the cards, for soon or late
There comes an end to grief and joy.

A man may fight, or sow or reap,
Divide the seas, or traverse the earth;
She can but drudge, or pray or weep,
What is her life or loving worth?

She sits there when the day is dead,
Lonely and listless. Do you dare
Deny, when all is done and said,
That woman's game is solitaire?

THE CHOICE OF THREE:

A NOVEL.

"Oh, no, don't pity me. Everybody has his troubles – this is mine."

"O Ernest, but you have been unfortunate, and now your sight has gone; but perhaps Critchett or Couper will be able to do something for that."

"All the Critchets and Coupers in the world will never do anything for it, my dear. But you must remember that, where I only lost my sight, many others lost their lives, and it is supposed to be better to lose your sight than your life. Besides, blindness has its advantages; it gives you so much more time to think, and it humbles you so. You can have no idea what it is like, Doll. Intense, everlasting blackness hedging you in like a wall, one long, long night, even when the sunlight is beating on your face; and out of the night, voices and the touchings of hands, like the voices and touchings of the departed spirits. Your physical body is as helpless and as much at the mercy of the world as your spiritual body is in the hands of the Almighty. And things grow dim to you too; you begin to wonder what familiar faces and sights are like, as you wonder about the exact appearance of those who died many years ago, or of places you have not seen for years. All of which, my dear Doll, is very favorable to thought. When next you lie awake for five or six hours in the night, try to reckon all the things which occupy your brain, then imagine such wakefulness and its accompanying thoughts extended over the period of your natural life, and you will get some idea of the depth and breadth and height of total blindness."

His words struck her, and she did not know what to answer, so she only pressed his hands in token of her mute sympathy.

He understood her meaning; the faculties of the blind are very quick.

"Do you know, Doll," he said, "coming back to you and to your gentle kindness, is like coming into the peace and quiet of a sheltered harbor after bearing the full brunt of the storm?" Just then a cloud which had obscured the sun passed away, and its full light struck upon his face. "There," he went on, "it is like that. It is like emerging into the sweet sunshine after riding for miles through the rain and mist. You bring peace with you, my dear. I have not felt such peace for years as I feel holding your hand to-day."

"I am very glad, dear Ernest," she answered; and they walked on in silence. At that moment, a little girl, who was trundling a hoop down the gravel-path, stopped her hoop to look at the pair. She was very pretty, with large dark eyes, but Dorothy noticed that she had a curious mark upon her forehead. Presently Dorothy saw her run back toward an extremely tall and graceful woman, who was sauntering along, followed at some distance by a nurse with a baby in her arms, and turning occasionally to look at the beds of spring flowers, hyacinths and tulips which bordered the path.

"O mother," she heard her call out in the clear voice of childhood, "there is such a nice blind man! He isn't old and ugly, and he hasn't a dog, and he doesn't ask for pennies. Why is he blind if he hasn't a dog and doesn't ask for pennies?"

Blindness, according to this little lady's ideas, evidently sprang from the presence of a cur and an unsatisfied hunger for copper coin. Sometimes it does.

The tall, graceful lady looked up carelessly, saying, "Hush, dear!" She was quite close to them now, for they were walking toward each other, and Dorothy gave a great gasp, for before her stood Eva Plowden! There was no doubt about it. She was paler and haughtier-looking than of yore; but it was she. No one who had once seen her could mistake that queenly beauty. Certainly Dorothy could not mistake it.

"What is the matter, Doll?" said Ernest, carelessly. He was thinking of other things.

"Nothing; I hurt myself." They were quite close now.

And Eva, too, looked at them, and she, too, saw the face she had never thought to see again. With all her eyes, and with her lips parted as though to cry out, she gazed at the sight before her—slowly, slowly, taking in all it meant.

They were nearly level now.

Then there leaped up into her eyes and face—the eyes and face which a second before had been so calm and statue-like, a wild light of love, and intensity of passionate and jealous desire, such as is not often to be seen on the faces of women.

"Ernest there, and Ernest blind, and being led by the hand of Dorothy, and looking happy with her!" How dared she touch her love? How dared he look hapy with her? Those were the thoughts which flashed through her troubled mind.

She made a step toward them as though to address him, and the blind eyes fell upon her lovely face and wandered over it. It made her mad. His eyes were on her face, and yet he could not see her. O God!

Dorothy saw the motion and moved by an overmastering instinct threw herself between them in an attitude of protection not unmixed with defiance. And so, for a second, their eyes flashing and their bosoms heaving with emotion, the two women stood face to face, and the blind pathetic eyes wandered uneasily over both, feeling a presence they were unable to define.

It was a tragic, almost a dreadful scene. The passions it revealed were too intense for words, as no brush can justly paint a landscape made vivid by the unnatural fierceness of the lightning.

"Well, Doll, why do you stop?" he said, impatiently.

His voice broke the spell. Eva withdrew her arm, which was half-outstretched, and touched her lips with her finger as though to enjoin silence. Then a deep misery spread itself over her flushed face; her head sank low, and she passed thence with rapid steps. Presently the nurse with the baby followed her, and Dorothy noticed vaguely that the child had also a mark upon his forehead. The whole thing had not taken forty seconds.

"Doll," said, with a wild voice, and commencing to tremble, "who was that passed us?"

"A lady," was the answer.

"A lady; yes, I know that—what lady?"

"I don't know—a lady with children." It was a fib, but she could not tell him then; an instinct warned her not to do so.

"Oh! It is strange, Doll, strange; but do you know, I felt just now as though Eva were very near me? Come, let us go home!"

Just then the cloud got over the sun again, and they walked home in the shadow. Apparently, too, all their talkativeness had gone the way of the sun. They had nothing to say.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

INTROSPECTIVE.

Eva Plowden could scarcely be said to be a happy woman. A refined woman who has deliberately married one man when she loves another is not as a rule happy afterward, unless indeed she is blessed or cursed with a singularly callous nature. But there are degrees and degrees of unhappiness. Such a fate as Eva's would have killed Dorothy, and would have driven Florence, bad as she might otherwise be, to suicide or madness. But with Eva herself it was not so; she was not sufficiently fine strung to suffer thus. Hers was not a very happy life, and that was all about it. She had been most miserable; but when the first burst of her misery had passed, like the raving storm that sometimes ushers in a wet December day, she had more or less reconciled herself like a sensible woman to her position. The day was always rather wet, it is true, but still the sun peeped out now and again, and if life was not exactly a joyous thing, it was at least endurable.

And yet with it all she loved Ernest in her heart as much as ever; his memory was inexpressibly dear to her, and her regrets were sometimes very bitter. On the whole, however, she had got over it wonderfully, better than anybody, who could have witnessed her agony some years before, when Florence told her the whole truth immediately after the wedding would have thought possible. The Sabine women, we are told, offered every reasonable resistance to their outrage by the Romans, but before long gave the strongest proof of reconciliation to their lot. There was something of the Sabine woman about Eva. Indeed, the contrast between her state of mind as regarded Ernest, and Ernest's state of mind as regarded her, would make a curious study. They each loved the other, and yet how different had the results of that love been on the two natures! To Eva it had been and was a sorrow, sometimes a very real one; to Ernest, the destruction of all that made life worth living. The contrast, indeed, was almost pitiable, it was so striking; so wide a gulf was fixed between the two. The passion of the one was a wretched thing compared to the other. But both were real; it was merely a difference of degree. If Eva's affection was weak when measured by Ernest's, it was because the soil in which it grew was poorer. She gave all she had to give.

As for Mr. Plowden, he could not but feel that on the whole his matrimonial speculation had answered very well. He was honestly fond of his wife, and as he had a right to be, very proud of her At times she was cold and capricious and at times she was sarcastic; but, take it altogether, she made him a good and serviceable wife, and lifted him up many pegs in the social scale. People saw that though Plowden was not a gentleman, he had managed to marry a lady, and a very lovely lady too; and he was tolerated, indeed to a certain extent courted, for the sake of his wife. It was principally to attain this end that he had married her, so he had every reason to be satisfied with his bargain, and he was, besides, proud to be the legal owner of so handsome a creature.

Eva often thought of her old lover, though, except in the vaguest way, she had heard nothing of him for years. Indeed, she was, as it happened, thinking of him tenderly enough that very morning when her little girl had called her attention to the "nice blind man." And when she at last, in a way which seemed to her, little short of miraculous, set eyes again upon his face, all her smoldering passion broke into flame, and she felt that she still loved him with all her strength, such as it was.

At that moment indeed she realized how great, how bitter, how complete was the mistake she had made, and what a beautiful thing life might have been for her, if things had gone differently. But, remembering how things were, she bowed her head and passed on, for the time completely crushed.

Presently, however, two points became clear in the confusion of her mind, taking shape and form as distinct and indesputable mental facts, and these were—first, that she was wildly jealous of Dorothy; second, that it was her fixed determination to see Ernest. She regretted now that she had been too overcome to go up and speak to him, for see him she must and would; indeed, her sick longing to look upon his face and hear his voice filled her with alarm.

Eva reached her home, after the meeting on the Hoe, just before luncheon-time. Her husband was now acting as locum tenens for the rector of one of the Plymouth parishes. They had moved thus from place to place for years waiting for the Kesterwick living to fall vacant, and Eva liked the roving life well enough—it diverted her thoughts.

Presently she heard her husband enter, bringing somebody else with him, and summoned up the sweet smile for which she was remarkable to greet him.

In another instant he was in the room, followed by a fresh-faced subaltern, whose appearance reminded her of the pictures of cherubs. Mr. Plowden had changed but little since we saw him last, with the exception that his hair was now streaked with gray, and the whole face rather stouter. Otherwise the cold gray eyes were as cold as ever, and the countenance of Plowden was what the countenance of Plowden had always been—powerful, intelligent and coarse-looking.

"Let me introduce my friend Lieutenant Jasper to you, my dear," he said in his full, strong voice, which was yet unpleasant to the ear. "We met at Captain Johnstone's, and, as it is a long way to go to the barracks for lunch, I asked him to come and take pot-luck with us."

The cherubic Jasper had screwed an eyeglass into his round eye, and through it was contemplating Eva with astonished ecstasy; but like most beautiful women, she was used to that sort of thing, and it only amused her faintly. Mr. Plowden, too, was used to it, and took it as a personal compliment.

"I am delighted," she murmured, and held out her hand.

The cherub, suddenly awaking to the fact, dropped his eyeglass, and, plunging at it, seized it as a pike does a little fish, and shook it with enthusiasm.

Eva smiled again.

"Shall we go to lunch?" she said, sweetly; and they went to lunch, she sailing down in front of them with the grace of a swan.

At lunch itself the conversation flagged rather; that is, Mr. Plowden talked with all the facility of an extemporary preacher; the cherub gazed at this pale, dark-eyed angel; and Eva, fully occupied with her own thoughts, contributed a few appreciative smiles, and a few random remarks. Just as they were, to her intense relief, nearing the conclusion of the meal, a messenger arrived to summon Mr. Plowden to christen a dying baby. He got up at once, for he was punctilious in the performance of his duties, and, making excuses to his guest, departed on his errand, thus forcing Eva to carry on the conversation.

"Have you been in Plymouth long, Mr. Jasper?" she asked.

The eye-glass dropped spasmodically.

"Plymouth? oh, dear, no, I only landed this morning."

"Landed? Indeed! Where from? I did not know that any boat was in except the Conway Castle."

"We[illegible] by her, from the Zulu War, [illegible] for fever."

The cherub suddenly became intensely interesting to Eva, for it had struck her that Ernest must have come from there.

"Indeed! I hope you had a pleasant passage. It depends so much on your fellow-passengers, does it not?"

"Oh, yes, we had a very nice lot of men on board, wounded officers mostly. There were a couple of very decent civilians, too, a giant of a fellow called Jones, and a blind baronet, Sir Ernest Kershaw."

Eva's bosom heaved.

"I once knew a Mr. Ernest Kershaw; I wonder if it is the same? He was tall, and had dark eyes."

"That's the man; he only got his title a month or two ago. A melancholy sort of a chap, I thought; but then he can't see now. That Jones is a wonderful fellow, though could pull two heavy men up at once, as easily as you would lift a puppy-dog. Saw him do it myself. I knew them both out there."

"Oh! Where did you meet them?"

"Well, it was rather curious. I suppose you heard of the great disaster at that place with an awful name. Well, I was at a beastly hole called Help Makaar, when a fellow came riding like anything from Rorke's Drift, telling us what had happened, and that the Zulus were coming. So we all set to and worked like mad, and just as we had got the place a little fit for them, somebody shouted that he saw them coming. That was just as it was getting dark. I ran to the wall to look, and saw, not the Zulus, but a great big fellow carrying a dead fellow in his arms, followed by a Kafir leading three horses. At least I thought the fellow was dead, but he wasn't he had been struck by lightning. We let him in, and such a sight as there were you never saw, all soaked with blood from top to toe!"

"Ah! And how did they come like that?"

"They were the only survivors of a volunteer corps called Alston's Horse. They killed all the Zulus that were attacking them, when the Zulus had killed everybody except them. Then they came away, and the blind fellow, that is, Sir Ernest, got struck in a storm—fellows often do out there."

Eva put further questions, and listened with breathless interest to the story of Ernest's and Jeremy's wonderful escape, so far as the details were known to Mr. Jasper, quite regardless of the pitiless fire that young gentleman was keeping on herself through his eyeglass. At last, reluctantly enough, he rose to go.

"I must be off now, Mrs. Plowden; I want to go and call on Sir Ernest at the hotel. He lent me a Derringer pistol to practice at a bottle with, and I forgot to give it back."

Eva turned the full battery of her beautiful eyes upon him. She saw that the young gentleman was struck, and determined to make use of him. Women are unscrupulous when they have an end in view.

"I am so sorry you must go, but I hope you will come and see me again, and tell me some more about the war and the battles."

"You are very kind," he stammered; "I shall be delighted."

He did[illegible] think it necessary to add that he had [illegible] the luck to see a shot fired himself. [illegible] should he?

"By-the[illegible] if you are going to see Sir Ernest, do[illegible] think you could give him a private me[illegible] from me? I have a reason for not wis[illegible] to be overheard."

"Oh, yes[illegible] are say I can. Nothing would give [illegible] ature pleasure."

"You are [illegible] good." Another glance. "Will you tell[illegible] that I wish he would take a fly and[illegible] to see me? I shall be in all this after[illegible]"

A pang of [illegible]sy shot through the cherubic bosom, [illegible]he comforted himself with the reflecti[illegible]at a fine woman like that could not ca[illegible]or a "blind fellow."

"Oh, certainly[illegible]ill try."

"Thank you," [illegible] she extended her hand.

He took it, an[illegible]toxicated by those superb eyes, venture[illegible] press it tenderly. A mild wonder too[illegible]ossession of Eva's mind, that anybody [illegible]very young child have developed such a[illegible]tonishing amount of impudence, but she did not resent the pressure. What did she care about hang her hand squeezed when was a question of seeing Ernest? Poor deluded cherub!

CHAPTER L.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

Within an hour after the departure of Lieut. Jasper, Eva heard a fly draw up to the door. Then came an interval and the sound of two people walking up the step, one of whom stumbled a good deal; then a ring.

"Is Mrs. Plowden at home?" said a clear voice, the well-remembered tones of which sent the blood to her head and then back to her heart with a rush

"Yes, sir."

"Oh! Wait here, Tyman. Now, my good girl, I must ask you to give me your hand, for I am not in a condition to find my way about strange places."

Another pause, and the drawing-room door opened, and the maid came in leading Ernest, who wore a curious, drawn look upon his face.

"How do you do?" she said, in a low voice, coming and taking him by the hand.

"That will do, Jane."

He did not speak till the door closed; he only looked at her with those searching blind eyes.

Thus they met again after many years. She led him to a sofa and he sat down.

"Do not leave go of my hand," he said, quickly; "I have not yet got used to talking to people in the dark."

She sat down on the sofa beside him feeling frightened and yet happy. For a while they remained silent; apparently they could find nothing to say, and after all silence seemed most fitting. She had never thought to sit hand in hand with him again. She looked at him; there was no need for her to keep a guard over her loving glances, for he was blind. At length she broke the silence.

"Were you surprised to get my message?" she asked, gently.

"Yes; it was like getting a message from the dead. I never expected to see you again; I thought that you had quite passed out of my life."

"So you had forgotten me?"

"Why do you say such a thing to me? You must know, Eva, that it is impossible for me to forget you; I almost wish that[illegible] passed out of my outward life, for out of my mind you can never pass."

Eva hung her head and was silent, and yet his words sent a thrill of happiness through her. So she had not quite lost him after it all.

"Listen, Eva," Ernest went on, gathering himself together, and speaking sternly enough now, and with a suppressed energy that frightened her. "How you came to do what you have done you best know."

"It is done; do not let us speak of it. I was not altogether to blame," she broke in.

"I was not going to speak of it. But I was going to say this, now while I have the chance, because time is short, and I think it right that you should know the truth. I was going to tell you first that for what you have done I freely forgive you."

"O Ernest!"

"It is," he went on, not heeding her, "a question that you can settle with your conscience and your God. But I wish to tell you what it is that you have done. You have wrecked my life, and made it an unhappy thing; you have taken that from me which I can never have to give again; you have embittered my mind, and driven me to sins of which I should not otherwise have dreamed. I loved you, and you gave me proofs which I could not doubt that I had won your love. You let me love you, and then when the hour of trial came you deserted and morally destroyed me, and the great and holy affection that should have been the blessing of my life has become its curse."

Eva covered her face with her hands and sat silent.

"You do not answer me, Eva," he said, presently with a little laugh. "Perhaps you find what I have to say difficult to answer, or perhaps you think I am taking a liberty."

"You are very hard," she said in a low voice.
